For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Centennial Dawn.

A backward look is often necessary in order to real advancement. To change the figure but not the trend of our idea, for us Disciples to frequently review the early days of this Restoration is to the coming universal dominancy of the apostolic church what the reaper's pausing to whet his scythe is to a rich valley's being filled with shocks of golden grain—a hastening of its consummation. Read our leader from Brother Allhands in this issue. Our Pittsburg centennial will be great just to the extent of our development of the principles that were the life of the early churches of Christ, and these have nowhere received better interpretation or been given greater impetus than in the sermons and writings of the fathers of this mighty movement with which we are identified. Communion with the great spirits of our earlier days will always be helpful, but as the paper urges, let us also go forward and complete the work they have committed unto us.

Our Special Campaign.*

BY E. S. ALLHANDS.

The dawn of the nineteenth century found the Christian world divided into warring factions, and these still dividing into parties and sects. Everywhere human speculations concerning divine things were made a condition of church fellowship.

Weary of the turmoil and the strife, a few hearts here and there were longing for the union of God's people. Ofttimes their longings were but gropings in the dark, but a few choice souls were seeing, even if but dimly, the way, and were throwing aside human names and creeds, and wearing the name of Christ, were seeking to be guided in all things by the Bible alone. That movement, which united the scattered people, molded them into one body and gave direction to their efforts, arose in Washington county, Pennsylvania, and was known as the Washington Association, of which Thomas Campbell was the moving spirit.

In 1809 Thomas Campbell drew up a statement of principles for the Washington Association known as the "Declaration and Address," in which occurs this language: "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where they are silent, we are silent." This sentence became the guiding principle of a great brotherhood, seeking the old paths that they might walk therein.

It threw to the winds all human authority in religious matters and made the Bible the rule of faith and practice. It was a score of years or more before this principle led our fathers out into the light and liberty in which we rejoice to-day, but it matters not how far one may be in the wilderness, if he has a compass and follows its guidance, he will come out somewhere, and this compass pointed back to Jerusalem.

After a few years the mantle of leadership slipped from the gentle shoulders of Thomas Campbell to the stalwart shoulders of his greater son, Alexander, the mightiest figure in the religious world since the apostolic period. Alexander Campbell saw clearly that the need of the world was not another reformation, but a restoration of the church, as founded by the apostles of our Lord under the inspiration of the Spirit; and he threw all his great powers into the work of such a restoration.

Almost a hundred years have passed into history since Thomas Campbell penned the "Declaration and Address," and the few feeble bands struggling toward the light have grown into a great brotherhood a million and a quarter strong, whose proclamation of the Gospel goes ringing round the world. This great brotherhood pleads for the union of the people of God on the Bible alone. We stand on common Christian ground, honoring Christ and ourselves by wearing his name, having no creed but Christ, no law but his word.

For home missions last year we gave $100,323 and added 29,093 persons to our churches; to our foreign missionaries we sent $255,922, besides $175,408 used by our C. W. B. M. at home and abroad; our National Benevolent Association secured $80,000 for the exemplification of the "Gospel of the Helping Hand" in its numerous homes and hospitals. We have established 41 colleges and 40 papers of general circulation.

"The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad" (Psalms 126:3).

"Here we raise our Ebenezer."

"Hitherto hath the Lord helped us" (1 Sam. 7:12).

What do we propose for the future? Our general convention in 1902 proposed that we celebrate our centennial in 1909 at Pittsburg. As a fitting preparation for that celebration, the brethren propose to increase our membership to 2,000,000; to increase our annual offering for missions to $1,000,000; to raise a permanent extension fund of $1,000,000; to free our churches of debt, and adequately endow our colleges.

In the Indian Territory Brother Hawkins suggests that we aim to reach a membership of 10,000, or if possible 12,000. I think this too low. In almost every village there are twenty-five or more members, and the greater part of these are as sheep without a shepherd. Our churches now organized should double their membership and the shepherdless sheep of the flock of Israel be cared for. If this be done, we will have not less than 15,000 members in the Indian Territory by October, 1909. Our centennial should find us with a good college in which to train our boys and girls, and a Christian paper to serve as a means of communication among the churches. As a means of carrying out these great aims, it is proposed to put a Christian paper into every Christian home, but the papers should be Christian in spirit as well as name. In my opinion, one of the chief hindering causes to our progress in the past has been the circulation of papers negative instead of positive in tone, whose pages were filled, not with cheering news from the field, plans for greater service, exhortations to the work, but with criticisms of brethren and the methods and means they were using to spread the Gospel. A Christian paper should be manly, true to Christ, and the great plea for the union of God's people, but "speak the truth in love" and breathe the spirit of the Master.

But what is being accomplished in this our special campaign looking toward our centennial?

I would answer an enthusiasm is being created, as wide as the brotherhood, more of our papers are being read than ever before; more than half the $1,000,000 extension fund is already raised; all our offerings for missionary and benevolent purposes are rapidly increasing; church debts are being paid; our colleges are being endowed; and the greatest revivals since the apostolic days are being held.

In this great campaign, one caution we need: beware of placing supreme emphasis on numbers and material gain. In vain all outward growth if there be no spiritual growth within.

But if we with consecrated hearts lay our lives on the altar of God's service, then shall we be used as never before to bring the people of God to that unity for which our Savior prayed, and for which we have labored for a hundred years. If day by day our hearts are filled more and more with the love of God and our lives grow more and more Christlike, then shall the name of Christ be honored, his cause be glorified, and his people blest.

Our Centennial Propagandists.

The cause moves along here beautifully and we expect to place many copies of The Christian-Evangelist in Amarillo. It seems like every copy of the paper gets better. How do you do it? We are preparing to federate here some the latter part of this month and we do not think we will surrender the cause, either. Yours for the 100,000.—Jewell Howard (Minister), Amarillo, Texas.

I have long wished to give others an opportunity to enjoy the great spiritual feast of which I partake every time I read The Christian-Evangelist. When I found the pink subscription blank in my last number, I determined to use it at once for the benefit of another. Find money enclosed. Oh, that the spirit of antagonism and bitterness may be far removed from each professed Christian, leaving the soul filled with Christlike charity! Then and not until then will we take the world for God and win the day.—Mrs. J. W. Boles, Auxvasse, Mo.

Current Events

Vesuvius. The recent series of eruptions from Vesuvius are said by competent observers to be the most severe and destructive of modern times. The disturbance has apparently shown signs of abating, but the ultimate loss of life and property can not yet be estimated. In no other part of the world is an active volcano surrounded by such a dense population. Indeed, there are few portions of the globe more densely peopled than the rich and beautiful region in the midst of which stands Vesuvius. Only about eight miles from it is the great city of Naples, which, by reason of the slope of the land, can never be overflowed with lava streams, but which may some day be buried in storms of hot ashes and mud from the volcano, as were Pompeii and Herculaneum. The road which runs south from Naples along the coast and at the foot of Vesuvius is lined with villages, towns and small cities so close together that they almost touch, and in some cases actually do so. There are the cities of Resina and Portici, with a joint population of 25,000, occupying the site of ancient Herculaneum, lying at the very foot of the volcano and actually reaching up on its lower slopes. There are the flourishing cities of Torre del Greco, Terre del Annunziata, Bosco Trecase and several others. It is scarcely more than 20 miles from Naples at one end of this row of cities to the ruins of Pompeii at the other, and all of them are completely commanded by the volcano. In the present eruption the city of Bosco Trecase has been completely destroyed. The inhabitants had warning enough to enable them to escape. The lava stream has approached near enough to threaten Torre del Annunziata. The observatory, which occupies a protected position on the volcano and has survived many eruptions, has been destroyed. The public market building at Naples has collapsed, with loss of life and many injuries, under the weight of the ashes thrown upon it.

Rate Legislation. The increasing probability of a favorable vote on the Hepburn-Tillman railroad rate regulation bill shows the wisdom of the President's policy of concentrating all the administration's influence upon one measure at a time. In the present session nothing except this one bill has been considered in the fullest sense an administration measure. Other bills were in line with suggestions in the President's message, but this alone was given the full weight of executive support. The fight on this measure has narrowed down to the question of judicial review of the orders of the commission. It might have been assumed that the constitutional right to an appeal to the courts could not be abridged or denied, even if the bill made no specific provision for it, but the demand for a definite statement on the subject became so strong that the President called a conference of certain friends of the measure two weeks ago and an amendment was agreed upon. The amendment provides that the finding of the commission in the pursuance of its rate-making function shall continue in force for a period not longer than two years, unless set aside or suspended by a United States circuit court, as the result of a suit brought against the commission. Senator Bailey has a further amendment to prevent the courts from suspending the order of the commission, by injunction or otherwise, pending the final decision of the case by the courts. The essential feature of his amendment is that the order of the commission should be in effect until a final decision shall have been rendered reversing or altering it. He delivered a long and carefully prepared speech last Tuesday in support of this amendment limiting the power of the courts, and his view has many followers.

The Negro Race. Dr. Seal Harris, of the medical department of the University of Alabama, asserts that the death rate in the negro race in this country is larger than the birth rate, and that there is danger that the race will become extinct if some extraordinary steps are not taken to stop the ravages of disease. The greatest danger, he asserts, is from consumption, a disease especially encouraged by malnutrition and living in crowded and ill ventilated quarters. Both of these are very common conditions among the poorer class in cities everywhere, and in a marked degree among the negroes of the south. Dr. Harris gives this statement not simply as his personal opinion, but says that it is the common judgment of physicians throughout the south. This would be a most unfortunate solution of the negro problem. If there were no negroes there would, to be sure, be no negro problem, either socially, politically or religiously. But the removal of the race would mean the elimination of a very valuable working force from American life, to say nothing of the fact that the extinction of a race is always a lamentable and pathetic occurrence. Under the teaching of Booker Washington and others, who take his view of the negro, both races have been learning that the negro is not merely a problem and a menace, but also a value and an asset to the nation.

The 25th anniversary of the founding of Tuskegee Institute was celebrated by a notable jubilee which was attended by a large number of distinguished persons from all parts of the country. A special train took 100 men from New York to Tuskegee. Booker Washington's work needs no new appreciation on this occasion. He has combined with singular effectiveness the two sides which such a work as he has attempted must have. He has held the interest and confidence of those who are to be the direct beneficiaries of his work, the negroes themselves, and he has gained the confidence and therefore has commanded the support of the class of men who could give moral and financial backing to the enterprise.

Free Alcohol. The bill now before congress to remove the tax on "denaturized alcohol"—that is, alcohol which has been so treated that it is impossible to use it in liquors—has much to commend it. Alcohol as a fuel has very large possibilities. Some of the claims which are being made for it may be exaggerated, but there is no question that, if the present high internal revenue tax upon it is removed, it can be much more widely and profitably employed. It is said that denaturized alcohol can be manufactured at thirty cents a gallon, which is only a trifle more than the price of common kerosene in some of the western states, while alcohol has a very much greater heating capacity. It can be made out of grain, potatoes, fruit and many other farm products, some of which are now of little value.

BREVITIES.

The Carnegie Foundation, which has charge of the ten million dollar pension fund for college professors, has secured federal incorporation so that its capitalization can be increased by the receipt of additional gifts. The amount at present held is the limit of capitalization under the state law in New York.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company has brought suit against Richard A. McCurdy, formerly president of the company, and his son Robert H. McCurdy, who was superintendent of the foreign department, to recover $1,002,841. It is charged that they conspired to defraud the company by securing for the younger McCurdy an exorbitant rate of compensation on a commission basis.

A 5 to 4 decision by the United States Supreme Court affirms the right of the Chicago city government to compel the street railway company to remove or lower its tunnels under the Chicago River. The case had its origin ten years ago in an agitation for the lowering of the tunnel which prevented the deepening of the river and thus obstructed navigation.

Springfield, Mo., is the center of the attention of the whole country. A crime against Law has been committed there in the lynching of three negroes, all of whom were suspects. The crimes with which they were charged were heinous, but they had no trial. A large mob of lawless men battered down the doors of the jail and put to death the negroes. The better element of the town, which has always borne a good reputation, is horrified. Governor Folk acted promptly and sent state troops to quell what gave promise of being a race riot. The governor—a southern man—means to blot out the disgrace by the prompt punishment of the guilty parties if they can be found.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

IV. The Protestant Era.

2. Other Reformations.

Following the reformation of Luther, and partly contemporaneous with it, were the reformatory movements of Zwingli, in Switzerland, and of Calvin, in Geneva. These later reformers profited, of course, by the labors of Luther, and made a still further advance in several respects toward evangelical doctrine as it is held by the best thought of to-day. They escaped some of the evils and false conceptions which continued to cleave to Luther after his break with the Roman church, but they were both more or less enslaved by the idea that the fagot and the sword were legitimate weapons with which to advance that kingdom of which it was declared by its founder that it is "not of this world," else would his subjects fight for him. Zwingli apprehended more clearly than Luther the meaning and place of the two ordinances in Christianity, and was more influenced than his great contemporary by the humanistic element growing out of the Renaissance. Calvin was undoubtedly one of the great thinkers of the church and left an indelible impress both upon its doctrine and polity His teaching proved to be the most virile and persistent form of Protestant thought springing out of that century. It spread throughout France, was transplanted thence to Scotland through the labors of John Knox, exerted a strong influence in the Reformation in England, took its place beside Lutheranism even in Germany, was puissant in the redemption of the Netherlands from the persecuting power of Roman Catholicism, and, being transplanted to the New World, has exerted a widespread and commanding influence in the religious thought and life of America. And yet it was not given to John Calvin and his brave coadjutors to grapple successfully with the problem of Christian union. The authoritative doctrinal creed has always held a high place in the religious scheme of the Reformed churches, whether in the old or the new world, and while the spirit of the times and the growth of religious liberty have made impossible the use of the fagot, the sword, and the prison, to enforce theological uniformity, the creed of Calvin, modified somewhat by the broader and sweeter spirit which now pervades the church, is still regarded by its adherents as an essential test of doctrinal soundness, and an adequate basis of ecclesiastical life.

The religious movement known in the old world as Independency, may be considered as a divergence from the Presbyterian movement or that of the Reformed churches under the leadership of John Calvin, in the matter of church government. It strongly emphasized the independence of the local congregation and the movement has come to be known, especially in this country, as Congregationalism. It had its origin in the Reformation age, and in doctrine it was in the beginning identical with the Reformed churches, that is to say, Calvinistic. In its subsequent development, however, it has greatly modified the doctrine of Calvin, and does not acknowledge the authority of any general creed, holding to the right of each congregation to formulate its own creed. It has laid great emphasis upon education, and the institutions of learning which it has planted are among the foremost in this country, and through these it has exerted a widespread influence, not only upon the thought of the church, but upon the life of the nation. While its leading representatives in modern times are favorable to the cause of Christian unity, the movement as such, has never devoted itself to the solution of the problem of unity, though it has been an important factor in preparing the way for such unification.

Before the middle of the eighteenth century the Reformation in England sadly needed reforming. When the spirit of formalism, religious apathy and worldliness prevailed to an alarming extent, and the church was losing its witnessing power to the truth of Christianity, John Wesley, who graduated from Oxford College in the year 1726, soon afterward, in connection with his brother Charles, began those religious associations from which sprang the great, widespread movement known as Methodism. This movement, like that of Luther and Calvin, was an effort to bring the church into closer conformity with the Scriptures, and to make it more like the church which the Master had established. It laid especial emphasis upon the spiritual power of Christianity, as an internal force, the direct witness of the Spirit, and holiness of life. It was an emphasis, too, that was greatly needed in those days of spiritual coldness and formality, and the necessity for it has not ceased in our own day. It, too, was transplanted into the New World and has been a mighty factor in the religious life of this country. But great and important as was the work of Wesley, and of the movement to which his labors gave birth, it was not given to him to closely grapple with the problem of Christian unity. His mission lay in another field, but it was performing an important preparatory work in its promotion of vital godliness. John Wesley was less a theological genius than he was a great practical organizer and Christian statesman, dealing with practical problems of administration and the utilization of religious forces.

Is There Sufficient Unity to Justify Co-operation?

It has been objected by some of those opposed to church federation, which, as we have often explained, is only a method of Christian co-operation, that the religious bodies with which we propose to co-operate under the proposed basis of federation, are not worthy of recognition as "Christian bodies." It is not claimed by any of those favoring federation that these Protestant churches are without errors, more or less grave, in doctrine and practice. If this were not so there would be no need for the reformation which we are urging. It is claimed, however, that these bodies are "Christian bodies," holding enough in common with us to justify our co-operation with them. This fact is universally recognized among us in local co-operations for local purposes. There is not a principle involved in the larger co-operation proposed, that is not involved in these local co-operations. It has seemed to us worth while, in the present state of thought among us, to mention a few of the things in which these Evangelical Protestant bodies are one with the Disciples of Christ, lest we forget our unities in magnifying our differences. They believe that:

1. There is one living and true God, immanent in nature and transcendent above nature, who is revealed as Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

2. The Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are inspired of God, and are an all-sufficient rule of faith and duty.

3. Jesus Christ, as revealed in the New Testament, is the Messiah foretold in the Old Testament, is the Son of God and the only Savior of mankind, who came into the world to save sinners.

4. By his life and teaching, by his character and deeds and pre-eminently by his death upon the cross, and his resurrection from the dead, he has opened up the way of life and salvation to all men.

5. Through faith in him, such faith as brings the soul into union with him, men are "born again," receive remission of sins, the gift of the Holy Spirit, and become partakers of the divine nature.

6. The Church is a divine institution having Christ for its Author and its living Head. All true believers in Christ are members of this Church, and should maintain godly and pious lives, according to the teachings of the New Testament, keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

7. Baptism and the Lord's supper are divine ordinances whose binding authority is perpetual throughout this dispensation.

8. The duty of preaching the Gospel of the grace of God to all men, as the divinely ordained means of bringing men to faith, repentance and obedience, is the perpetual duty and obligation of the Church.

9. It is through this preaching of Christ's Gospel, and its faithful application to the domestic, social, industrial and political problems of our times, that the home, society and the nation can be saved from the demoralizing and destructive influences of sin, and perpetuated as sources of blessing to mankind.

10. They believe in the sanctity of marriage, the obligation to train up children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, in the care of the orphan and the widow, and in the relief of the manifold forms of human suffering through the tender ministry of Christian benevolence.

11. They believe in the presence of God with his people, in prayer, in maintaining good works, in opposing all the works of darkness and in seeking to extend Christ's reign over all the world.

12. They believe in Christian growth, in the communion of saints and the life everlasting. We sing the same hymns, pray to the same God, in the name of the same Mediator, by the aid of the same Spirit, trust in the same Savior and are striving to reach the same heaven.

This list of agreements could be greatly extended, but these will suffice for our present purpose. Let the thoughtful reader put them over against the dark background of sin and unbelief, and over against all the sorrow and suffering of the world, and all the high-handed disregard of law and of justice which exists because the Church of God is a divided moral force, and over against the dark pall of paganism which covers more than half our race, and then let him ask himself on his knees before God, if we are justified, in view of all these demands for united action, in regarding these religious bodies as enemies, instead of allies, and in refusing to work together with them, as far as we can, in overthrowing the forces of evil and in sending the glorious light of the Gospel to the benighted peoples of the earth. We can not doubt what the answer will be to this question when thus considered by any devout, intelligent and conscientious believer in Christ.

Notes and Comments.

The Missouri Christian Lectureship, which convened in Canton during the past week, proved to be intellectually stimulating, spiritually refreshing, and socially enjoyable, to a high degree. The papers were carefully prepared, and the discussions, though sometimes animated, were always fraternal. The absence of Professor Mathews, of the University of Chicago, caused by sickness, was much regretted, and was the only break in the program. The time which he was to occupy was wonderfully well used by three brethren who were drafted on short notice to make brief addresses. The special devotional half-hour, at the close of the Wednesday afternoon session, was exceedingly helpful, and we think will be a feature of subsequent lectureships. The enthusiasm reached a splendid climax on Wednesday evening at the close of the discussion of the subject of Christian union and federation. This discussion illustrated what has been shown to be true before, that when the subject of federation is presented in its true meaning and light, the brethren are practically one upon the subject. On no subject was there greater interest manifested, and at the close there was a manifestation of good feeling and fellowship resulting from a better understanding, which made a fitting close for a splendid lectureship. The only speaker on the regular program, outside the state, was Bro. G. A. Campbell, of Chicago, who gave two lectures which won for him many friends and admirers in Missouri. This and other lectures are described and characterized at greater length elsewhere in this number.

The hospitality of the people of Canton during the lectureship was full-orbed, leaving nothing to be desired. They not only gave us free entertainment, but furnished us large audiences, especially for the evening services, and a body of appreciative students in all the sessions. President Johann, Dean Buxton, Prof. R. G. Sears and other members of the faculty gave their presence and influence to the success of the various sessions of the convention, one of which was held in the chapel of the university. The noble view of the Mississippi river and the regions beyond from University Hill, was greatly admired by the visitors. This institution is doing a quiet, but highly important work in behalf of Christian education, and especially in the way of recruiting the ranks of our ministers, which ought to have substantial recognition on the part of the brethren of the state. The next lectureship goes to Marshall, Mo., and Dr. J. M. Philputt was elected president.

This quotation is from the write-up of last week's Sunday-school lesson in the "Record-Herald," by Dr. J. L. Withrow, Presbyterian:

"We may observe that in the New Testament initiation of the kingdom of Christ he did not annul the statute of the Sabbath. Some have asserted that Jesus did abrogate the Sabbath of the Israelites. But turn to the sacred record and find it who can, where Jesus proclaimed the repeal of the fourth commandment, any more than he did of the fifth."

Will you point out wherein the good doctor errs in his statement? —W. P. Keeler.

Chicago.

There is no special abrogation of the Sabbath, of course, but there is a general transcendence or swallowing up of the Mosaic law by the law of Christ, just as the sun abrogates the moon and stars as sources of light when it rises. See 2 Cor. 3:7-11, where that which is "written and engraven on stones" is represented as "passing away" by "reason of the glory that surpasseth." The moral teaching of the fifth and other commandments is incorporated in the New Testament and deepened. The Sabbath commandment requiring the keeping of the seventh day, is not so incorporated, but the principle of consecrating one day in seven, is taken up in the New Testament and finds expression in the Lord's day, or first day of the week, which eclipsed the seventh day by reason of the "greater glory" which it has because it commemorates Christ's resurrection from the dead. It is not to be supposed that the apostles and the early church came to observe the first day of the week without being divinely led thereto.

It is related that during the civil war, when the Federal and Confederate armies were on opposite sides of the Rappahannock river, that the bands of the two armies had a sort of musical duel. The band in the Union army would play "The Star-spangled Banner" and the Confederate band would answer with "The Bonnie Blue Flag." The Federals would come back with "Rally Round the Flag, Boys," and the Confederates reply with "Dixie." And so the opposing bands went on for some time until one of the bands struck up "Home, Sweet Home!" The other band joined in the melody and the soldiers in each army united in the chorus:

Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home."

May we not hope that the same sentiment of home and the homeland, as it finds expression in the call for the May offering for Home Missions, is a note that will touch a responsive chord in every heart, and that all the soldiers in our Lord's army, whether in the federation or anti-federation camp, will heartily join in the song until, from the north to the south, and from the east to the west, this grand melody shall resound, culminating in the largest home mission offering which has ever been made in our history! Perhaps such a united effort as that, with such results, would make us all willing for the widest co-operation consistent with fidelity to the cause for which we stand.

"Brother Garrison writes: 'We can not explain how the Holy Spirit helps us in our prayers, but we know he does.' Now, can't he tell his readers how he knows that the Holy Spirit 'helps him in his prayers'? He claims 'direct intercourse with the immanent personal God.' Is he not a special favorite of God?"—Christian Leader and Way.

Does not Brother Bell who, we take it, writes the foregoing, know that the Holy Spirit helps him in his prayers? Does he not have "direct intercourse with the immanent personal God"? Most certainly we do not claim any special privileges with God, much less do we claim to be "a special favorite of God." Prayer is "direct intercourse" with God, and the Holy Spirit helps us in our prayers. How do we know it? Just as we know any fact in our spiritual experience. How do we know that God comforts us in our troubles? Because we experience the comfort, in harmony with his promise. How do we know that we have "passed from death unto life"? Because we "love the brethren"; that is, because we live. To love is to live. How do we "know him in whom we have believed"? Because we have tested him and he has not failed us. How did the blind man know that Jesus had opened his eyes? Because, whereas he was blind, he could now see. Not otherwise do we know that we are saved. A saved man loves God, loves his brethren, loves righteousness and loves to obey God. If one is not conscious of this inward experience of love and the desire to live a holy and useful life, he has no satisfying evidence of his personal salvation. To rely on external evidence, even the Word of God, without an answering witness within, is to deceive ourselves. The Spirit of God beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.

Editor's Easy Chair.

One of the most profitable features of the Missouri Christian Lectureship last week was the half-hour's devotional service in which all discussions of mooted questions were laid aside, and the intellect was made the servant of the heart. Christianity does not discourage the use of the intellect; on the contrary, it inculcates the duty of thinking, and itself appeals to reason. But it is not the highest thing in Christianity. Faith is greater than reason, and love is even greater than faith. We know God through the heart much more than through the intellect. If we would only follow our hearts more, and our heads less, in matters religious, we would more seldom go wrong. The heart that has been purified by faith and in which Christ's Spirit dwells—that is the heart that sees God. It is only as we see God that we can see truth in its proper relations. It was beautiful to see how, when we had retired from the circumference, where mind clashed with mind, more or less, on things intellectual, to the center of Christianity, where heart speaks to heart, and where deep answers unto deep, all differences disappeared and we were completely one in Christ. Into this region of calm, of reverence, of face-to-face talk with God, in which we open our hearts to Him and to one another, we too seldom come for our own spiritual sanity and mental equipoise. The devotional feature of our conventions and other assemblies is altogether too incidental and formal. It should be central, and controlling in its influence.

Suppose it were possible for the whole brotherhood to be gathered in one assembly in a devotional service; suppose we could pray together, with one heart, that God would remove far from us the spirit of strife and contention, the spirit of suspicion and rivalry, with all selfish aims and ambitions, and that He would fill us with the spirit of love, fraternity and co-operation, that we might work together for the advancement of the cause which He has committed to our hands, and for the glory of His kingdom, seeking only to please Christ and to make Him and His blessed truth known to all men—would not such a scene and such a prayer, in which all should join heartily and sincerely, work a mighty revolution in some of our feelings and methods and arguments? We can not have such a gathering, but we can have, if we desire it, such approach to God, with such petitions for ourselves and for each other, and even this could not fail to produce a most salutary change in the present condition of things among us. It was said, the other day, in a public assembly of ministers, by one of their number, that it was the belief of the brethren that the present contention in the brotherhood over the question of federation had its origin, and was being perpetuated, in a spirit of rivalry between our publishing houses. To what extent this belief prevails we are not prepared to say, but that it should exist at all is a most humiliating fact. That is, that there should be any ground for such a belief is the cause for humiliation. All charges of doctrinal unsoundness, or "departures from the faith," or "surrendering our plea," are as nothing compared with the sin—no milder term is admissible—of fomenting strife and preventing the co-operation of Christians, from motives of personal gain or ambition for ascendancy. We judge no other man's motives, but we are frank to say that to the extent we have been guilty of this great wrong we have forfeited the right to claim the confidence and respect of the brotherhood.

There is one argument used freely by those who oppose that closer co-operation among Christian bodies which federation proposes, that has been a continual surprise to us. Brethren writing from different sections of the south and west have said, through some of our papers, that they are opposed to federation because the denominations in their communities are so narrow and so bitter against us. If that be an argument against the form of co-operation called federation, how much more is it an argument against Christian union! It is as if some one should oppose preaching the Gospel of Christ, in a given community, convicting of sin and offering peace and pardon to men, because the people were desperately wicked! One would think that the more sectarian the churches of any region are, the more they stand in need of that spirit of fraternity which makes co-operation possible. Without the Spirit of Christ, which is the spirit of fraternity, co-operation is impossible, and for this reason no doubt the plan of federation would be impracticable for a while in many communities. But what supreme advantage it would give our churches to put themselves on record as in favor of such co-operation, and let those who are opposed to unity reject it if they will! The very fact, however, that churches of these same bodies, in other parts of the country, are co-operating with us as brethren, would soon compel their more sectarian brethren to fall into line. If federation is not a remedy for sectarianism, then, of course, none of us should favor it. But experience teaches that sectarianism is the only serious obstacle, both to federation and to Christian union in its complete form. It is this inveterate foe that will keep federation from being practicable in many places, but is that any reason why it should not be practiced in those parts of the country where the churches have outgrown the sectarian limitations of the past, and are desirous of a larger and more Christian fellowship?

A minister who ranks with the very ablest of our preachers, writers and thinkers, says in a personal note: "You are speaking some wholesome truths which our people need to hear. Continue to speak them. You will be heard by many now, and by all in the end." Aye, "in the end," we surely believe. Meanwhile, there are many gainsayers, and it is hard to be always saying things that we believe to be "wholesome truths which our people need to hear," but which many do not wish to hear and who misconceive both the message and its motives. It is not so hard to be withstood and misrepresented by enemies of the truth and of Christ, but to have the enmity and opposition of sincere and good brethren who differ from you only because they misunderstand you and have been led into such misunderstanding—that is a burden which only the grace of God can enable one to bear with patience. But it has never been otherwise in the history of the world, and never will be until the world is redeemed from sin and all its dwarfing and warping influences. After all, however, if one has the testimony of his own conscience that he is speaking the truth which God would have him speak, it is a very small thing that he should be opposed by men. At a recent banquet in this city an editor of a daily paper who was present good-naturedly twitted the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist, who was present, on the greater number of people who read the daily paper, replying to which the religious journalist said that the average religious journal had some conscience left, and published not what the people wanted to read, as did the dailies, but what they ought to read, and that this fact placed some limitations upon the number of his readers, but made his company more select. It may pay better, and it is always an easier job, to say what the people want to hear, but in the long run it is better for any paper to have high ideals and to maintain them, for the end aimed at, the public weal, will more than compensate for any personal loss.

It is good to hear of the great in-gatherings in the churches through the evangelistic meetings, and it is good to learn of the many open doors that are inviting our laborers to enter. All this shows that America is a great, ripe harvest field, ready for the sickle of the reapers. There is a great revival going on in the political world, and this is evidence of the readiness of the people for a great religious revival if the church will do its duty. No plea which has ever been urged upon the American people has met with such a favorable reception as our simple, divine plea for the restoration of New Testament Christianity and the union of all God's people. This fact accentuates our responsibility as those to whom God has committed this trust for this age and generation. No one among us that values its heritage of truth and the impregnable basis upon which our cause rests ought to fail in its co-operation with those of "like precious faith" in spreading this Gospel throughout the length and breadth of this great nation. The first Lord's Day in May is the well-known time when our churches throughout the country make their offerings to this holy cause. Our ministers and church officials can not render more profitable service just now than by urging the importance of this offering upon their respective churches, and in making all needful preparations in order to insure its success. The board this year is striving to reach the $200,000 mark, and if we are to realize our centennial aims in respect to this department of our work we can not well afford to drop below this figure. The Christian-Evangelist, therefore, joins heartily with our Home Board in lifting up the motto of "$200,000 for Home Missions for the year 1906."

The Statistics of the Churches of Christ

By
G. A. Hoffmann

When the present statistical secretary took charge of the work, he found that there were two different systems in vogue in the different states in reporting the membership. In some states the enrolled communicants only were reported, while in other states our large floating membership was also included. This latter, of course, would greatly swell the membership in those states. It has been the secretary's purpose at all times to have only enrolled membership reported. In states where a large floating membership was reported it has been difficult to get the secretaries to cut down to the point so as to report enrolled membership only. But with few exceptions, we have now reached this point. During the last year the cuts have been larger than any other, hence our growth seems to be much smaller than it really is.

The report for the last two years shows:

| | Churches. | Membership. | Ministers. |
|---|---|---|---|
| In 1904........... | 11,088 | 1,233,866 | 6,625 |
| In 1905........... | 11,120 | 1,242,690 | 6,538 |
| Gains ......... | 32 | 8,824 | Loss 87 |

This is the report as it stands. It is simply the addition of the reports from the various states. By going carefully over these reports any one can easily see what the above figures mean for 1905. In harmony with what is stated above, it will be seen that this report cut the membership in Illinois 5,000, in Arkansas 13,440 and the colored membership 8,000. In order to reach our actual gains, these cuts must be added to the above 8,824 shown in the report which gives our actual net gain for the year 1905 as 35,264. The same thing is true when it comes to a gain in church organizations. The above shows a gain of 32. To this must be added a cut of 107 colored churches, 93 in Arkansas and 22 in other states, making a real gain of 254. When we reach the loss in our number of ministers, the same thing is true. Your secretary has decided to count only those whose names are reported by the state secretaries. This cut out 121 in Arkansas, 35 in other states and 54 colored preachers, making 210. Subtracting the above loss of 87 from this number we have a gain of 123 ministers for the year.

We have two classes of writers who are not satisfied with our statistics. One of them has recently written under the heading, "Have We Been Marking Time?" This writer evidently belongs to the sensational class. It is true he quoted Dr. Carroll's statistics of the Disciples of Christ, but this same writer could have had access to the report as printed by our national society. Dr. Carroll has been getting his statistics until this year from myself, but this time some one else has furnished the statistics. Hence the mistake is not due to me.

The others belong to the 2,000,000 membership class by 1909. One of these recently stated in the journal which that illustrious man, Isaac Errett, founded, that as there were nearly 100,000 additions there must have been a net gain of 60,000 and this is what the brethren in the galleries love to hear and applaud. Nothing would be a greater delight to your present statistical secretary than to report a membership of 2,000,000 in 1909, but he is perfectly satisfied that it is impossible. Do not forget that your statistical secretary does not deal with additions but with church membership. No one is more in sympathy with the great work that our evangelists are doing than I am, but our losses are simply enormous. Two of our Missouri churches held meetings about fifteen years ago. They were good average churches. They had had some of our best ministers labor for them. One had 250 members and the other 300. In these meetings one added 325, the other 340. Five years afterward one had 275 members and the other 325. These churches added through two of our most capable evangelists 665 in the two meetings, and in addition to these, with five years of pastoral work, showed a net gain of 50. These cases may be multiplied by the hundreds all over our brotherhood. Hence, I would say, if our books show a membership of 1,400,000 by 1909 we shall certainly do well.

Additions to the church depend upon three things: First, the truth emphasized; second, the evangelistic spirit of the pastors; and third, the ability, culture and attainments of the evangelist. The growth of the church also depends upon three things: First, the truths taught to the new converts; second, the character and ability of the pastors; and third, the moral force and organizaion of the churches. We are strong when it comes to additions, in every particular, but exceedingly weak, when we reach the second and third points, in holding on to the additions. Not that our pastors are not men of character and ability but half of our churches are without scriptural pastors. It is true that they have an eldership which does what it can but which can not serve the needs of the churches in the churches' rapid gains through the work of the evangelists. It is true that a large number of these pastorless churches have preaching once a month or occasionally but not enough work is ever done in them to make any marked gains. Then we lack more under the third head than the second, in holding on to our additions. We have piety, consecration and the spirit of kindliness that challenges the world, but when it comes to moral force and congregational organizations for work, with few notable exceptions, we are ordinarily among the weakest bodies of the community. The writer has not time here to call attention further to this fact, but will simply say that we must cultivate the spirit of oneness in our local congregations more, in order that the church may be an organized moral force which will hold on to and help every man that enters it and will impress every man that is outside of it.

Now as to our growth in the last fifteen years, or since 1890, together with the growth of other religious bodies, having 100,000 or more memebrs in 1905, together with their gain per cent, we stand as follows:

| Denomination. | 1890. | 1905. | Gain per ct. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Baptist (13 bodies)..... | 3,594,053 | 4,974,040 | 38 |
| Catholic (Roman) ..... | 6,228,579 | 10,785,496 | 73 |
| Christian connection ... | 90,718 | 101,597 | 12 |
| Congregationalist ... .. | 512,771 | 687,042 | 34 |
| Disciples of Christ..... | 641,051 | 1,242,690 | 94 |
| Dunkard (4 bodies).... | 73,845 | 116,311 | 59 |
| Evangelical (2 bodies).. | 133,313 | 166,978 | 25 |
| Friend (4 bodies)...... | 107,208 | 120,415 | 12 |
| German Evang. (synod) | 187,432 | 222,002 | 19 |
| Latter-Day Saint ...... | 167,125 | 344,247 | 106 |
| Lutheran (22 bodies)... | 1,223,283 | 1,841,346 | 51 |
| Methodist (17 bodies).. | 4,588,662 | 6,429,815 | 40 |
| Presbyterian (12 bodies). | 1,278,332 | 1,728,871 | 35 |
| Protestant Episcopal ... | 532,054 | 827,847 | 55 |
| Reformed (3 bodies)... | 319,458 | 405,022 | 27 |
| United Breth. (2 bodies) | 225,158 | 274,012 | 22 |
| Unitarian ...... ...... | 67,749 | 71,000 | 6 |
| Universalist .... ...... | 49,224 | 53,641 | 8 |

As much is said about the Unitarians and the Universalists, we thought well to add them although neither have 100,000 membership. In fact this membership in 1930, seventy-five years ago, was nearly as large as it is now. The six great bodies which have over a million each show gains as follows: Disciples of Christ 94 per cent, Roman Catholic 73, Lutheran 51, Methodist 40, Baptist 38, and Presbyterian 35.

It will be noticed that there is but little difference in the growth of the three denominations, Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian. The Disciples of Christ show more than double the gains of these bodies. The Lutherans gain more rapidly than the three mentioned above. Their gains have come largely from Germany, Denmark, Sweden and Norway. They have had but small additions from conversions. The Roman Catholics have their gains, of course, from foreign emigration. Nearly two-thirds of the emigrants who land on our shores now are Catholics. If all who had landed on the shores of the United States who were Catholics had remained such and their descendants remained in the faith, we should now have at least 30,000,000 inhabitants of that faith and possibly many more.

In regard to the statistics of the Disciples of Christ I would say that there are thousands of members outside of our church organizations and even in the church membership of denominations who were converted under the preaching of our ministry and for a time were in fellowship in one of the churches of Christ, who firmly believe with us in all essentials, but for various causes which seem sufficient to them are now worshiping with others or have become non-affiliated in church work.

The great need is more ministers to shepherd our smaller or weaker churches; men who will be willing to labor with our country and village churches. Our schools are doing well for their opportunities but their financial bases are insufficient to render aid to many young men who would cheerfullly preach the Gospel if they could secure the proper training.

Song in Evangelism

By Sherman Kirk

Song in evangelism is by no means a modern innovation. Paul and Silas were singing in the prison in Philippi when the earthquake loosed the bonds of all the prisoners and the evangelists were permitted to go to the jailer with joyful hearts and tell him "the old, old story of Jesus and his love," and witness the conversion of the prison keeper and his family.

The members of the church in idolatrous Ephesus were taught to sing and make melody in their hearts to the Lord (Eph. 5:19). The church in Colossae was exhorted to teach and admonish one another with "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" (Col. 3:16). Again, in Paul's letter to the Corinthians, he commends singing with the spirit and the understanding.

This feature of the worship of the early church must have made a deep impression upon the Gentile world. The joyousness of the Christian in the midst of affliction and suffering must have filled the heathen with amazement. That songs were employed in soul winning from this early period throughout the history of the church until the present time is very evident. Augustine attributed his conversion to the singing by Saint Ambrose of one of his most beautiful hymns.

The command to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature is the command to tell the story persuasively. This is the work of the Gospel singer. Thousands can date their first interest in the Christian religion to the singing of a beautiful hymn or a Gospel song. The very tones of the voice, vibrating with the pathos of an earnest, devoted soul, move mightily upon the hearts of sinful men.

What is commonly known as the Gospel song is, however, modern, and dates from 1873, when Mr. Moody was in Newcastle, England, in one of his evangelistic campaigns. In recent years great evangelists have been known in pairs, as Moody and Sankey, Major Whittle and Bliss, Torrey and Alexander, Updike and Hawes, or Updike and Easton, as it now is, and Scoville and Smith.

The history of our people is characterized by a splendid evangelism, one of the marked features of which has been evangelistic singing. The accurate historian will not fail to note the names of the men and women who have sung the Gospel with great power. One of the first of our evangelistic singers was William Hayden. Walter Scott said, in the Mahoning Association in 1828, "Brethren, give me my Bible, my head and William Hayden, and we will go out and convert the world." "William Hayden became singing evangelist to Scott, and during a ministry of 35 years he traveled 90,000 miles, fully 60,000 of which he made on horseback. He baptized with his own hands 1,207 and preached over 9,000 sermons." Knowles Shaw was perhaps the most gifted singing evangelist we have had in our ranks. He was killed in a railroad wreck in Texas, and the cause of Christ lost one of its best soul winners. He was a man of rare musical talent, a splendid preacher and composer, whose one composition alone, "Bringing in the Sheaves," is sufficient to give him undying fame. He had an excellent singing voice, and accompanied himself at the organ, of which he was a master. He sang with great fervor—the fervor of a devoted heart—and with the unction of a spirit that yearned to be used of God in the most glorious work to which men have been called, "to rally souls to the cross of Christ."

Every great evangelist recognizes the value of evangelistic singing, and it has come to be regarded as indispensable. The highest success of the preaching evangelist has come to depend very largely on the character of his yokefellow, the singing evangelist.

The Singer.

What should be the character of the singer, the evangelist whose duty and privilege it is to sing his sermons and prepare the hearts of the people for the reception of the truth, and persuade them by the tender pleadings of song to accept the Christ? First of all, he should be one whom God has endowed with a good voice, and in whose heart there is a desire to use his voice to call sinful men to a righteous life. He should take such training as will enable him to do his work in an artistic manner and with that dignity and grace that will be well pleasing to God and to those who may be most highly gifted and cultured in the art of music. He is expected to enlist the best talent of the church and community in helping him to conduct the evangelistic praise service. He ought to know enough about music to speak intelligently on the subject, and thereby inspire confidence and command the respect of lovers of music. He should be able to organize his choir or chorus so thoroughly that they may render the most efficient service in worshipful singing. He will have to be "as wise as a serpent and as harmless as a dove" if he succeeds in managing his "war department," as the choir is so frequently dubbed. Frequent devotional services with the choir or chorus will help to secure harmony of mind and heart, as well as voices. The choir should be made to understand that they are sermon singers, and that they should guard well their actions in all things; that they should be true to him whom they serve. The evangelistic singer should be the very soul of promptness, and should expect every one who helps him to be prompt. He should meet with his singers at least five or ten minutes before the appointed hour for the beginning, and inasmuch as the song service is a part of the worship, this time should be utilized in the brief devotional service before mentioned. The preaching evangelist will be greatly helped if he feels that the leaders in the song service are singing with the spirit and the understanding. The brief devotional service which precedes the praise service will bring these leaders of song into a much better frame of mind for the worship, and the whole audience will feel the influence of these moments spent by the chorus in devotional service. The evangelist who preaches ought to feel that the singing evangelist will do his work creditably and that he himself need not be unduly concerned about the song service. He should receive a very great inspiration from his helper in song, and should look forward to the solo-sermon with eager expectancy. The leader of evangelistic music ought to select carefully the hymns and tunes for each meeting with a view of teaching the same lesson in the songs that is taught in the sermon. It is better, however, to sing good hymns and songs of a general character than poor ones which may be preferred for the theme, but there ought to be a definite purpose in the songs, as well as in the sermon; in other words, thought should be given to co-ordination.

Prof. Sherman Kirk.

The Song Service.

The song service should harmonize with the general topic or theme to be presented, with a view to preparing the hearers for the message of the preacher. As far as possible, sing all the stanzas of a song. It is not necessary to sing them all through without any intermission, but it is too frequently the case that the teaching of the song is destroyed by leaving out a stanza. Give the author of the hymn an opportunity to preach his sermon. If the preacher should send his sermon to be read before the church, or if he should send a letter to the church, he would not feel right about it if we should read it in such a manner as to leave out the main point in it.

The songs for evangelistic services are legion, but good ones are not too numerous. Gospel songs, as a rule, are not of as high a standard as the best hymns. Some songs do not teach anything of any value; some are very unorthodox. Weed out carefully the meaningless, the insipid and the trashy songs, and use none that are lacking in that spiritual element which the Scriptures approve. Too frequently the music of the evangelistic service is lacking in dignity and in spiritual depth. The songs have not come from the deeper, purer streams of life. Sometimes the music is good and the sentiment shallow. Again, the hymn is a great one and the music inadequate. It is a difficult problem to solve, but there is great need that we give the matter our earnest attention and raise the standard of our evangelistic music as rapidly as possible.

Congregational Singing.

Congregational singing, when it is hearty, is exceedingly helpful to the preacher and to the peopel themselves. Martin Luther was a great preacher; he was also a great singer and hymn writer. Luther made much of congregational singing. It has been my observation that the Lutherans are still among the best in this feature of their worship. There is a much closer bond of sympathy possible between the congregation that sings and the preacher than there is between the preacher and the congregation that has no part in the service of song. If one, in a song, confesses his need of Christ, it is a help toward bringing him

How to Get New England to Hear Our Plea

By Gilbert L. Harney

Every practical proposition has the right to a thorough test before it is denied. That the Disciples of Christ can succeed in New England is such a proposition, and a thorough test has never been given it.

The genius of our plea requires, in order to success in any locality, that the problem of hearing shall be solved before any other. This problem must be solved, and the people of New England must hear our plea, before we decide that they will not accept it.

But the problem of hearing is far more complicated, and much harder to solve, than many think. Because some do not regard it as of moment and proceed on the assumption that it is a small, or an easy matter, they attribute the inevitable failure to something else, perhaps gravely announcing that that community will not receive the Gospel. We have not solved the problem when we have not preached to a thousandth part of the people of a locality—and could not do it, by our methods, if the whole locality should show a disposition to hear. We have not solved it when our methods are adapted for but one class, whether that class be rich or poor, educated or uneducated, native or foreign. We have not solved it when we ignore the habits, customs, beliefs, systems and trends of thought, notions and idiosyncrasies of the locality. We have not solved it when we have failed to strike at the dominant thought that determines the attitude of the whole locality toward every phase of religion.

Here are some contrasts: Paul went to Ephesus, and in two and a quarter years "all they who dwelt in Asia heard the Word of the Lord"; the Disciples of Christ have been in Boston about 40 years, and scarcely a tenth of the city knows that they are here.

It is certain that the time has come for the real spirit and aim of the Disciples of Christ to be brought to the attention of New England. That it may be done in the best manner, that the ears of the people here may really be had, three forces are necessary—the American Christian Missionary Society, sufficient money and the best men. We need the first, not only that we may have the second and third, but that the real spirit of our people may be in what is done, both as to our teaching and as to meeting in all respects the real conditions in New England.

We need money—not to scatter about until it appears in small, insufficient dribs. One hundred dollars in each of 100 places will mean 100 failures; but $10,000 rightly used, in one place will mean success. And the ripest wisdom, the most aggressive Christian zeal and purpose, and most intelligent and thorough investigation, should determine the place. Above all things, the aim should be to reach New England ears.

The work of Paul in Ephesus is needed in Boston; but if we had the Paul, we have not the money. The Disciples have strong men; such we must have in every New England center—but where is the money? Send us the money, and the very best men.

The Hour of Our Visitation

By E. M. Waits

On a certain occasion our Lord reproved the Scribes and Pharisees because they discerned the signs of the sky, but did not discern the signs of the times. Theirs was a day of unprecedented opportunity, but they failed to know the hour of their visitation, and to-day "under the star and the crescent they cling with their lips to the few moldering stones of their ancient temple with a wail of sadness like the living child at the cold bosom of a dead mother."

What is opportunity to a man who is unprepared to meet it? Carlyle says our grand business in life is not to see what lies dimly in the distance, but to do that which lies nearest at hand. A score of years ago Josiah Strong said "that the west to-day is an infant, but shall one day be a giant, in each of whose limbs shall unite the strength of many nations." Materially, the fulfilment of that prophecy is already at hand, and religiously we must have our share in its mighty development.

But I shall confine my plea to my section, the southwest. If you take El Paso, Tex., the entrepot into Old Mexico, as a pivot, and describe a semicircle whose radius shall be 300 miles, you will circumscribe the great sunshine kingdom of the United States; a land equal in area to New England and the middle states combined; a territory equal in extent to France or Germany or Austria; a land that a quarter of a century ago was considered of little value save for its pastures, over whose bewildering distances roamed that awful scourge of our civilization—the treacherous and bloodthirsty Apache, the real Bedouin of the new world—a land which Mr. Lummis described so perspicuously a score of years ago in his "Land of Poco Tiempo" "as sun, silence and adobe." Already the awakening has come, where the Pueblo built his seven cities of Cibola that have baffled the archeologists of our day; and the Apache left his map of desolation and trail of blood, civilization has entered. The shrill cry of the locomotive breaks the awful silence and echoes among the beetling crags; cities are springing up to the music of trade and commerce; the schools and libraries are thronged with eager faces; young men and women of sterling worth are here in great numbers to embrace the unprecedented opportunities of an El Dorado that is not mythical, but real.

Back to our pivot, El Paso. The mines of this section have an output of $150,000,000 annually. Within a few hours' journey are the richest coal fields west of the Ohio, the richest copper mines in the world, the only tin deposit in the southwest. In the city there is one smelter with a pay roll of $60,000 per month itself maintaining a town of 3,500. The eight railroads that center here leave 5,000 cars of freight every month and have a local pay roll of $1,500,000 per annum. The 100 jobbing houses do a $6,000,000 bulk of business annually over a vast area. The banks of the city have $6,500,000 in resources and $5,000,000 in deposits. The United States is about to expend $7,200,000 in an irrigation project in our valley that will make 180,000 acres of land bloom like a rose; and all this where one of our college professors two years ago on a tour to Mexico, said: "I crossed the border at El Paso, an aggregation of shacks and adobes and an old church said to be 350 years old." We pardon our historian, believing he was asleep in his Pullman and using an antequated guide book.

If the material resources are great the religious opportunities are commensurate. All over this immense area are thriving and populous towns and in all not a dozen self-supporting churches. Three years ago the First Christian Church of El Paso was a ward of the American Christian Missionary Society; to-day with a membership of 350 and $30,000 worth of property, it is the best equipped in the city. It is missionary to the core, and will delight to pour back the dollars that saved its life into the lap of its foster mother, as well as give liberal help to all our missionary enterprises. What has been done in El Paso can be done in a score of towns. We must conquer by redemption and that has been the wise policy of the American Board. Moreover, there are over 100,000 Mexicans in this section. There is a good mission of promise here that needs enlargement. What has been done at Monterey with the same men and means can be done from Santa Fe to the City of Mexico. Spanish America is breaking with Rome, and today the Catholic church has less power as a state institution in Mexico than in the United States. Let us do all in our power to reach $200,000 for home missions the first Sunday in May, and so enable our board to do a more efficient work than ever before. "Cast thy bread upon the waters for it shall return unto you after many days."

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

We are on the Mediterranean, the Magnum Mare or "Great Sea" of the ancient peoples. "The grand object of all travel," said Dr. Samuel Johnson, "is to see the shores of the Mediterranean." Where indeed can one find clustered about any body of water such beauty, such romance, such unique scenes and hallowed association? I thought last night as I looked upon the deep blue waters, flecked here and there with gleams of white, and above at Jupiter and Canopus shining serenely, of Napoleon on the deck of the ship in this same sea, turning to his officers who were questioning the existence of God, and as he pointed toward the same stars, asking: "Gentlemen, who made all that?"

Gibraltar is a great place for smuggling. Spain places a high tariff on tobacco and the Spanish soldiers have a clever way of avoiding it. They starve their dogs, and shopkeepers in Gibraltar feed them. The dogs go over regularly for food and then return home and the dealer wraps them with tobacco and they pass the revenue officers. Sometimes a bullet ends the dog's career as a smuggler and the Spaniard loses both dog and weed. We leave the Pillars of Hercules and after a run of 400 miles come to Algiers, our next stopping place, of all spots on earth famous for smuggling and piracy and every wrong. It has been a very chamber of horrors, yet its old Moorish town gleams white in the sun against a deep background of green hillside, a very pearl among emeralds. At Algiers, the capital of Algeria, we first set foot on the dark continent. Algeria is a province of France with 184,000 square miles and nearly 5,000,000 people, of whom a quarter of a million are French. M. Jounart is the governor-general and he lives in the old palace of the Deys, a beautiful Arab house. Since 1830 the French have held the country. The Arabs took it in 690 and during their reign the coast of Barbary became the dread of every vessel sailing the Mediterranean. They were friends to the sea and enemies to all that sailed on it. Spain tried to rid the seas of these pirates, and Charles V. in person in 1541 with 140 ships and 30,000 men, including the Knights of Malta and the chivalry of Spain, proceeded against Algiers, but a storm wrecked the fleet destroying a hundred ships and most of the army were killed or imprisoned by the Algerines. France sought to humble Algeria and the Algerines swept the French coast with fire and sword, and Louis XIV. sent Du Quesne who, with the newly-invented bomb, laid Algiers in ashes in 1652, but piratical expeditions continued, and even America suffered from these Corsairs. An average price of $3,000 apiece was demanded for captured Americans which George Washington refused to pay. In 1795 the United States paid as much as $721,000 to these scoundrels, and even as late as 1812 gave $22,000 a year tribute in stores and ammunition. Our country was the first to throw off this degrading yoke. Decatur appeared before Algiers to notify the pirates and demand immediate release of all Americans held in slavery. The crafty Dey, recognizing that Algiers lay at the mercy of the American fleet, acceded to Decatur's demands, but asked that the United States should continue a nominal annual gift of powder, to which the commodore replied, "if the Dey took the powder he must take the balls, too," and the Dey was forced to accept the new Declaration of American Independence. In 1816 England took a hand, nearly destroyed Algiers and liberated 1,211 Christian slaves, but not until 1830 did piracy and slavery come to an end and Algeria become a French colony. The stroke of a fan produced war.

The home of the old Barbary Corsairs is a land of high mountains, deep glens and great gorges, of vast pine forests, of flowers and luxuriant growth. A thousand rills tumble down its ravines, and a thousand rivers flow through its fertile valleys. As you approach the old pirate nest from the sea you view, along the African coast, a long chain of mountains, a snowy ridge. Then a beautiful bay is disclosed and a range of green hills detaches itself from the dark mass of the Atlas. Then a white town, the city of the Deys, is before you, houses rising tier above tier, mostly Moorish in style, all whitewashed, the front rows substantial and modern, the buildings farther off Moorish and ancient, all forming terraces of dazzling white, and the emerald hills in the background and the azure sea, the fine avenues of palm, orange, plane and pepper trees, and the domes and towers and ships make a picture fair indeed to look upon. We pass the Mole, a wall which 30,000 Christian slaves were three years in building, and cast anchor, and soon are driving through the streets and back of the city to Mustapha Superieur, the beautiful residence suburb with its charming Moorish villas and floral splendors. We see at once there are two towns, one modern and western, the other ancient and Oriental. The lower town has been transformed by its French masters. Here are warehouses, broad streets, stately shops, a little bit of Paris itself, yet here Arabs, Moors and Kabyles jostle Europeans and Americans. Paris and Bagdad shake hands. One sees muffled women in loose white robes covered to the eyes, turbaned Jews who might have stepped out of the Arabian Nights, negro peddlers, cultured French people and Oriental beggars, a motley throng.

The old town is higher up. No map could reproduce it, no clue unravel it, no pen describe it. It climbs and clambers by tortuous lanes and steep stairways up the sheer side of a steep hill to the old fortress of the Deys which crowns the summit. Not a gleam of sunshine penetrates the narrow slits between the houses where two people can just pass abreast, crushing elbows against the walls, and the dirt, and the smells and the people are indescribable; yet so quaint and picturesque and interesting is it all that no one can fail to explore its sunless labyrinths. Oriental life is seen in its perfection. Veiled figures glide softly, ladies muffled to the eyes gaze at you; stately Moors emerge with stealthy tread from unseen doorways; boys play ball in little courts; pretty little girls kiss their hands to you and ask a penny; tiny shops like holes in the wall suddenly come into view; everything is dirt and mystery, gloom and shade, reviving all you ever read or fancied of Oriental life. "How would we ever begin a mission here?" one of our party asked. "Why, begin with the children," I answered. They have bright faces, these Moorish boys and girls, but they have no chance. A good school would revolutionize the old Arab town. In fact I have seen no slum conditions in my travels that Christian education would not speedily relieve. One wonders as he looks

THANKSGIVING PSALM

A Rhythmical and Grateful Chant.

A teacher in a Terre Haute public school, joins in the chorus:

"Teaching is a business which requires a great deal of brain and nerve force. Unless this force is renewed as fast as expended the teacher is exhausted before the close of the year. Many resort to stimulating tonics for relief.

"For 3 years I struggled against this almost complete exhaustion, getting what relief I could from doctor's tonics. Then in the spring of 1903, I had an attack of la grippe and malaria which left me too weak to continue my work. Medicine failed to give me any relief, a change of climate failed. I thought I should never be able to go back in school again.

"I ate enough food, (the ordinary meals, white bread and vegetables) but was hungry after meals.

"I happened at this time to read an article giving the experience of another teacher who had been helped by Grape-Nuts food. I decided to try Grape-Nuts and cream, as an experiment. It was a delightful experience, and continues so after a year and a half of constant use.

"First, I noticed that I was not hungry after meals.

"In a few days that tired feeling left me, and I felt fresh and bright, instead of dull and sleepy.

"In three months, more than my usual strength returned, and I had gained 15 pounds in weight.

"I finished the year's work without any kind of tonics—was not absent from duty even half a day.

"Am still in the best of health, with all who know me wondering at the improvement.

"I tell them all, 'Try Grape-Nuts!'" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

upon these degraded sons of the old Corsairs that their fathers less than a hundred years ago were the terrors of the civilized world. Yet these lazy, stupid and cowed Arabs of to-day are the children of the men who held the Mediterranean. Over 3,000 vessels fell into the hands of the Algerian pirates. From 1674 to 1680, in six years, England alone lost 350 ships and had 6,000 of her subjects enslaved. Cervantes, the Spanish author, was for six years a slave in Algiers. In 1793, 115 Americans were held here and Benjamin Franklin on his deathbed kept appealing for their emancipation. Less than a hundred years ago the Dey and his bloodthirsty pirates had complete sway of this great sea and it is estimated over 600,000 Christian people suffered nameless horrors and atrocities in Algerian chain gangs and prisons, not seamen only, but scientists, noblemen, women and children, captured on the high seas, few of whom were ever ransomed or ever escaped. Their descendants do not lack in the cutthroat looks of their fathers, but France has them thoroughly subdued. Even now, however, one would hardly feel safe in the old quarter at night.

Best of all in Algiers is the drive to the heights. One gets views of sea and city, gardens and vineyards, villas and palaces, which he can never forget. Through the finest of asphalt streets thronged with Arabs and Kabyles and Europeans, along the market road with its caravanserais where the weary camel deposits its bale of dates and black faces of Saharan negroes look curiously from the folds of their dirty burnous, past cafes filled with every variety of Moslem, Jew, Turk and infidel, out of the gate of the old Moorish town, and up the steep slope by sharp zigzags, the Mustapha road goes to the gleaming white summer palace of the governor-general. It is a wilderness of villas with gleaming white Moorish houses half lost in rich gardens of orange, palm, cypress and rubber trees; everywhere the Saracenic arches and tiny round domes, a dream of white marble in bowers of green and bloom. One can not describe a strawberry, nor a Moorish villa. And the views here are said to surpass anything at Naples, Sorrento, Venice or Palermo, or the panorama at Nice. It is a fairylike scene. One would wish, if he must go blind, to close his eyes on just such a vision.

Other sights there are in and about Algiers. We visited the governor's palace, an excellent example of Arab architecture, with a beautiful court and reception hall. The owner was spending the winter in Paris. The Marengo Garden and the Garden d'Essai were full of interesting plants and trees and flowers, many strange to us and peculiar to this sunny clime. The public library and museum had some interesting Moslem books and pictures, but our people who bothered to hunt around for Geronimo failed to discover the "Big Indian." Geronimo was the martyr they tell about, alive in a block of concrete, and built into the wall of the fort. The story was published in 1612 and disbelieved, but in 1853 when the walls of this particular fort were pulled down the block was found containing a perfect mold of the martyr's face and figure, showing even the cords with which his feet and hands were bound. Filling the cavity with plaster of paris the model was made. One sees here for the first time on this trip the Mosques.

There are 10,000 Protestants in Algeria, 400,000 Catholics, and the rest Mohammedans. All the religions are included in the government grants, 97,000 francs going to the Protestant pastors. The North African mission has six stations in Algeria and 50 missionaries in Algeria, Tunis, and Morocco. There is an English church in Algiers, a Presbyterian church and a mission for the propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, and a number of schools. "Africa, not Rome, gave birth to Latin Christianity." Tertullian in the second century, Cyprian in the third and Augustine in the fourth were stalwarts of the early church, and they all belong to North Africa. The oldest Latin translation of the Bible was made in Africa and Latin theology with Tertullian as its father and Augustine as its crowning glory was an African product. Read Schaff's Church History, vol. 2:26, vol. 3, 988. The success of the church in this region was a marvel. At the council of Carthage, the spot we are just passing this Sunday morning, Feb. 25, as I write, A. D. 253, there were no less than 87 bishops present and an equal number of presbyters. There were 580 sees between Syrene and the Atlantic. The last bishop of Hippo was Augustin. With the fall of that city into the hands of the vandals came the desolation of this fair garden of Christianity into a barren wilderness. Why was this permitted? Was it to give to all time an object lesson of the infinite superiority of the Christian religion? Certain it is this contrast is most striking in Algiers, and the Church of Christ should redeem its ancient possessions. Do we owe no obligation to these millions on the northern border of the dark continent? Is there no duty pressing to follow here, in all this great mysterious land, in the footsteps of Moffat, Stanley and Livingstone?

Song in Evangelism.

to make the good confession more formally and committing himself to the service of the Christ.

The evangelistic service is not the place for operatic performances. Artistic singing in evangelistic services is altogether appropriate, and trained singers can render better service than those who are untrained, but we have not yet arrived at that point where we can afford to "suspend the worship of almighty God to listen to a performance by the quartet." It is irrelevant, nay, irreverent, and detracts from the real dignity of the occasion, and introduces an element of discord that is fatal to the best results. Thoughtful and devoted men and women go to church to be inspired, and they enjoy what is conducive to spirituality. It is exceedingly distasteful to be made to feel that one, instead of being in the house of God, is in the playhouse.

Let evangelistic singing continue, for to it is certainly due no small share of our phenomenal success in winning souls. Let the music of our evangelistic meetings be conducted by men and women of blameless lives and of earnest devotion and by those fitted by nature and by culture for this most important work. Let the music of the service be inspiring, but always worshipful and dignified, and in keeping with the momentous issues of the occasion, for it is a time when souls are trembling in the balances. It were well for us to give more thought to the history of church music and to know the men and women who have written our best songs and composed our most beautiful tunes. Our zeal for evangelistic singing should be according to knowledge. We need very many trained men and women to do this work. Our singing evangelists are worthy of more than a passing notice. To them belongs much of the success of our best meetings. We need many more of them. Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that young men and women gifted with voices for sweet song may consecrate their talent to him who has inspired that which is noblest in the heaven-born art.

A WOMAN DOCTOR

Was Quick to See that Coffee Poison was Doing the Mischief.

A lady tells of a bad case of coffee poisoning and tells it in a way so simple and straightforward that literary skill could not improve it.

"I had neuralgic headaches for 12 years," she says, "and have suffered untold agony. When I first began to have them I weighed 140 pounds, but they brought me down to 110. I went to many doctors and they gave me only temporary relief. So I suffered on, till one day in 1904, a woman doctor told me to drink Postum Food Coffee. She said I looked like I was coffee poisoned.

"So I began to drink Postum and I gained 15 pounds in the first few weeks and am still gaining, but not so fast as at first. My headaches began to leave me after I had used Postum about two weeks—long enough I expect to get the coffee poison out of my system.

"Now that a few months have passed since I began to use Postum Food Coffee, I can gladly say that I never know what a neuralgic headache is like any more, and it was nothing but Postum that cured me. Before I used Postum I never went out alone; I would get bewildered and would not know which way to turn. Now I go alone and my head is as clear as a bell. My brain and nerves are stronger than they have been for years." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

FEDERATION — A Symposium

Some Questions on Federation.

The following questions were sent out by the Editors to a number of brethren, and we continue in this issue the publication of their replies.

1. Defining church federation as an agreed-upon method of co-operation in those things which the co-operating churches hold in common, and in which each co-operating Christian body has full freedom to be true to its convictions of truth and duty, are we not, as advocates of Christian union, logically committed to the federation movement as the next practicable step in the direction of the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples, and as a practical manifestation of the degree of unity which already exists?

2. Do you approve of the Basis of Federation submitted to the evangelical churches of America for their approval, by the late Inter-Church Conference in New York City, as presenting a practicable plan for such co-operation?

By James N. Crutcher.

In the present discussion of the Christian union, it seems that the word federation is made to possess a demon. The thing itself is in practical operation on mission fields, and in a number of towns and cities in this country. This is not saying that a practical agreement is reached, and the machinery is in operation, but it is true that the thing we have been hoping for, praying for, working for throughout the long, weary years, is in operation as a matter of course. It did not need a conference. In many localities as soon as "our people" were worthy of recognition by other religious bodies, they were received into active co-operation in civic, moral and spiritual matters. After preaching Christian union so long we are unworthy the least consideration by our religious neighbors, if we fail to put into practice the things we have pretended to seek. Some evangelists and others would be out of "thunder," and would have to take a new "tack," and would have to become a little more like the Christ in spirit, but we could stand that.

Can our religious friends of other communions have very great faith in our honesty if we fail to practice what we have been preaching? Have we any right to ask for enlarged missionary offerings if we fail to recognize and utilize such a victory as we have in this federation movement? We have been preaching Christian union in our conventions since their inauguration, and now what is the harm of using the conventions to put into practice the sentiment thus created?

Chillicothe, Mo.

By J. E. Davis.

In your symposium on "Federation" I beg to present the following answers:

1. We are certainly committed to sympathy with the appearance of federation among the denominations, and many of us have long been practicing co-operation or federation in a way. But I must say, brethren, that we are not committed to action in a national convention, pretending to pledge our people, when we have no power to do so. Here are the reasons: The Holy Sprit and the apostles delegated all power for such action to the local church. Therefore it is the inherent power, the sovereign right of very church in our brotherhood to settle this question for itself on the local field. Any attempt to establish a side court at our missionary conventions for clearing house purposes, would be a usurpation of the powers delegated to the local churches by the Holy Spirit and the apostles, and especially will it be considered an unfriendly and hostile act by this local church here in Beatrice. We maintain that it is fair and right, that it is just and scriptural, for us to be permitted to settle federation here on the local field among our own members with all present. Now we may not be able to go to Buffalo in October as we are building, but if we do not, I want to serve this notice on those who are determined to carry this to a partial national gathering, that we will not abide by, nor be bound by, any proceedings of such meeting, and will be compelled to look upon such a meeting as an attempted usurpation of power over the churches the Lord has set free, except such meeting catalogue and name specifically what churches are represented, and enter into agreemnt, in said meeting, and by such action. If Kansas City wants to federate, or if St. Louis, St. Joseph, or Cincinnati, wants to federate, that is strictly the business of the respective churches in the city concerned, and is none of our business, out here in Beatrice, nor is it yet our business when we arrive at Buffalo. Our business is to attend to our own business, and let Kansas City, St. Joseph, St. Louis and Cincinnati do the same. Likewise it is the business of the places named to attend to their own business and not try to represent us. Roosevelt said of the Santiago fight that it was a captains' battle, and he was right. So say I in this matter; this I believe is the individual church's business, and it certainly is right. Those who want to federate, let them federate; those who do not want to federate, let them alone. You can't force them to it any quicker by such action as is proposed. I am simply crying for liberty, from both those who would force federation upon unwilling churches, and from those who are unwilling to allow churches to federate as they please. Brethren, let us attend to our own business and let other churches alone. They will settle this question locally and settle it right.

2. I do not approve of the plan of federation adopted at the New York Inter-Church Conference. Reasons: This plan is good and well in cities among our larger churches where we meet more intelligent and liberal ministers, but it would never do out in rural districts and small towns where bigotry, narrowness, and sectarian misrepresentation is still carried on in many places at high tide. Here all the denominations will be united in one thing —counseling against us. It is a pity, 'tis true, but nevertheless pity doesn't alter facts in the case. If we undertake to counsel with these people, and they unite with us, even though we are not bound to accept their decision, they would use such federation counsel as a club to destroy for years to come every attempt to enter the field of smaller towns where we have a few members crying for help to plant a Church of Christ in order that liberty can be enjoyed in worship and teaching. Therefore I approve of the plan for some churches, do not approve of it for others, but reject it as unfit for universal application. We must not cripple our frontier points. Besides, we have no right or power to pretend to represent them in such matters. I doubt if this amounts to more than a mere theory, anyhow.

Beatrice, Neb.

[We are glad to give Brother Davis a hearing in our columns. He makes just two points to which we call attention:

1. His idea that our churches have no right to meet in convention, through their representatives, to take any action looking to the furtherance of our general interests, is wholly untenable. Indeed, it is revolutionary. It would destroy our missionary work, both home and foreign. It would abolish our system of conventions, which have been a unifying influence among us from the beginning, and the instrument through which we have accomplished all our co-operative work. Our brother fails to see that if his theory is correct, then we have no right to meet in convention and our "anti-society" brethren are right in their contention. If he should say that in our missionary conventions we do not bind our churches to any given course of action, we have only to reply that the very same thing is true in reference to any action we might take in convention concerning Christian union or church federation. Its action is only advisory in either case. The tendency, cropping out there and there, against our conventions voicing public sentiment on any question of interest to our cause is abnormal and unhealthy, not to say undemocratic. It generally means that some newspaper boss must decide these questions for the brethren, instead of allowing the churches, in some representative assembly, to settle them for themselves.

2. The other point our correspondent makes is that federation is impracticable in certain rural districts and small towns. There is probably a measure of truth in this, but where federation is impracticable there it will not be practiced. That is a matter that will settle itself. As we have already said, no action taken by any convention will bind any local church, either to federate or not to federate. We are sure, however, our brother would find this to be true that, when the spirit of co-operation once gets abroad among the churches a great deal of this "bigotry, narrowness, and sectarian misrepresentation" of which he complains, will give place to a better state of feeling. The spirit of fraternity will soon spread from the cities to the smaller towns, and co-operation will take the place of strife.—Editor.]

By John Kendrick Ballou.

1. To-day is our day of opportunity; if we fail to co-operate with the other religious bodies—to federate with them—we will not be able to convince them of our sincerity in the union Gospel we preach; they will consider it a sectarian doctrine which we preach to swell our ranks, and will they not judge rightly? We are no longer a little insignificant church, and we need not fear being swallowed up in this movement. Our position should make us the logical leaders in this movement, and we can help to give it potency and shape if we will.

Any one at all familiar with our spirit and genius ought to know that we will not be "bound"; each minister will act with freedom, whatever the decision as to federation. To stand aloof and say, "We are the Church of Christ and others must come into our fold if they wish to federate with us," is the rankest kind of sectarianism, and the best evidence of weakness and bigotry. It is not making concessions to federate; it is recognizing a Christian spirit and motive in others and a desire to become one man in Christ Jesus with them. Local churches now federate in many things, and no one thinks it is endorsing each other's denominational doctrines.

2. I approve of the basis of federation as outlined in the Inter-Church Conference, and believe it is as nearly acceptable to all as any basis we could get. There is no evidence that this scheme was originated to eliminate the Disciples of Christ from the fedration movement, as some seem to think.

We must go on record as sincere in our advocacy of Christian union, or receive the merited contempt of those who will practice union, and be branded "The most sectarian of them all."

Missouri Christian Lectureship

It began with a great disappointment, and ended in a feast of real joy, for peace reigned, and not a peace purchased "at any price."

One of the features of the lectureship was the absence of quite a number of the men who are wont to be at our prominent gatherings. Especially were there absentees from the west and southwest of the state, not one of the Kansas City preachers being present. Joplin had one representative who vanished before the close of the convention. St. Joe ministers had probably a surfeit of good things in the celebration of M. M. Goode's twenty-fifth anniversary, for they, too, stayed at home. But there was a very fair attendance at the lectureship and a number of brethren from Illinois came across the river to participate in what proved a very enjoyable series of meetings. In the absence of the president, R. G. Frank, who was conducting a protracted meeting in the south, M. A. Hart, vice-president, occupied the chair most of the time.

The peculiar disappointment was the fact that Dean Mathews, of the University of Chicago, who had been invited to be the chief guest of the lectureship and was on the program for the first two addresses, was unable by reason of sickness to attend. In view of this a number of changes in the arrangement of the program were made. After the appointment of E. M. Smith, of Sedalia, as secretary of the lectureship, Prof. Charles M. Sharpe, of Columbia, read a paper which was very fitting in theme, coming just before Easter Sunday, and able in treatment. By no means was it a "waste of paper," as his little son had characterized it when he saw that it occupied thirty-four pages. His theme was

"The Resurrection of Jesus in the Light of Modern Critical Discussion."

Professor Sharpe first sought to show the relation between the two conceptions of continued existence in the development of Old Testament belief. Then he took up the discussion of the teaching of Christ himself on the subject. A distinction, he argued, must be made between Christ's view of resurrection in general, and of his own resurrection, specifically. The resurrection in general in our Savior's teaching, he said, is spiritually conceived and does not contemplate the emptying of graves, but his teaching with respect to his own resurrection is different. For this resurrection he saw a twofold necessity. First, it was necessary as the concomitant of his Messiahship; and, second, it was necessary in order to the conviction of the world of his Messiahship. Therefore he predicted his death and resurrection not only as a fact, but as a visible, tangible fact. After thus giving the background of the alleged event, Professor Sharpe discussed the evidences of the fact and the objections filed against it. He mentioned a number of the theories and dealt at some length with that of subjective visions, which, he held, can not be successfully maintained without throwing away the evangelistic narratives, and this, he said, sober-minded New Testament criticism will not agree to. He showed that the laws of impulsive social action under which the advocates of the psychological theory would explain the successive visions of Jesus, do not apply to the evangelistic data, but rather are negatived by that data

Dr. Buxton, the reviewer, said there were just two avenues to eminence—one was to be a heretic and the other to become a heretic slayer. He needed a heretic to slay, but lo! the heretic came not. He did not find any of the essayist's conclusions wrong in themselves, but Dean Buxton was disposed to deny the cogency of so much subjective and inferential reasoning to the popular mind. He held that the age of the apostles received the resurrection without a chain of inferences but because of the direct sufficiency of the evidence. He commended the distinction made in the paper between the question of the immortality of Jesus and the resurrection of his body. The three thoughts should be kept in their proper distinctness. First, the pre-existence of Jesus as shown in John's preface and in the statements of Jesus to prove to the common reasoner his authority over Abraham and Moses; second, the post-existence of Jesus, his continued supervision to make potent the claim of his continued authority; and third, the resurrection of his body, whose evidential value was almost alone in supporting these two other claims. The last, he said, was the real subject of the discussion. He closed with an impassioned statement that the resurrection was the central thesis of the epistles, that the criticism of Hume was met by the divine measure of evidence when the witnesses gave their lives as the seal of their testimony, and that these records are so interwoven with Roman literature and life that the last four centuries of Roman history are almost a synonym for the first four centuries of Christian history. Dr. Buxton, who, at the outset had given his hearers warning that he had stopped the college bell, spoke for just half an hour without notes. His presentation of the subject was decidedly original, but for some of his hearers perhaps hard to follow.

A Free Parliament.

An interesting discussion followed. E. M. Richmond suggested that the miracle was in the death of Christ and not so much in the resurrection, which was an imperious necessity and simply "a restoration of the natural order of things." J. H. Hardin made the point that the resurrection is involved in the great fact of all life. J. M. Philputt wanted to know what relation our resurrection has to that of Christ. E. J. Lampton said death wronged Christ, and as justice must triumph, there must be a resurrection of the dead. J. H. Garrison found the paper very refreshing after wading through Professor Foster's recent book, wherein, he said, everything in the Bible that hurts his argument is "eliminated." He believed, with Paul, that to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord. F. N. Calvin quoted a number of passages of Scripture, and asked whether Paul did not argue that in some way the body that goes down to the grave is to be changed. Levi Marshall said there is no view that can be held by the human mind that is not vulnerable by some passage of Scripture. W. T. Moore thought Paul settled the question where he speaks of the seed germinating. He believed that in some way it would be the same body, though not the same. Professor Sharpe, in his reply, said that the common people are not particularly interested in these scholastic discussions, but he thought we needed to appreciate the consciousness of Jesus, and that was why he took up so much time in showing Christ's view.

Fiction and Religion.

George A. Campbell, of Chicago, who was the lecturer chosen from the outside of the state, read a paper on "Religious Novels," being a portion of a general paper on "Fiction and Character." It was rather sketchy, and while interesting, it by no means convinced the hearer that the writer has mastered literature, as in a subsequently presented paper he showed he had the religion of the Chicago working man. He began with the hardly to be questioned assertion that the novel is now the dominant form of literature. After saying that books that are morally bad, or that lack proportion, are to be shunned in our discrimination, he selected the "Cloister and the Hearth" and "John Inglesant" as types of good novels. A danger to which the religious novelist is subject, he said, is that he may give out as finalities what are merely the tentative beliefs of scholars and investigators. Passing on to characterize several groups of writers who discuss the failures of Churchianity, or reflect the "new ideas," or are advocates of theism or voice agnosticism, he expressed the conviction that the great epoch-making note of reconstruction has not yet been uttered. George MacDonald. a novelist whom every preacher ought to read, he said, was one of the most typical writers of the border period, while Mr. Campbell had a good word, also, for Guy Thorne.

In the absence of the reviewer, A. W. Kokendoffer, his paper was read by Mr. Hart. It was short and well worded, but rather stressed the bad side of fiction. As to the permanency of the novel, he found this due, first, to commercialism, but a reason closely second is the universal demand. This he associated with the growing tendency for entertainment in all walks of life—"a strike at the pillars of empire." He feared that the tons of fiction are not morally persuasive enough to whet the esthetic taste or to buttress the conscience as the age needs it done. While admitting that some fiction has good qualities and that this helps, the general trend of the reviewer's paper seemed antagonistic to the cultivation of fiction. He did not favor the preacher taking the novel into the pulpit, but advocated his proffering his services to his young people in the selection of books.

There was but little discussion of the paper. In closing it Mr. Campbell seemed to take the position that the desire for entertainment is really a cry for the spiritual. One point he made is worthy of emphasis, namely, that the novelist who can picture clearly to a young girl the character of a villain often does more for her than the average parent does.

The Old Testament and Criticism.

The session devoted to "The Geographical and Historical Setting of the Old Testament" was filled by two lengthy papers. Roland G. Sears, professor of Semitic languages and history at Christian University, presented the original paper, which it is almost impossible to attempt to summarize. In dealing with the subject he showed that Palestine was the bridge, or buffer state, between the valleys of the Euphrates and Tigris rivers on the one side and the Nile on the other. Because of this situation, the Old Testament would be more or less colored by contact with the peoples along these rivers. Many references were given to prove this. A somewhat minute description of the geographical divisions of Palestine was given, illustrated by a map and historical charts. There was nothing to take exception to in this part of the paper, which throughout showed patient investigation and a great deal of work. In discussing the historical setting Professor Sears showed how Israel and Judah had to contend with the effect of the life and religion of their neighbors. This was illustrated by references to Phenicia, Moab, Syria, Egypt, etc. Linguistic and historical reasons were advanced why the story of Jephthah's sacrificing his daughter was true to and in keeping with his times. In reference to the matter of contemporaneous history, reference was made to the Tel-el-Amarna letters and the code of Hammurabi. Professor Sears deduced arguments from this and from other finds in Assyria to show how the facts of the Bible were corroborated. He spent some time upon Aramaic, Syriac, Arabic and Assyrian words to show their relation to the Hebrew tongue, and how the study of the Semitic languages, history and geography was absolutely necessary to an understanding of the history and prophecy of the Old Testament. Lastly, he dwelt upon quotations in the New Testament from the Old, which seemed to vary to a great extent in many passages. This variation, he said, might be due to the relation of the Hebrews and the Aramens in addition to the differences brought brought about by the translation.

A Philosophical Background.

W. T. Moore did not attempt any critical review of Professor Sears' paper, but sought to find a philosophical background in which the historical facts of the Old Testament history are set. We can mention in the limited space at our disposal but one or two of the points he touched upon in a fifty-minutes' paper. He sought to show by argument and illustration that the creation drama has been reproduced again and again in the history of the earth and of man, and out of these considerations formulated three laws which help to an understanding of the historical setting of the Old Testament Scriptures: (1) physical facts must be dealt with when we are studying the providence of God in his dealings with his creatures; (2) progress is practically impossible where life does not come into contact with new elements and where these new elements are not in some way appropriated so as to become an added force in the evolutionary processes; (3) evolution of good is often seemingly hindered by the opposition of evil, yet this opposition makes for the final highest development of the good. As regards the records of the book of Genesis, Dr. Moore's theory was that the earlier records were kept in the hands of the antediluvians and were brought over the deluge by Noah and his family, and when the confusion of languages took place at Babel these records continued in the hands of Shem and his children as the line through which the Messiah would come.

The reasonable orthodoxy of the Bible College at Columbia, Mo., being thus demonstrated by the papers of Professor Sharpe and Dr. Moore, and Canton's position being unquestioned, it was rather surprising to find Simpson Ely subsequently alleging, when he was called down by the chairman's bell, that no one who had a word to say against Higher Criticism could get a hearing. As a matter of fact, so little was said that could be construed as radical criticism that Dr. Philputt made a protest lest the lectureship should put itself on record as being wholly against the historical method. He advocated the use of common sense and open minds. One brother in attendance thought Christ settled the authorship of every portion of the book of Isaiah. J. H. Hardin was impressed by the need for preachers to get down to study, and read the new books. Professor Sears admitted he was in favor of the method of historical criticism, but the question of Isaiah's authorship was settled for him by Christ.

"Federation."

It is only just to say that the chief interest of this lectureship centered in the meeting on Wednesday night when J. H. Garrison was programmed for a paper on "The Present Phase of the Christian Union Problem." In view of the current discussion of federation it was expected that there would be "lively times" at this session. No provision had been made for discussion, but it was tacitly assumed that this would be allowed, and indeed, several of the brethren made it apparent during the course of the previous sessions that they were itching to say some things when the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST had had his innings. But when it was all over, I could not help recalling the lines,

> "How calm and beautiful comes on
> The stilly hour when storms are gone."

The devotional service of the afternoon had its effect and all minds and hearts were prepared to listen to the message which Bro. Garrison brought. If there was any misunderstanding, any tendency to acrimony or bitter debate, it was removed by the clear-cut presentation of a living issue and the emphatic utterances of the speaker as to his present belief in the aims and principles of our restoration movement. "Peace rules the day where reason rules the mind." A fair percentage of the large audience needed no new conviction of the speaker's soundness in the faith and aims of the Campbellian movement, yet there was a large number of people present who, through lack of knowledge, misunderstanding or prejudice, were unfavorable to the supposed views of Bro. Garrison. Before the meeting was closed these were, for the most part, if not entirely convinced of the wisdom of federation, at least won over to the favorable consideration of further investigation of the subject in a fraternal spirit, and the absolute folly of supposing that the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has any design, or even wish, to sell out at this time of his life the plea which he has advocated for so many years. I shall not attempt any consecutive outline of his address. He made a strong plea, which was loudly cheered, for liberty and union, and said that no such meeting as the New York Conference, which he described as intended to present a united church to the world, the flesh and the devil, had met since Pentecost. He mentioned a number of incidents of the conference, and thrilled his hearers by telling how there was but one solitary vote for the lowering of the banner of Christ when it was suggested that the word "divine" should be stricken out, and an immense gathering sprang to its feet to burst forth in "Crown Him Lord of All." As for himself, he did not believe that a single New Testament principle is to be sacrificed, and no union was worth anything where conscience is sacrificed, but we could not ask others to do what we ourselves refuse to do, namely, surrender honest convictions of truth for the sake of unity; hence the policy of closer co-operation is needed, and as a people we must work in the light of this fact which is not only demanded in the interests of Christian union, but by the imperative needs of the world and by the stupendous tasks which Christ has laid upon his church.

Immediately at the conclusion of the address H. A. Denton moved that speeches be limited to five minutes. W. T. Moore had already obtained the floor, and said: "I endorse the spirit and the matter of the address. It is an exact expression of the belief and purpose of the original movement in which we are engaged." He went on to say that some people misinterpret the restoration movement; that some think it will not do at all to federate or even associate with those who have not been baptized as we believe baptism ought to be administered. Then Dr. Moore, after a few words of explanation, proceeded to read from a book which he held in his hand, and which was an endorsement of the acts of one Barton Stone and some other reformers, by "Old Raccoon John Smith." "Did anybody ever say he was not sound in the faith?" asked Dr. Moore. "Did anybody ever hear that John Smith was shaky on our principles?" he continued. "If our fathers could favor a union with people who were not immersed, is it," he asked, "a sin if we federate with some people who do not see absolutely eye to eye with us on some of these questions?"

The discussion was interesting. The general trend of it was in confirmation of the orthodoxy of the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. E. M. Richmond did not think everything had gone to ruin. E. J. Lampton, who had been with Brother Garrison when they were both beardless—without a razor, he explained—said this thing reminded him of a meeting where objection was taken to a fiddle, but none to a violin. He thought no one would oppose federation if the word "co-operation" were used.

Why Such Opposition?

H. A. Denton said there was not a line in Bro. Garrison's statement that they would take exception to, yet he wondered what, if this had been the historic spirit of our people, was the reason for the present concern. He seemed to find this in certain unfortunate terms that had been used, and suggested that possibly rivalry as to who should be the chiefest champion had something to do with the matter. T. A. Abbott asked what was the difference between federation and co-operation, and Bro. Garrison explained that federation is co-operation methodized and made purposeful to specific ends, but there was really no new principle involved. J. H. Hardin thought that the tide of federation would rise until Christian union would be the issue. C. H. Winders said that all Christian churches are seeking the same ends, though some are accomplishing them faster than others, and that all are making an effort to get back to the original idea. C. M. Sharpe pointed out that federation is not Christian union, but it expresses unity. Dr. Buxton said it was a question of attitude—whether we will consider approaches with charity or reject them with scorn. Dr. Philputt said that we were now entering upon the second stage of federation and he pointed out that his sentiments in the first paper delivered on this subject at our congress in Cleveland four years ago were loudly applauded. Why should they be rejected now? The question of the "pious unimmersed" had no more to do with federation than the rings of Saturn. We had, in a dozen lines, been working together and there is no more sacrifice in the greater than in the smaller. H. A. Denton asked as to whether "zones" of work were to be created. A brother Green uttered a warning voice that our people were democratic and the brotherhood would not stand for a federation basis at the general convention. He said if our church was not divine he would join the Roman church. J. H. Wright thought it was a question of definitions.

Replying to Brother Denton, Dr. Garrison said: "Is it a matter of rivalry between editors? If so, I want you to hold a prayer-meeting for me to-night, for I need it." Then he went on, with all the earnestness of his power, to say that he had been actuated by a sincere desire to promote the unity of the children of God. He had been astonished that there had been any opposition. Think of any man who had come out of bondage sticking his head under a yoke again! Picture a man asking another, "What denomination do you belong to?" before he would pull him out of a ditch! As to the question of zones, there was no authority whatever that would keep us from entering any field, if, in our wisdom, we believed we ought to do this.

There will not be space in this week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to give any adequate report of the fine sessions on "The Common Man's Religion" or "The Education of the Child in the Bible School." A report of these and of the improvised Wednesday afternoon session must be deferred. Dr. J. M. Philputt was elected president, W. J. Hamann, vice president, and O. P. Shrout secretary. The next place of meeting will be Marshall.

—W. H. Bagby, who has recently gone to Missoula, Mont., has won the help of the daily press, and in the revival meeting which he is holding "The Daily Missoulian" gives quite an extensive report each morning of the sermon delivered the night before. He is thus preaching to a very much larger audience than could get within the confines of the church building.

—The Monroe (Wisconsin) "Sentinel" reports a pleasant occasion at the home of the pastor, Bro. J. H. Berkey, of the Union Church in Christ of that place, in which about eighty members of his flock visited him with a cargo of good things, and best of all, with hearts full of love and fellowship. This, it will be remembered, is a union of the Baptist and Christian churches of Monroe.

—Arthur W. Jones, of Texas, has been selected as state organizer of the Texas Local Option Association, and has removed to Station A, Dallas. He and his brother, Granville Jones, are associated in the publication of a local option journal called "The Lance," published at Mineral Wells, Texas. —A pictorial postal, with the Mosque of Omar upon it, from Jerusalem, bearing date of March 18, was received from Bro. F. D. Power, one of the pilgrims to the Holy City, who sends his greetings, saying: "Observed the Lord's supper this morning in an 'upper room,' Brother Carpenter presiding. Wish you were with us." Don't we wish it! But somebody has to "stay by the stuff" while the globe-trotters are "doing" the world.

—"A Truth Seeker" asks whether "if a man who has been baptized and has tasted of the heavenly gifts should yield to the demon drink, or any other evil habit, and then resolve not to do so any more, is there any Scriptural evidence that such a one can receive pardon for his sin?" Most certainly there is, for, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (1 John 1:9. See also 1 John 2:1,2.)

—Finley B. Sapp has accepted a hearty call for five years to Aberdeen, S. D., a growing little city called "The Hub of the Dakotas," and though our church there is small it is one of the strongest in either of these northwestern states. Brother Sapp enters upon his work with a proper appreciation of the value and opportunities of the field. His cordial relations with the church at Greenfield, Ind., were severed the last Lord's day in March. This church was never more healthy and prosperous. B. F. Dailey, a former pastor, resides there and, according to Brother Sapp, deserves much praise for his works' sake, and his Christian consideration for his successor.

—Bro. I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., has been out to Kansas to deliver some lectures to our ministers, and this is what he thinks of them: "My trip to Emporia, Kan., to deliver four lectures before the State Ministers' Institute, was a delightful time. Our ministers in Kansas are generally young men, but are so deeply in earnest and practical, so devout and enthusiastic in their preaching and pastoral service, so appreciative and so loyal with respect to the Gospel, that I fell in love with them, and did my best to help them in five lectures to solve their problems as ministers. I spoke on 'The Divine Plea,' 'Shepherding the Flock,' 'Ministerial Aims and Success,' 'Ministerial Support' and 'Ministerial Experiences.'"

—D. N. Wetzel has just entered upon the pastorate at Mattoon, Ill. He finds that Brother Kelly has left the work there in fine condition. At the board meeting it was decided to make a strong effort to double the church membership, bringing it up to 1,000 by 1909, to pay off $2,000 indebtedness, and make the church a living link in the Foreign Society. Brother Wetzel reports a bright future for the church at Princeton, Ill., where he has just held a meeting and where C. C. Carpenter is now in charge.

—Last week we gave an introduction of Bro. J. W. Henry, our new secretary for the Business Men's Association, to our readers. We are in receipt of another communication on the plans and purposes of his organization, which we hoped to give to our readers this week, but which, because of the crowd of other matter, we are compelled to hold over till next week. We congratulate the Business Men's Association on securing Brother Henry for its work, and we anticipate that it will soon begin to realize some of the ideals which it has had in view from the beginning.

—In a letter from B. B. Tyler, written from the S. S. "Arabic," March 28, he writes: "We are approaching Naples on our way home. I expect to arrive in New York April 19, and will leave there April 30 for Denver, which I expect to reach Saturday, May 5. Brothers Power and Medbury will not return to America at once, as will Brothers Hester and Haddock. All goes well. Health perfect. Expectations fully realized. I am anxious that Brother Power shall revise, if necessary, enlarge and publish in book form his letters on 'The Bible Students' Oriental Cruise, 1906.'" Brother Tyler expected to be in Rome the first Sunday in April, and he will remain in New York to preach for his old church on West Fifty-sixth street, April 22 and 29. He sends us a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from Jerusalem, saying: "I want you to have one subscriber, at least, in the Holy City."

—In a letter from T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs, Ark., he says: "Altogether we have raised between $1,800 and $1,900, or $1,500 net. If we had a month more time for the rally we could have raised the whole amount." It is not too late for other friends to contribute to this good work. He adds, "The 'lid' is on at Hot Springs. All gambling houses are now closed, and many of the gamblers are leaving the city. Saloons are to be compelled to keep closed on Sunday. This is the culmination of the effort which has been carried on persistently on the part of our best citizens for several years, and the results are very gratifying, and by the help of the Lord we hope to keep the 'lid' on forever and make Hot Springs one of the most restful, delightful and desirable health resorts in America." We had noticed this revolution in Hot Springs and congratulate the people of that city and the governor of the state on their determination to enforce the law, and to make Hot Springs what it ought to be as a national, and even worldwide health resort.

A Loving Cup for Benjamin L. Smith.

We have received the following letter which will be of interest to our readers:

"DEAR BROTHER GARRISON—I want to acknowledge through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the gift of a loving cup, bearing the engraving: 'To Benjamin L. Smith, from the A. C. M. S. Missionaries,' and accompanying it a true love letter saying that thus 'the missionaries wish to express their feeling of the many happy relations that existed between the secretary of the home board and the missionaries during the period of ten years.'

"It is needless to say I appreciate this beautiful gift; it would be a cold heart indeed that would not thrill at such appreciation from such a noble body of men and women as our home missionaries. Mrs. Smith and myself and our children will prize this loving cup as one of the treasures of our home and that which it symbolizes as one of the holiest treasures of our hearts.

"The friends most delightful
This earth can afford,
Are the friends of my Master,
The servants of God.

"I thank these friends, one and all, and will write them individually as soon as I get the list of names. Especially do I wish to thank John A. Stevens and wife; they planned the souvenir, collected the funds and purchased it. Mrs. Stevens planned the chaste engraving which added so much to the beauty of the cup.

"Let these poor words be my acknowledgment of a gift that I prize beyond the telling. BENJAMIN L. SMITH.

A Twenty-Five Years' Pastorate.

It is a rare thing among our people for a minister to spend twenty-five years in one place that it certainly is worthy of special note and commendation; so, at least, thought our brotherhood in St. Joseph, Mo., and on Sunday evening, March 25, at the old Tenth Street Church, where for seventeen years he had preached the Gospel of the Christ he loves so devotedly, the great auditorium was filled, from end to end, in spite of lightning, thunder and rain, with a most enthusiastic company of the friends and brethren of Brother and Sister M. M. Goode, gathered in honor of the silver anniversary of their work in that city. It was as mixed an audience as one will ever find under such conditions. Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists and even the Jewish rabbi, all vied with each other in their manifestations of delight.

J. C. Wyatt, who was an officer of the only congregation that we then had in St. Joseph, presided in his quiet, yet graceful, way, and made one of the happiest speeches of the occasion. The house was handsomely decorated with flowers and smilax. On the left side of the organ was the date 1881, on the other, 1906. A chorus made up of the choirs of the Wyatt Park Church, for which Brother Goode now ministers, and that of the Tenth Street Church, where he labored so long, furnished the music, which was very fittingly made up of "ye songs of ye olden time." Mrs. Etta Heacocke, of Brookfield, Mo., Brother Goode's daughter, a woman of remarkable musical talent, sang two solos, adding very much to the pleasure of the occasion.

The program, after some musical selections, was opened with Scripture reading and prayer by C. A. Lowe, pastor of the Mitchell Park Church. Then came the address of the chairman, J. C. Wyatt, full of reminiscences of the early days of Brother Goode's ministry in St. Joseph. Letters of congratulation were read from former pastors, W. C. Rogers, of Cameron, and T. P. Haley, of Kansas City; also from Z. T. Sweeney, whom Brother Goode baptized, and F. M. Rains, a lifelong friend.

Judge C. A. Mosman, of the circuit court, a Congregationalist, and Judge B. J. Casteel, of the criminal court, a Methodist, both of whom had known Brother Goode from the beginning of his ministry in the city, made addresses full of admiration for the pastor and his most excellent wife and the splendid work they had done in St. Joseph. They claimed him as belonging to every church in the city, that he was altogether too big a proposition for any one church to have in exclusive ownership; that here was a man who, in all the twenty-five years of his ministry in that city, had always been on the right side of every public question that involved a moral issue, and whose life of probity and truth, as well as his faithful teaching, had been woven into the very fibre of the life and character of innumerable young men and women to their present and eternal betterment.

T. A. Abbott, state secretary, and R. H. Waggener, national Endeavor superintendent, followed with brief speeches in which they claimed that not only in St. Joseph, but in the state and nation, wherever the great plea of the Disciples was known, there the power of this man and woman of God had been felt and always for blessing. Brother Goode himself closed the speechmaking with a brief address, introducing to the audience Sister Shepherd, the first person on whom he called in pastoral way in St. Joseph. The chairman then sprang a surprise on the good preacher and his wife by calling for a silver offering for them on this, the silver anniversary of their work in St. Joseph, and a handsome sum was obtained; the benediction was then pronounced by Brother Goode, thus closing one of the happiest services it was ever my privilege to attend.

It certainly is a matter for profound thanksgiving, when a man has thus spent twenty-five of the best years of his life in one place, to have such abundant evidence that his labor has not been in vain. Under our brother's ministry 10,000 people have been added to the one fold—sixteen hundred of these in the Tenth Street Church, twenty-five hundred altogether in St. Joseph. When he came to the city we had one congregation with three hundred members; now there are six congregations with twenty-one hundred members, each church worshiping in its own house. He has officiated at nearly six hundred funerals, and four hundred marriages, and none but God can know how mightily the influence of such a life has worked for the blessing of men and women.

During the time of his residence in St. Joseph our people in Missouri have doubled in numbers, and nearly all these years Brother Goode has been a member of the state board of Missouri, whose splendid leadership has made this marvelous gain possible, and no member of that board has been wiser in council, more helpful in judgment or more loyal in service than has he.

I believe that I voice the sentiment of our great brotherhood, state-wide and world-wide, when to these two noble souls, pure in life, holy in purpose, loyal in service and happy in the splendid fruits of their labor of love, we extend the very heartiest congratulations. May the Lord give them many, many years of happy, fruitful earth life, and when the "sun goeth down" may the "eventide" be all radiant with the glory of God every step of the way into the eternal city. T. A. Abbott.

What We Would Advise.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

What would you advise doing in a case like the following, reported to the———— by one of our ministers in the Indian Territory:

> "Last week I visited a thriving little town of 1,200 population. Upon investigation I learned of some 20 members residing in the town, among them one of the most prominent and influential men in the place. It was the disposition of the members to leave it to this prominent brother whether or not they would undertake to develop the church at that place. I therefore laid the situation before the brother. He very courteously replied by saying: 'The churches of this place have federated, all except the Baptist; hence it is my opinion that there is at present no room here for a Christian church.' The decision was firm and decisive. We may be able to enter the town, but this federation nonsense is going to make it tenfold more difficult to get a firm footing there. Were we to yield to this federation scheme, it is doubtful if we would ever enter another Indian Territory town. But we do not propose to be duped by such shallow sophistry as federation nonsense."

A number of readers here are interested, and I promised them your answer. Fraternally yours, John T. Magee.

Lodi, Cal.

[In the case reported above it does not appear that the churches federated had anything to do in preventing the evangelist from establishing a Christian church. It was the decision of a "prominent brother." The evangelist would have been justified in calling a meeting of the members, after learning the situation, and laying before them the matter of establishing a church in harmony with their convictions of truth and duty. If they were favorable to the enterprise, as they probably would have been if they were true Disciples, he should then, as a matter of courtesy, have conferred with the other churches, especially those embraced in the co-operation, and informed them of the desire of the members to organize a church of their own, and solicited their co-operation, as far as it could conscientiously be given, in the undertaking. This idea that the object of federation in any given town is to stop the building of new churches by forming a sort of religious trust, is utterly foreign to its meaning and spirit. We should say that any town having twenty Christians who believe in the principles of the Reformation we are advocating and who can not therefore identify themselves with existing churches, should go about establishing a church to represent and promulgate the cause in which they believe, and any alleged scheme of "federation" that would oppose such a move would brand itself as a spurious article.—Editor.]

A Thing Worth Knowing.

The Combination Oil Cure for cancer and tumors cures more cases than all other agencies combined. It has the endorsement of doctors, lawyers and ministers who have been cured, as well as hundreds outside the professions. It is soothing and balmy, safe and sure, and the only successful remedy known to medical science. Originated and perfected after twenty-five years of patient scientific study. Those afflicted, or who have friends afflicted, should write at once for free books giving particulars and indisputable evidence. Address DR. D. M. BYE CO., Drawer 105, Dept. 411, Indianapolis, Ind.

Our Last Report.

The rally to save the lot at Hot Springs, Ark., began last December and was closed on April 11, it appearing that all offerings had been received. The net receipts for the lot were $1,500, leaving a balance of $1,500 to be raised. I have received a number of inquiries asking if it was too late to render assistance. It is not, and we will appreciate any gifts sent us. We must raise the $1,500 yet unprovided for in some way, for the conditions that necessitated the rally in the beginning have only been one-half removed, and if we would, we can not now stop. We must raise the remaining funds needed, so that we can go forward with the building of the house in the near future. The total amount raised was $1,800 in round figures. Of this amount $300 were consumed in the expense of the rally; $1,461.90 were received through correspondence, and as the result of the efforts made in our behalf by The Christian-Evangelist. There was contributed by the local congregation $338. There are several hundred dollars in unpaid pledges yet to be collected from our home people. We shall keep up the rally until the home congregation raises the $1,000 asked of it in the beginning of the rally. The largest single donor to the lot fund was the Christian Publishing Company. Over 200 aid societies gave assistance. The largest offering sent by any aid society was sent by the one at San Angelo, Tex. Of the 2,000 ministers to whom we wrote, when it became apparent that we were not going to be able to raise the whole amount, 15 ministers took the offering. We endeavored from the beginning of the rally to reach the nonco-operative churches and ministers, with the hope, since we were raising the money to pay for our lot by the plan which they call the "Lord's plan," and since they gave nothing to organized work, that many would assist us; as far as I have been able to determine we received $30 from that source. Unquestionably, this group of churches and preachers of the Gospel need more missionary enthusiasm and education. There were many reasons why those churches and brethren which co-operate with our missionary organizations should not have given assistance to a cause appealing directly to the churches, preferring, as usually is their custom, to give through the organized channels. But there was no reason why the nonco-operating churches should not have assisted us. Their failure must be due to the general lack of interest in missionary work.

We thank The Christian-Evangelist, Bro. J. H. Garrison and every brother and sister who aided us in this rally. May God bless every one of you, and may you live to see that you have assisted a most worthy cause—one of the best mission fields now appealing to our people for assistance.

With love and best wishes to all, I remain your brother in Christ,

T. N. Kincaid.

Central Illinois Christian Ministerial Institute.

The twenty-fourth annual session of this institute was held with the University Place Christian Church, Champaign, Ill., April 10 and 11. The attendance was good and the program was above the average. The first address was given by J. R. Golden, of Gibson City, Ill., on "First Principle Preaching in Revivals." He was very happy in the presentation of his theme, demonstrating the necessity of preaching the old Gospel as Peter and Paul preached it, so that success may come in winning souls to Christ.

Finis Idleman, of Paris, gave us a most excellent paper on, "The Power and Place of Personal Work." Brother Idleman is pastor of one of our largest Illinois churches, and he spoke out of his experience in gaining the sucecss which has recently come to the Paris church. Andrew Scott, pastor of the Second Church of Christ in Danville, gave the institute much to think about on "Children and the Revival Method." Charles Bloom, of Rantoul, told us about "Union Revivals—How Far Helpful." Evangelist Sunday has recently held a union meeting in Rantoul, out of which the Christian Church there gathered a large number of converts. Brother Bloom believes such union revivals are helpful. This closed the first session, and was one of the best sessions of the Institute. It was evangelistic and was helpful to all who gave the addresses thoughtful attention. It was an afternoon session.

The address of the evening, by A. W. Taylor, of Eureka, was one of the most thoughtful and, along sociological lines, was quite helpful to those who are studying social questions and problems. His theme was, "The Social Gospel and the Next Revival."

On Wednesday, the second day of the institute, the addresses were: "Devotional Service," showing how much should be conducted, by E. O. Sharpe, of Winchester; "Early Days of Illinois Disciples," by T. T. Holton, of Lincoln; "Enlargement," by President R. E. Hieronymus, of Eureka; "The Supreme Mission of the Church," by A. P. Cobb, of Decatur; "The Twentieth Century Church," by W. H. Pinkerton, of Paducah, Ky.; "The Enrichment of Public Worship in Our Churches," by Z. Moore, of Taylorsville, and "The Opportunities of the Christian Ministry of To-day," by L. I. Mercer, of Hoopeston. All these addresses were above the average, and would have done credit even to a national convention. They were marked by thought and careful preparation. Such an institute is worth attending.

The closing address was at night and given by J. H. O. Smith, of Valparaiso, Ind., on "The Book Our Mothers Read."

Brother Smith was at his best, and gave a cultured, helpful address. The large audience received it with marked atention and audible demonstration. It was very conservative, and yet aggressively loyal to the old book we all love so well.

J. R. Golden, of Gibson City, was elected president for the coming year; R. L. Beshers, vice president, and R. P. Newton, secretary-treasurer. The Champaign Church, with Bro. S. E. Fisher, the beloved pastor, leading, made things pleasant for all who attended.

George T. Walden.

Bro. G. T. Walden, of Enmore, N. S. W., Australia, will spend a few months in America this year, arriving about August and remaining till after the general convention. He will be glad to hold two or three protracted meetings. Brother Walden is well and favorably known to many of our American brethren. While a student in Kentucky University he proved himself to be a most acceptable preacher. After his graduation he labored very successfully in Melbourne, Australia, and later succeeded W. T. Moore at the West London Tabernacle. Under his ministry the church at Enmore, one of the principal suburbs of Sydney, has grown to be the largest and perhaps the most influential congregation among our brethren in Australia. His work continues to grow. A letter just received says: "In the last four Sunday nights we have had 55 confessions, and still there are more to follow." I can commend him without reserve to any church needing evangelistic work. He has asked me to arrange his American program for him.

Mark Collis.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Colorado.

A convention was recently held in Denver in the interest of "dry" farming. The system of cultivation mentioned was originated by one Mr. Campbell. The writer knows Mr. Campbell and his present experiment farm in the Texas Panhandle. To put it in a few words, his method of raising good crops in the "desert" consists simply in so cultivating the soil that the rainwater which falls upon the ground is held in the soil. Evaporation is prevented by the creation of a dust mulch on the surface. Special implements are required, of course, but by careful attention crops may be assured with only 10 or 12 inches of rainfall. The average rainfall on all parts of the plains is, I believe, more than this amount. It seems indeed true, as Chancellor E. Benjamin Andrews said the other day before the aforesaid gathering, that we shall ere long see this whole region covered with thriving farms, while the cities on the eastern slope of the mountain chain will receive a great growth and importance.

The Disciples of Colorado are true sons and daughters of the live region. We mention daughters advisedly, for in no other place have I found the women taking so large a part in affairs. This may account, in part at least, for the move the churches seem to "have upon them." It may also be said that the churches have the wisdom to thoroughly follow the leadership of Leonard G. Thompson, a live corresponding secretary. They are learning the importance of close organization. Certain wise and well-known preachers in Denver and thereabouts are no doubt also largely responsible for this effective condition of affairs. The Christian-Evangelist very naturally finds a large constituency among such people.

During a few weeks of enforced idleness, the writer has enjoyed the neighborhood of two good preachers of the Word in Colorado Springs and its neighbor, Colorado City—Cravton S. Brooks and H. M. Hale. The latter is doing a successful work in Colorado City against odds. The aggressiveness and the success of C. S. Brooks goes without saying. He is a fighter. There are additions to his services constantly.—Jesse B. Haston.

Ohio.

M. E. Chatley has been assisted at Ravenna in a meeting by W. S. Priest, of Columbus; there were about 40 additions. Brother Chatley is doing a fine work at Ravenna; the church appreciates it and has promised to put an extra hundred in the collection basket for the preacher this year, and also gave him a purse to attend the Indianapolis congress. A church that shows that kind of a spirit will keep its pastor many years.——A. J. Sever resigned at Mentor, but the church said "nix" and he has laid hold with a firmer hand for greater things.——The Ohio preachers have entered a new state since the last Ohio letter. They are Raymond McCorkle, of Cambridge, and J. C. Archer, of Newton Falls. They did not resign, however. They entered the state of matrimony.——The congregation at Painesville has secured the services of Herbert Yeuell for an evangelistic campaign next January. We will make ample preparations.—Charles Taylor has stepped from the Sebering pulpit to Deerfield. The papers at Sebering speak very highly of his work.

It is now time for all eyes to be turned toward Uhrichsville. The state convention will assemble there May 21-24. It will be a "hummer." A fine program has been prepared. President King, of Oberlin, will give the Bible talks and make the Thursday night address. We are going to federate with Brother King for a few days. Incidentally there will be held several little conventions on the streets and in the corridors on federation. About 90 per cent of Ohio preachers are in hearty sympathy with this move toward Christian union.

The new Central Church was dedicated in Marion, April 8. The property cost about $15,000. Bruce Brown, of Mansfield, was master of ceremonies. O. D. Maple deserves great credit for the success of the work. J. H. Beard is at the old or First Church, in Marion, and is also doing things. In five months the membership has about been doubled and the house is being extensively repaired. The preacher takes confessions in the home as he goes about. Why not? Why not take confessions anywhere?

An host will rise up to call The Christian-Evangelist blessed for its stand recently taken for clean advertising. The average patent medicine and mining speculation "ad" has no place in a religious paper, according to my code of advertising ethics. By the way, The Christian-Evangelist is fast approaching the ideal religious paper all along the line. Now is the time to subscribe.

Nelsonville knows a good thing "when they hear about it," so have called Scott Cook to become the minister May 1. Brother Cook will take his B. D. degree from Oberlin in May. He has preached at Kipton while taking his course.——W. P. Murray closed the books at Southington April 1. He will spend two months visiting his parents in Prince Edward Island, after which he will take some other Ohio pulpit.

The Ohio legislature has adjourned. Some good legislation was done. Three temperance bills were made law, viz.: the search and seizure bill for dry territory law enforcement, killing blind tigers, speak-easies, etc.; the Jones city district option bill, putting out saloons by petition instead of election, and the Aiken bill, raising saloon tax from $350 to $1,000. Other bills of general interest were the dance hall bill, prohibiting any liquor in any connection with a dance hall; the repeal of the iniquitous inheritance tax law of the last legislature; the 2-cent fare bill; the anti-hazing bill. We now ride for 2c per mile in Ohio and college chumps who haze pay $200 fine if caught.

A large number of Ohio preachers will attend the Indianapolis congress.—C. A. Freer, Painesville, Ohio.

Western Pennsylvania.

Western Pennsylvania is more than busy. We are engaged in preparation for Pittsburg, 1909. This must be made the greatest religious gathering in centuries.——Most of the Bible schools of western Pennsylvania are in the simultaneous revival for April. Many of our churches have set their mark to double the membership by our centennial. We have established a book room and general headquarters in the very business center of Pittsburg.——Crafton, under the able leadership of W. S. Rounds, is erecting a building in this growing and popular suburb.——Uniontown held a congregational meeting and determined to double the seating capacity of their church; this has long been the desire of their pastor, J. Walter Carpenter.——F. M. Gordon, of Knoxville, is enjoying a leave of absence in Yale University. T. E. Cramblet is supplying his pulpit.——Allen Gordon has recently taken the work in Beaver. J. G. Slayter, of the East End, is assisting him at present in a meeting.——Great preparation is being made for our May convention in Connellsville.——A splendid home mission rally was held in Homestead church. W. J. Wright was chairman and Brother Pinkerton, of Paducah, Ky., as well as well as many of our local brethren, participated.——I recently returned from Coshocton, O., where I assisted J. N. Johnston in a 17 days' meeting; 52 accessions and a new building under way rewarded the effort. Brother Johnston is a fine leader and enjoys the love and esteem of a most loyal people. You will hear from me monthly.—L. N. D. Wells, Pastor, Wilkinsburg, Pa.

THE OPENING OF THE SHOSHONE RESERVATION

The land of profitable opportunity still lies open to the homesteader.

The Western frontier is rapidly disappearing, but the homesteader and settler still finds an occasional opportunity to pick up a quarter section of Government land. One of the last chances of this kind will be given by Uncle Sam when the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation lands are thrown open to the homesteaders some time this summer.

This tract of something over a million acres is situated in central Wyoming, just east of the Jackson Hole country and the Yellowstone Park forest reserve.

In the mountains, elk, bear, deer and other wild game have been most abundant. It has been without railroad facilities in the past, but The Wyoming & North-Western Railway is now rapidly laying rails across Wyoming from Casper, the present terminus of the North-Western Line, to Shoshoni, the new town which has sprung up since the reservation opening has been announced and to Lander in the Lander Valley, one of the richest spots in Wyoming, where numerous small irrigated farms produce forty to forty-five bushels of wheat, two hundred bushels of potatoes, and sixty bushels oats to the acre.

This new line of railway opens up millions of acres of sheep and cattle range, where the rich buffalo grass and gramma grass make the best pasturage on earth, curing like grain, so that stock will fatten on it in the fall.

The new line passes through Wolton, one of the biggest original wool shipping points in the world, and will be completed to Shoshoni within the next sixty days or less.

Shoshoni is two and one-half miles from the reservation border, and here and at Lander the Government will probably establish land offices for registration when the Indian lands are thrown open.

The Reservation has been inhabited by a docile, law-abiding people, who are engaged in farming in a small way. The most of them have taken up land by allotment, preparatory to abandoning the reservation, and the government is encouraging the leasing of these Indian farms, which are very choice lands, to white farmers.

The State of Wyoming controls the waters of Wind River and Little Wind River, and the State engineers are making surveys and preparing for irrigation projects under State supervision, by which a large proportion of the reservation will be placed under water and thereby made very valuable. Agriculture here without irrigation is practically out of the question, and such lands as do not come under the proposed ditch will be used for grazing lands, for which purpose they are without a superior.

If the State builds the irrigating canals now proposed, it will give an opportunity for newcomers and settlers to secure work.

A large movement of people West is predicted when the rates for the Shoshone opening are placed in effect.

The fortunate settler who secures one of these quarter sections will get his land at a cost of about $1.50 per acre, payable in easy installments, covering a period of several years. This, of course, does not include cost of water rights on such lands as are to be irrigated.

Indian Territory Convention.

The first convention of the south district met at Ardmore, March 27-29. It was not large, but nearly all the churches were represented. J. C. Mullens, of Hartshorne, was elected temporary chairman and K. A. Williams, of Tishomingo, secretary. The usual departments of the church work were represented and discussed, and for the first time, so far as I know, the ladies' aids were on the program, and had an interesting session.

The following territory preachers were present: S. R. Hawkins, South McAlester, corresponding secretary for Indian Territory; L. B. Grogan, Lindsay; J. H. Ivey, Pauls Valley; W. J. Fears, Bokchito; S. H. Holmes, Ardmore; R. A. Williams, Tishomingo; H. F. Oliver, Mill Creek; S. D. Seymore, Marietta; J. C. Mullens, Hartshorne; A. B. Carpenter, Atoka; E. S. Allhands, Roff. S. G. Clay, of Oklahoma City; J. W. Strawn, of Moberly, Mo., representative of the Benevolent Association, and Mrs. M. A. Lucy, representing the C. W. B. M., from outside the territory, were present and added much to the profit and pleasure of the convention. It was a time of sweet counsel and fellowship to be remembered with joy by all who attended. The hospitality of the Ardmore church left nothing to be desired.

For the coming year S. H. Holmes, of Ardmore, was elected chairman and R. A. Williams, of Tishomingo, corresponding secretary.—E. S. Allhands.

Kansas.

Our State Ministerial Institute met with the church at Emporia, April 10-12. J. Paul Robinson, a new man in the state and in the brotherhood, is in a short meeting at Florence. We bid him welcome and hope he will soon get settled.——William A. Dawson, of Wichita, is another addition to our ministerial ranks from the M. E. church. He is a strong man, and is available for a pastorate. Write him, or this office.——J. M. Lowe has closed his meeting at Zeandale, one of our small country churches, with 22 added—21 baptisms, and a Bible school organized. The church house had been closed for months. The entire community was aroused and started on a new religious life.——I have been spending much time among our weaker churches, adjusting difficulties, introducing better business methods, locating pastors, and arranging protracted meetings. I slept at home three nights out of 36. This is the "strenuous life."——E. N. Phillips closed his meeting with the Lebo church with 7 added and the church greatly edified. Mud, rain and snow and the burning out of the pastor's home were some of the distractions. The church and community raised $400 at once to start Brother Stuckey to housekeeping again.——W. T. Hilton is planning to have C. R. Scoville in Atchison for a meeting during May.——N. A. Stull closed a good meeting at Perry with 29 additions, a Christian Endeavor Society of 27 members organized, $112 raised on the church debt and $150 on pastor's salary. Jesse Bader, a Lawrence student, is the minister. Brother Stull is now at Hoxie, where he expects to organize a new church—W. S. Lowe.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Virginia.

H. D. Coffey, evangelist employed by the V. C. M. S., fresh from his meeting at Fairmount with 67 accessions, began a meeting in Deerington, near Lynchburg. After three weeks, he writes: "We have put three coats of paint on the house, built a brick wall under it, repaired the roof and organized a congregation with 35 members. The work on the house was all paid for as it was done, and $33.10 were collected for Virginia missions. The meeting continues." This house had been a union house until purchased by some members of the First Church, Lynchburg, in January last. A Sunday-school was organized by our people, and the meeting above is our first in that section. Prof. J. P. Richardson has been installed as the first pastor of this youthful congregation.——J. S. Thomas preached recently for Seventh Street Church, Richmond, and the next Sunday at Third Church, Richmond. Brother Thomas should give all his time to the ministry.——J. J. Haley is taking a vacation in Florida for two or three weeks.——I filled the pulpit of Seventh Street Church, Richmond, the first Sunday in March. The offering of $354 for Virginia missions was the largest in the history of the church. It will in all probability be increased to $400. When we add to this the amount individuals subscribe to the salary of the financial secretary the total will easily reach $700.——C. E. Elmore began his pastorate in the Harrisonburg field March 1. Brother Elmore is a good preacher and a good worker. The main auditorium of the Harrisonburg church is already filled.——R. E. Elmore began with the infant church in Portsmouth, Feb. 1. He reports constantly increasing congregations and 3 accessions the first month.——Charles E. Smith, of Charleston, S. C., filled the pulpit of the Thirteenth Street Church, Newport News, March 11.——William Burleigh dedicated the Third Church in Bristol, Va., on Easter Sunday. It is the second on the Virginia side.—H. C. Combs, Financial Secretary, V. C. M. S.

Good Homes for Good People

A CHRISTIAN COLONY IN CALIFORNIA

J. P. Dargitz.

WOULD you like a home amidst thousands of acres of bearing orchards, where the sun is unclouded nearly every day in the year; where the water is pure, soft and no alkali; where fuel is cheap; where oranges and lemons thrive, as well as peaches, plums, prunes, apricots, pears, grapes, almonds, cherries; where you seldom see frost, and never too hot to work outdoors in the middle of the day; where all the community is Christian, owning but one Lord; where you can have a pleasant home and an income the very first year? If so we can assist you. Some choice lots of ten acres are left.

WE HAVE ten acre orchards of Prunes, Plums and Almonds left. The Prunes are, Sugar, Giant and Robe de Sargent; the Plums are Climax and Wickson; the Almonds are Nonpareil, Texas Prolific, Drake Seedling, and a few of Ne Plus Ultra and La Prima; all these are considered choice varieties.

Some of these ten acre lots have an assortment of fruit. Naked land adjoining these orchards has sold in the past few months for $125 per acre. It is going to double in value in a very few years. We can sell you these orchards in bearing at from $150 to $200 per acre; $300 to $500 cash, balance 5 to 8 years at 6 per cent interest. The crops under our management should meet the deferred payments, interest and taxes.

Clear title, soil and climate the very best. Ten acres will support a family by keeping a cow, chickens, growing garden and some berries and working in the orchards.

A comfortable cottage of 3 or 4 large rooms can be built for $400. We have a good church, Bible school, C. E. and midweek prayer meeting and a house of worship. We are 3 miles from R. R., 18 miles north of Stockton, 33 miles south of Sacramento and 100 miles east of the Golden Gate, San Francisco. If you have $300 or more to invest you can have a home paid for in a few years in this glorious climate. If you have $1,000 or more to invest you can come on and make your home here now and we will make it possible for you to live and pay out on your home.

We want only good Christian families who rejoice in the services of God's House.

Walter M. White, formerly minister of the West Side Christian Church of San Francisco, now secretary of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky., and a lot owner in this Colony, writes thus:

> DR. J. P. DARGITZ, Acampo, Cal.
> Dear Brother Dargitz:—I have been over a good part of California and I have yet to see anything that will approach the colony for beauty of trees, lay of the land, and general appearance of the surrounding country. I look for better things than you or anyone else have yet expressed to come from this project of yours.
> Very sincerely yours,
> WALTER M. WHITE.

A resident says:

> "We have an ideal climate. Taking the whole 12 months of the year we doubt if there is another spot on earth that will compare with it. Hardly ten days in the year will the mercury reach 100 in the shade and that is a dry heat and not sufficient to prevent work in the open field. Only twice in forty years has it been as cold as 27 degrees above zero. We have a four acre orange grove in this colony that is fine."

We each own our own lots but we combine for harvesting and marketing our crops.

This is not a church affair but a strictly business proposition looking to the foundation of new congregations as an ultimate end. While the promoters are both Christian ministers yet we ask you to make a careful investigation and then act on your own business judgment.

Here is the way the Editor of the Christtan Philanthropist puts it:

> "California's great natural advantages of soil and sky and sea are sure to make it the habitat of ever-increasing millions, and other things being equal, we should like to see our own people congregating in the Christian communities where they may have such favorable opportunities of growing rich in grace as well as this world's goods. At least we have sufficient interest in this colonization enterprise to recommend correspondence with Brother Murphy to all our brethren intending to establish homes in the far-famed San Joaquin."

If this meets your approval and you would like to know more about this colony, write at once for circulars to

THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER.—Mark 4:1-20.

Memory verse, 20.

Golden Text.—The seed is the word of God.—Luke 8:11.

Returning from his second Galilean preaching tour, Jesus paused at the Sea of Galilee, evidently his favorite locality, for a day of wonderful teaching and a day of notable miracles. The former included the warning to the Pharisees who accused him of being in league with Beelzebub, the short discourse about spiritual kinship, and, greatest of all, the wonderful group of parables about the kingdom of God, including the parables of the sower, the tares, the growing corn, the mustard seed, the leaven, the treasure found in the field, the pearl of great price, and the net cast into the sea. What a casket of jewels! There may have been many other days no less rich than this in their teaching, for the record is but fragmentary. But here we have some hint of the riches which were daily spread before those whose privilege it was to be the close companions of the great Teacher.

It is highly significant that in his parables, Jesus made such large use of vital, rather than mechanical, figures. He compared the kingdom of God to things that are alive and that grow. This was not only because the material for such similitudes lay constantly before his eyes as he spoke. It was rather because there was an inherent appropriateness in such conparisons. The operation of the spiritual forces in the life of man is a vital process. It is not formal, angular, rigid. There are those who would interpret religion as a sort of celestial mechanics. But to Jesus it was not mechanical. It found its nearest analogies in those silent and gradual processes of nature by which living organisms are nourished and strengthened by absorbing and assimilating the materials which are brought within their reach.

The parable of the sower illustrates perfectly the co-operation between God and man which is necessary for man's salvation. Good soil is fruitless without good seed. Good seed is impotent without good soil. The sower exercises no compulsion over the soil. He does not compel it to become fruitful. He only gives it the opportunity of friutfulness. The old and outward view of conversion which makes it an arbitrary and overwhelming act of divine power performed upon man without reference to his co-operation or even his desire for it, can not stand before the truth proclaimed in this parable, that the spiritual life, both in its beginning and in its progress, is the result of the co-operative working of divine grace and human effort.

No parable is intended to teach all truth, nor even all the phases of truth about any one subject. A parable is designed primarily to illustrate some one principle. One must, therefore, beware of a too literal interpretation of the details of a parable. For example, soil is not morally responsible for its own condition. The good is good and the stony is stony through no merit or fault of their own, and the poor soil may not become good by wishing or trying. The bad soils can not produce good crops even with good seed. But we can not push the parable to teach that men who do not accept the word, or, accepting it, do not keep it, are in the same way not responsible. The hearts of men are not like soil in all respects, but only, so far as the teaching of this parable is concerned, in this one respect, that the fruits which they yield are in proportion to the response which they make to the vital germs which come to them.

The ideal of blessedness here presented is a high one. It is not happiness but fruitfulness. The great fact about the good man, as about the good, soil, is that it is productive. It becomes blessed by blessing. It can be safely taken for granted that happiness will follow as an incident if genuine fruitfulness is attained.

| S. | An Early Home Missionary. | Acts 10:34-43. |
| S. | Topic. | |

If we will not love and seek to save the alien whom we have seen, what assurance have we that we long for the salvation of his brother whom we have not seen?

No play on words is intended, but our homes should be as missions to the aliens in our midst. If God were served there and one another fervently loved, the foreigner would be no serious menace to our national life.

The first Lord's day in May is the time for all Disciples to make contributions for the evangelization of our beloved America. Sacrifices we make for this cause are proofs of real patriotism and harbingers of heavenly reward.

The politicians quickly teach the emigrant what he must do to acquire the rights and privileges of American citizenship. Let us as eagerly teach him if he would attain citizenship in heaven he must cultivate faith in Jesus as the Savior, repent of his sins, before men confess the Christ to be Son of God, be baptized into the name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit, and then to the faith that hath saved him from the sins of the past add more faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, brotherly kindness and love.

Few foreigners come here in quest of better church privileges or other spiritual opportunities. Will not American magnanimity give to the stranger within our gates more than he dare ask? He comes to escape the European taskmaker, let us release him from the satanic oppressor; he would find wealth, let us inculcate in him a passion for the true riches; he would rise socially, let us prepare him for the society of angels; he would possess himself of this world, let us give him heaven.

Abel's blood crimsoned a tongue in the young earth to truly cry out that man is his brother's keeper. Paul taught the Athenians that God made of one every nation of men, and told the Ephesians that those who were once afar off were made nigh in the blood of Christ. No matter what his color or dialect or where his ancestral seat, every man is our brother, and we are his keeper, and responsibility for his temporal and eternal welfare need not be assumed, it is thrust upon us by this relationship of brotherhood inhering in our common humanity. To seek to evade it is to brand ourselves with the mark of Cain.

America is the most cosmopolitan land on earth. In New York are more Italians than in Naples; in Philadelphia more Jews than in Jerusalem; in Chicago more Irish than in Dublin. In most of our chief cities the Gospel could be understood if preached in more languages than are inventoried in the accounts of Pentecost. The nations of earth seem to be congregating by representation on our shores to learn of Jesus and his religion as it is interpreted in the schools and pulpits and marts and homes, and lives and aspirations of American life of all degrees and under all conceivable circumstances. Let us study to be true, to sound out no false notes to these apt students gathering by millions and from everywhere.

HIS LAST COMMISSION.—Matt. 28:19,20.

"Fling out the banner! Let it float
  Skyward and seaward, high and wide;
The sun that lights its folds remote,
  The cross on which the Savior died.

"Fling out the banner! Sin-sick souls,
  That sink and perish in the strife,
Shall touch in faith its radiant folds,
  And spring immortal into life."

Other commissions: Abraham's call, Gen. 12:1-5; Moses sent to Pharaoh, Ex. 3:1-10; Naomi's sojourn in Moab, Ruth 1:1-18; Daniel in Babylon, Dan. 1:1-21; Josiah in Nineveh, Jonah 3:1-10; Jesus the greatest missionary, Mark 1:1-13; Paul also was one sent, Acts 13:1-3.

Many can see no further than the storm cloud, blessed are they who can already see the sunshine after the rain. The former can only hear that grim "Go"—away from home and native land and all the sacred associations of place and friends; but the hearts of the latter burn within them as they catch the glad refrain—the sunshine after the rain—"And, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

The great commission applies as much to your neighbor just across the fence as to the pagan beyond the sea, and the teaching includes not only the essentials of personal piety making us a holy priesthood unto God, but also instruction in the more militant virtues of Christian benevolence, education, evangelistic and missionary organization that will soon fling the boundaries of his kingdom around the whole world.

It is a maxim of Roman law (and we rejoice in the belief that heaven approves it) that "What one does by another is as if done by himself." It is better that one by the help of another should go the full distance to heathendom and devote entire time to spiritual ministry than that both should go only half way or devote but half time thereto. This permits our keeping the Savior's final command by either "going" or "sending." Equal honor lies in either expression of obedience if conscientiously observed, but there must be as much sacrifice in the "sender" as in the "goer" if they are to share equally in the harvest home of redemption.

Going requires sanctified, courageous enterprise; baptizing into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit can only be done through loyalty to the Scriptures, by one whose soul is all aflame with zeal for the kingdom and love for souls. But the supreme test of missionary fitness for either the home or foreign fields is ability to teach observance of "all things whatsoever I have commanded you." The teaching must be done by example as well as by precept; as much is communicated to the teacher by inference as by specification and its interpretation requires an intuition of the mind of the Master inbreathed upon only those who commune much with him; it has to do with the whole round of life from cradle to eternal throne. Lord, help us to teach.

The Master's disciples are still to go unto all nations, but unto us here in America those of all nations are also come. Ask them why they came, and their answer is, "In quest of liberty and better conditions of life." Oh, that the liberty they find might be that wherewith Jesus makes men free, and that those better conditions might be trellises on which their souls could bask in the sunlight of God's approving presence and attain unto nobler form and higher excellence! Unwittingly to themselves it may that in the final purposes of God, it is for these latter reasons they left the old world for the new. Great then is our responsibility toward them, that here they may learn the ways of the Lord more perfectly and see Christian citizenship in fairest flower.

From Old Bethany: Her Portrait Gallery.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Bethany's portrait gallery continues to grow. Last year witnessed the advent of three new faces, and others will ere long join the distinguished company.

It is with peculiar pride that the friends of the college have welcomed one portrait in their midst during the last twleve months. It is the portrait of one who, through good and evil report, through bright days and days of gloom, has stood by the old institution, never for a moment losing faith in its ultimate triumph—in its possibilities for good among our people. To this face many former students will turn with an affectionate pride as years go by, and they come home again to visit their alma mater. Hitherto, those who have been honored with a place in Old Bethany's gallery of fame have been her sons of distinction, but this is a portrait of a daughter of the line, of whom it might truthfully be said, "Many daughters have done virtuously but thou excellest them all."

Truly may it be said that Miss Cammie Pendleton has laid her heart—her life—on the altar of Bethany college. Inheriting a deep love for the college from her gifted father and grandfather, she has added to her childhood's affection a loyal self-sacrifice in its behalf seldom witnessed in the history of any educational institution. As a member of the faculty, she has shown herself faithful and sympathetic in all that pertains to student life; as secretary of the board of trustees, even when others almost despaired of its future, she remained hopeful. It is meet, then, that now when prosperity is returning to our alma mater, when the future is brightening before us, we pause to acknowledge and to pay honor to a service so deserving.

Miss Pendleton's portrait was presented to the college by the class of 1903. It is in oil, painted by Miss M. J. Strain, a well known artist of New York, and is a beautiful work of art. What more fitting tribute could be paid by her pupils than this—to make permanent her gracious presence in the midst of scenes she loved so much? In coming years, when her voice shall have been hushed in the classroom and her footfall is heard no longer on the old corridor, her spirit will linger, still a part of Old Bethany, a silent participant in every service, a presence to enter into companionship with new lives in their newer, loftier aspirations.

[Next to Bethany's great founder, and his illustrious successor, W. K. Pendleton, the name of Miss Cammie Pendleton will remain forever linked with the history of Old Bethany. We are glad to know that her picture is to adorn the portrait gallery of that institution. The idea of such a gallery is an excellent one. We should think it would be a delight to the friends of all Bethany's past presidents and professors, and of some of her distinguished sons, to furnish pictures of these for this portrait gallery. We have no doubt they will gladly do so as soon as their attention is called to this matter.—Editor.]

Letter From Judge Thornton.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Dear Brother Garrison: Having noticed some rather harsh criticisms of The Christian-Evangelist on account of its position on the federation question by correspondents of other papers and by some also who seem to be its subscribers, I wish to give my opinion of it.

I have never subscribed to it nor have I read it regularly before this year. A friend in another section of this state has for several years past been kind enough to occasionally send me a number and in that way I knew of the general tone of the paper. The same friend subscribed to it for this year for one of my daughters, and I have read it regularly since it came. And I wish to bear public record to the fact that I have read it with great pleasure always and with great profit to myself, I think.

I am greatly pleased with its high order of literary merit, with its unswerving loyalty to the principles of our restoration movement, with the sweet and Christlike spirit with which it discusses all religious questions, with the courtesy and charity it displays toward Christians of other religious bodies than our own, with the absence of the spirit of Phariseeism and also of commercialism, and with the conspicuous absence of any attempt to play the role of dictator to our great brotherhood.

And for all this, if I could take only one of our papers outside of my state paper, that paper would certainly be The Christian-Evangelist, which I now expect to take during the remainder of my life.

Alexandria, La. J. R. Thornton.

[It would give us great pleasure to extend our columns to this distinguished son of the south, regardless of his attitude toward the question of federation; but we are specially gratified that The Christian-Evangelist commends itself to men of judicial fairness, accustomed to weigh subjects on their merits, and incapable of being controlled by passion or prejudice.—Editor.]

OBITUARIES.

ALLEN.

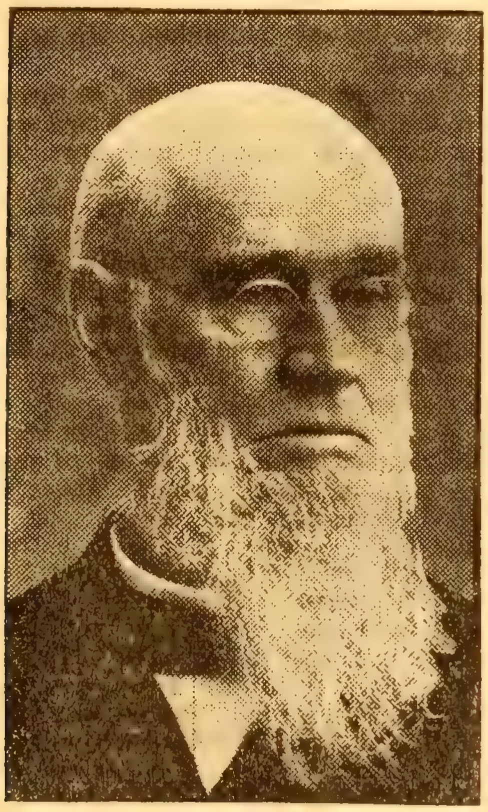
My dear brother, Dr. James M. Allen, passed to his eternal rest on March 15, in the seventy-ninth year of his age. He was born in Fleming county, Kentucky, July 1, 1827, and died in Spokane, Wash. Like as a shock of corn cometh in its season, he came to his grave in a full age. His ever-faithful wife and two loving daughters, with other relatives and friends, were at his bedside when, peacefully, he breathed his life away. Another will write the story of his life; I desire to say something only of the closing scene. He had been ill and feeble for several months previous to his last sickness, and was confined to his bed some six or eight weeks. Through all he was buoyant and hopeful, and until within a few hours of the end maintained that he would be well again. Loving friends sent him flowers in great abundance, and his sick room was always fragrant with their odors and bright with their beauty. He had written to many of his old friends and former pupils to send him their photos and when they came they were placed on the walls of his room, and as he lay on his sick bed he looked at them and talked about them to those who called to see him. There were Ben Radford and Elijah Dickenson, and Harvey Powell and "Deacon" Clark, and Frank Richardson and Ben Tyler, and Harvey Breeden and Will Davidson, and many others of his old pupils. Dear boys they were once more, and here in his sick room; and what jokes he would tell about them! It was the old class room at Eureka again, and it was fun to be there.



Dr. James M. Allen.

The wonder is that such a man could die! His physician said to me, "What a contrast between the bright, young spirit of the man and his old and wasted body! It is a proof of the immortality of the soul; the outward man perishes, but the inward man is renewed day by day." He said nothing about dying. At last, as if he heard the rustle of an angel's wing, he said: "I am going home; I am going to be with the Savior." And so he went out from us.

Seldom has one been such a lover of men, and seldom has any man attached to himself so many loving hearts. Not for intellectual gifts was he remarkable, though he was finely alert and nimble-minded, but for gentle sympathy and sincere love of men few, I believe, have equaled him. He has given to the world no work of genius, no intellectual achievement that will live, but his gentle touch has stirred to life and hope many a true young heart that has gone forth to help and bless the world.

In the sordid times of "beastly prosperity" the question asked about a dead man is: "How much did he leave?" When John Wesley died he left a few old silver spoons, the gift of a friend, and these were sold to pay his funeral expenses. My brother was no "Napoleon of Finance"; he and Wesley were of a kind. Sixty-five closely printed pages were required for the last will and testament of Marshall Field. The back of an envelope was enough for my brother's. Paul thought there was such a thing "as having nothing yet possessing all things." Walking with him on the streets one day we came upon two little boys at play. He stopped, as he almost always did when he met children on the street, to have a word with the boys. After asking them a few humorous questions he passed on. I remained behind and said: "Boys, do you know that man?" They answered: "Yes; that is Dr. Allen." "What does he do?" I asked again. After a moment's pause to think just what he did do (for through the sunset days, though always busy, he seemed to have no special work on hand), one of the boys replied: "Why, he helps people." The little fellow had struck the keynote of his life. In one way or another he was always trying to "help people." Of course, he did not leave much. Such men seldom do. The Son of Man had not where to lay his head. He saved others; himself he could not save. I can not tell of what my brother was to me. Through all my life his constant love has helped and blessed me on the way. And if there be one that sticketh closer than a brother surely nothing can ever separate us from his love and care. This bright Sunday afternoon we laid the wasted body to rest in beautiful Greenwood Cemetery, with the solemn pines and the sun-lined hills all about, and not far away the little mound beneath which lies the dust of our younger brother, Buford Allen. They had wandered far; but sleep at last side by side upon their mother's breast.

The funeral service was held in the Central Christian Church and a most appropriate and appreciative address was delivered by Dr. G. W. Giboney, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church and an old friend of my brother.

GUNNELL.

Thomas A. Gunnell was born at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, on the 13th day of January, 1821, and died on February 13th, 1906, in Colorado Springs, Colorado. His mother died when he was an infant and he was her only child. He was reared with a large family of cousins in the home of two uncles, who lived together in Kentucky. His father afterward married a Miss McKenzie, who was an own aunt of Adlai Stevenson. His father lived for many years in Illinois. When he was 21 years old he removed to Missouri, and in 1847 was married to Miss Marion Thomson, of Kentucky, daughter of General David Thomson, and sister of Colonel Manlius V. Thomson, of Georgetown, Kentucky, who was a colonel in the Mexican War and was a prominent lawyer and politician, and at one time Lieutenant-Governor of Kentucky. In 1882, partially on account of the health of his wife, Brother Gunnell and his family came to Colorado Springs, where thirteen years later his wife died. There were seven children, three sons and four daughters. One boy and one girl died in infancy. Miss Kate Gunnell died some years ago at Garden City, Kansas, and another daughter, Mrs. Marion Allensworth, also preceded him to the spirit land. The living children are Judge A. T. Gunnell, of Colorado Springs, one of the most prominent lawyers of this state, and Volney C. Gunnell, an attorney of Ogden, Utah, and Mrs. Eva Bradley, wife of John Bradley, of Wellington, Kansas.

Brother Gunnell was a member of the Christian Church for about seventy years, and was an elder in various congregations for half a century. He was a man of broad vision and unusual piety. He was optimistic, cheerful and full of faith. In recognition of his valuable services to the First Christian Church of Colorado Springs, and as a tribute to his personal purity of life, he was made, some years ago, a lifetime elder of this congregation. I think he fulfilled the scriptural qualifications of an elder more perfectly than any layman I ever knew. He enjoyed the respect and confidence of the whole community, and his relatives loved him tenderly. By inheritance he was the owner, as a young man, of a large number of slaves, but was always an Abolitionist and a Union man. As a proof of his sincerity and the depth of his convictions, he gave freedom to all of his slaves before Abraham Lincoln's proclamation.

During his long life he was associated with the most of the great men of the brotherhod, and his experiences and memory reached far back into the pioneer days. His wife was a cousin of John W. McGarvey. Erect physically and morally, he trod the pathway of life a dignified, intelligent Christian gentleman every inch of the way. He was a Kentucky gentleman of the old school, with none of the vices sometimes attributed in jest to the typical Kentuckian. Generously he responded to every call of the church and to every cry of the needy and every righteous demand of his country. Judge John F. Phillipps, United States District Judge at Kansas City, in a personal letter to Judge A. T. Gunnell, pays this beautiful tribute to his memory: "I knew your father since 1857, nearly forty-eight years. He was my client at one time, and always my friend. He was a splendid type of the old-time gentleman, as courteous as he was brave, as chivalrous as he was honest; faithful to his country, devoted to his church, gentle and affectionate in his family. I shall miss his frank and hearty welcome when I come to Colorado Springs. Rest to his noble soul."

On February 15th we sorrowfully assembled in the church which he so devotedly loved and, amidst flowers and tears, we talked of his splendid life and of the fruition of his hopes. As his pastor, I conducted the solemn services, but eloquent and loving words of admiration of the dead and comfort for the living were spoken by Edgar W. Work, ministry of the First Presbyterian Church, and J. P. Lucas, who was Brother Gunnell's pastor and personal friend for many years, covering the closing years and the death of his faithful and beloved wife. Tenderly we laid to rest the tired body in which there tabernacled for eighty-five years one of the noblest souls I ever knew.

"Friend after friend departs.
Who has not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts
That finds not here an end."

I have lost as many friends, I suppose, as any other man of my age. Especially within the last few years have they been dropping around me with increasing frequency. One of the best and truest, and of longest continuance, was Thomas A. Gunnell, of Colorado Springs. When I was a young man living in Dover, Mo., he was also a young man living on a prairie farm in Saline county of the same state. My wife and I were often at his house. He had married my cousin, Marion Thomson, and this first brought us together. No couple ever extended to us a heartier or more cordial greeting, whether we reached their home by night or by day, in summer or in winter. I remarked to my wife when we heard of his death, "We have never had warmer or truer friends than Tom Gunnell and Cousin Marion." She heartily assented. Cousin Marion was the personification of amiability and hospitality, and her husband was a man among men, a Christian among Christians, wherever he might be found. He was prompt and free to express his views on all subjects, and yet he did so without offense, because all knew his perfect sincerity; and he never spoke with bitterness. All men who knew him respected him, and all who knew him well, loved him. His life reflected honor and dignity upon the church, whose cause he espoused with never failing zeal. Such men are worth many times their weight in gold, and the world is left much poorer when they leave it. He was five years my senior, but I think he will scarcely wait five years before we shall meet again. He died at the home of his son, Judge Allen Gunnell, Colorado Springs, Col. J. W. McGarvey.

Forgiveness.

BY ANSON G. CHESTER.

For if ye forgive . . your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not . . neither will your Father forgive you.—Matt. 6:14,15.

"What is forgiveness?" was the question brought
To a deaf mute, in challenge to her thought;
Quick she replied, the while her sweet face shone,
"The odor breathed by flowers when trampled on."
To those who shed this odor it is given
To bring to earth the atmosphere of heaven.

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying, tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half-brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. Rhoda has a visit from a mysterious man named Boggs, who claims to have been sent by Mrs. Revore's half-brother to find out whether the children know anything of a bronze vase. After much delay it is decided to send Rhoda to an orphan home, and Raymund to Mr. Omer's farm.]

CHAPTER XIV.

In one of the large brick buildings in Kansas City, near the "Junction," there was an upstairs office occupied during business hours by an elderly man named Horace Bridgewaite. The gilded sign that projected from his window casement read:

: H. BRIDGEWAITE, PROMOTER. :

About the time that Mrs. Omer took Rhoda to Kansas City to place her in the orphan home Mr. Bridgewaite sat at his desk, whose many pigeon-holes were bristling with memoranda and letters, discussing with a young man the prospects of that young man's scheme. The young man had just invented a game of playing cards, and Mr. Bridgewaite was pointing out how the game could be "pushed" in such a way as to make at least $100,000 for the young man, provided only that the young man deposit in advance the paltry sum of $200 that Mr. Bridgewaite might "set the ball to rolling."

As a promoter it was the business of Mr. Bridgewaite to help everybody else with their schemes. He had no scheme of his own to promote, except that of getting all the money he could from people who had schemes. While they were thus busily occupied, and just as the young man had almost come to the point of signing his check for the $200, but was still protesting that since they were so sure to make $100,000, he did not see the use of his paying down a penny, the door opened. There came into the handsomely furnished office a man respectably dressed as to his green-check trousers, his shiny boots, his brown derby hat, but breathing as it were a distinct atmosphere of disreputable haunts. His crouching attitude, his stealthy tread, his clammy hands that moved with oily silence over each other, his little shifty eyes, all tended to produce a strong feeling of aversion in a casual observer.

"What do you want?" cried Mr. Bridgewaite, severely. "Why do you come sneaking into my office like this?"

The man cringed and said in a low mumble, "I didn't know anybody was here."

"Well, what of it?" cried the promoter in the utmost indignation. "Who are you, sir? Why don't you knock? What do you want? I am busy!"

The other left the room abjectly. When the young man had signed his check for $200 and had gone away, the secret-looking criminal once more ventured into the promoter's office.

Bridgewaite rose and approached him and his tone was quite civil as he said: "See here, Boggs, it won't do, you know, for people to find out that you and I are acquainted with each other. It won't be good for my interests, nor for yours."

"Much you care for my interests!" sneered Boggs, with a sudden show of independence. "Much you care! You, in your fine office, surrounded by riches and ease."

"Well," Bridgewaite interrupted in a soothing voice, "haven't you the kind of life you prefer? You want to lead your kind of life and I want to lead mine. Our tastes differ, but we both agree on wanting all the money we can get. Now you know we can make more by living in different spheres—my dear Boggs, be reasonable."

"That's all right," said Boggs, somewhat pacified, "but I don't like being treated as you treat me. I'm not the dust under your feet, Horace Bridgewaite, and I don't propose to have you treading on me, do you understand?"

"I understand perfectly, my dear Boggs, perfectly," said the promoter, gently. "But it was all a display to make that young fellow think we are not acquainted with each other. Nobody must suspect such a thing, for your interests or for mine. Now, my dear Boggs, did you go to Crawley?"

"Yes, I did," said the other in a milder tone. "And I did what you sent me for."

"Good! You saw this Rhoda and Raymund?"

"I didn't see Raymund, but I saw Rhoda, and talked to her."

The promoter inquired eagerly, "Had she heard of 'the bronze vase'?"

"No, she hadn't. She didn't know a thing about it. She didn't understand the allusion at all."

"Good, good!" cried Bridgewaite. "Why, Boggs, this is capital news!" He almost came to the point of clapping Boggs upon the shoulder, but felt such an unspeakable aversion for his ally that he contented himself with repeating, "It is capital, capital!"

"What's the next move?" inquired Boggs. "Rhoda is here in an orphan home. Raymond has gone on Omer's farm. What's the next move?"

"We must go slow," said the promoter, thoughtfully. "We must wait till they are older."

PART II.

CHAPTER I.

Raymund Revore found Mr. Omer rather a silent man, a not unusual condition when one is the husband of a lady who is a "leader." He was scarcely so tall as his wife, and certainly was much more compressed in space in all ways. But though he was not addicted to words, the few that he used were exactly to his point, and he felt that if they were not to the liking of others, that was their misfortune. Moreover, if he was not large in the sense of mere animal weight, he surpassed all men of that part of the county in a much more important sort of magnitude. Mr. Omer was a millionaire. The farm upon which he lived and whither he was now driving Raymund in his splendid carriage, was only one of his farms. It contained almost a thousand acres; but he had larger tracts of bluegrass in other parts of the state. He owned several business houses in St. Joseph, also, to say nothing of three stores in Crawley. Raymund should have counted himself lucky to go to work on the farm of such a rich man; but he was too heartbroken over the separation from his beloved Rhoda to take comfort even in the thought that the man sitting beside him, actually touching his coatsleeve, was a millionaire! If the truth must be told, Mr. Omer did not himself flaunt that truth in the face of the public; for when taxes were to be paid, or churches to be built, or charity to be dispensed, by some way, one hardly ever knew how, Mr. Omer escaped the luxury of giving. He was a "saving man."

In silence Raymund was driven through rich rolling pastures, dotted with fine stock, up to the front yard of the large brick farmhouse. The yardgate, as well as that opening upon the road, was of the kind that opens at the pulling of a rope—one need not get out of the vehicle. Everything about the place, Raymund presently found, was provided for the comfort and ease of the occupants of the brick mansion. Raymund, however, was not to dwell in that handsome building. The yard was very large, set with flower beds, in two of which gleamed beautiful statues of maidens in poses of marble grace. There was a broad driveway that swept past the colonial porch, around to a side entrance where one could dismount without being endangered by the elements, for the road was protected in this place by curved arches, a roof and brick walls. Raymund did not know that such a contrivance is called a cochere, but ignorance of its name did not prevent him from recognizing the fact that it must be a good thing in time of heavy rain.

At the first arch of the cochere stood a farmhand, tall, very red of face and very red of mustache and hair, to whom Mr. Omer said briefly, "Tom, you can take charge of the boy." Mr. Omer went into the house. The farmhand got into the carriage and drove to the carriage house, where the horses were unhitched. After the horses had been "put away," Tom said, "All right, Raymund, you come with me. I'll show you where you're to live."

Raymund, feeling lonely and desolate, walked behind the long, lank form which moved along unevenly, as if each foot expected to find a footing higher than the one just left. It was a gait rather awkward on level ground, but Tom had perfect sealegs on a plowed field. At the limit of the sideyard was an ornamental iron fence with stone pillars at regular intervals, called, by the rural neighbors, "a regular city fence." On the other side of it was another yard in curious contrast to the well kept lawn of Mrs. Omer. It ran down hill to a one-story frame building which was long and low, with several doors opening from the front, and no one of them seeming to have a pre-eminence over the others. It was the "Hands' House," and that was where Tom lived. "I've worked for Mr. Omer ten years," said Tom, "and all the time in that house. How do you like it?"

"It has a good many front doors," said Raymund. There was very little grass on the "Hands' yard." Here and there a woodpile had been started, and left to go to decay. In the tall weeds several disused wheels showed parts of their rusty tires. From the "Hands' House" nothing of the Omer place was to be seen save the iron fence, one small corner of the front yard, and the roof of the mansion. The hands had evidently taken advantage of this freedom from observation to live in an independent and easy manner. On the long platform that ran the width of the house, but which was unroofed, were to be seen a stool supporting a washpan, a nail upholding a bucket, and a woodbox partly filled with split wood, besides other unattractive sights. Lying before one of the doors was a brown-spotted hound with his nose between his rigid paws, his eyes fastened upon the approaching pair, and his hips thrown apparently out of joint by the flatness of his position. Close to the dog, and seemingly on the best of terms with him, were some chickens which were watching the door as if waiting to be admitted. A cat perched on one corner of the stool. The cat looked at Tom and then at the washpan, as if asking him to take it away that she might have room to curl up in the sun. The sunshine flooded the open porch. It was a homely, but at the same time a homelike, scene.

"Houndpup ain't a-barkin'," Tom explained with a slow smile; "he's skeered of wakin' the baby. Did Mr. Omer lay out yore work for you?"

Raymund shook his head as he stumbled along the unkempt path which was disfigured by broken bits of fencing, heaps of stones and rough horsetracks. Tom seemed not to notice the impediments. He swung his legs over the frayed planks and planted his feet among the loose stones with as much ease as if treading a Brussels carpet. He said, "You are to take keer of the baby."

Raymund gasped. "Me?"

"Yes. So I won't be hindered in my work, you know." They came to the porch. "Houndpup," said Tom, "this here is a friend of ourn. Shut up!" The dog showed his teeth at Raymund and pressed closer to the floor, but he stopped his low, cautious growl. Tom opened one of the front doors and the chickens fluttered in between his legs. "Git out of here!" said Tom, in a good-natured whisper, to the chickens. They did not pay any attention. The room was very plain, uncarpeted, unplastered, with blackened rafters above. Some planks had been put across the rafters here and there, to support burdens of various kinds, but where the planks were not placed, one could look up at the sloping roof. The room was partitioned off from the next as high as the eaves of the roof; but above that point all the house was thrown together. On the bed Raymund discovered a small bundle, but not so small as he had feared. The child whom Tom called "Baby," was about three years old.

"Don't wake up the little fellow," said Tom softly. He sat down on the edge of the bed and started to smooth the covers, but changed his mind lest the child should be aroused. He spoke in an undertone, which sounded hoarse and unnatural because Tom was usually a loud-voiced worker who could, without discomfort, carry on a conversation with another worker placed at the opposite side of a pasture. "Baby needs somebody to look after him every minute he's awake, and that's what you're for; so I can go on about my work. Me and Fred live here, and Fred—he's out in the field now. He's a good chap, Fred is—no kin of mine—an old bachelor. Fred, he's good as gold, and you'll find me easy to get along with, too. None of us is particular, but Baby. Baby is mighty particular. He took after his mother in that, I reckon. Anything suits me. You ought to have an easy time here, Raymund; you'll find us kind and neighborly, and you won't ever have to go near Mr. Omer's house. All you've got to do is to entertain Baby. I'm staying now for him to wake up, so as to git him sorter used to the look of you, you know, and then I'll try to reconcile Houndpup to you; Houndpup—he is mighty hard to make friends of, but he's a real true dog, Houndpup is." All this was said in the painful whisper which sounded something like the creaking of a wagon over a hollow bridge.

Raymund ventured, "Where is the baby's mother?"

"She and me got divorced, come now two months next Friday," said Tom.

"Oh!" said Raymund, in a voice of pain.

"Yes," said Tom, "that's what we done; we got us a divorce. We'd lived together about five year. Not quite five year, Raymund, but very near it. She never liked the farm, and the more she was on it the less she liked it. But farmin' is the only thing I kin do. My wife, she loved city ways and city fixin's, and it galled her unrestingly that our place was so pointedly below the level of Mr. Omer's. Ever' time, Raymund, that she looked and seen that big brick house, looked like ever' brick to it was throwed at her head. Now, me, I'm a pore man, and I've always been a pore man, and don't expect to be nothing else, and don't keer. I've worked hard all my life, and I know if working was to git me out of my ruts I'd a-been prized out long and merry ago. So at last I says to myself, 'Tom,' I says, 'make up yore mind to stay pore, and quit a-frettin'!' So I done it. But my wife, pore she would not be, and farm she would not live on, and especially with that iron fence betwixt her and a place so much above ourn. And when she tried to visit with Mrs. Omer, neighbor-like, and Mrs. Omer showed as she had no intentions at all of being visited in no such way by my wife, why, then, my wife, she and I, we just got us a divorce with the understandin' that I was to have Baby, for not otherwise would I of agreed. And Baby is wakin' up this minute. Now, Raymund, if you'll excuse me, I'm going to ask you to smile and look pleasant." Raymund tried to obey, with the uncomfortable feeling that he was about to have his picture taken.

If you purchase a farm in the Southwest now while the land is cheap, you will soon see grow up around you a community of prosperous, energetic men, who like yourself, have seen the possibilities of the Southwest and have taken advantage of them. This very condition, which is rapidly forming all over the Southwest, is making the value of land increase rapidly, to the certain profit of those who own it.

There are more and better opportunities for making money—for home building, in the Southwest—along the line of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R'y today, than anywhere else. You have only to get on the ground to prove this. If you are in any way interested in the Southwest, write today for a copy of my new paper "The Coming Country."

Go Southwest Now

Take advantage of the homeseekers' rates, April 17th and May 1st and 15th, and go and see the country for yourself. The "Garrison Library" ought to be in every home. Prices on the separate books may be found in other columns. Generous clubbing rates with The Christian-Evangelist offered our friends.

Yes, if members of The Christian-Evangelist special prefer, they can ship across lake Erie from end to end either going or coming. No pains will be spared. to make the trip to Buffalo an event that will never fade from the fond memory of our friends.

The ministerial dead line lies not far from the preacher who has ceased to buy and read the best books. They are as bread and wine to the growing, exuberant, fertile mind. We have excellent facilities for getting the best books at lowest prices and also for advising our patrons what are the best books on themes of current interest.

What is more apropos right now than J. H. Garrison's address on Church Federation, delivered first at the Des Moines congress and by general request published and in attractive form? What is it? What should be our attitude toward it? indicate its scope and interest. Only ten cents a copy, eighty cents a dozen. Thousands should be judiciously distributed at once.

One recent mail brought a list of nineteen new subscribers from a western state and one of twenty-four from a far eastern one. Not in alarm but in love with the paper and all it represents thousands of friends are working with us as never before, and we humbly trust our opportunities for good will soon be all that 100,000 subscribers of the noblest sort can give any Christian journal.

A minister sends us a copy of a letter written to a contemporary that is making unchristian and persistent attempts to injure the business of this house, in which he refers to its "poorly concealed gloating over the imagined discomfiture and financial loss of The Christian-Evangelist." Of course the article will not be printed, but it is gratifying to note that men are seeing through the mask and are not permitting The Christian-Evangelist to be financially crippled for advocating the cause of primitive Christianity and unity as God give its editors light to see their highest interests.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Well, we've moved into the new hive, but we haven't settled yet. Our new house doesn't leak; we are proud to say it has been thoroughly tested since the few days of our occupancy. Felix likes it better than the rented house. His purr has come back. Here is an old friend from Sparta, Mo., Ruth Day: "I should have sent this fourth Av. S. report months ago, but lost it and although I hunted high and low it was not till my sister came home that it was found." (I find it doesn't matter so much about hunting high and low, as hunting long.) "I am now keeping my fifth quarter. I usually got as far as the first or second week, then forgot something and had to begin over. One time I got as far as the ninth week and forgot the Bible verse and had to go back to the first. 'The Bronze Vase' is a very interesting story. I hope Rhoda and Raymund will not be separated long. I liked 'With the Woodneys' all right. I have read the Av. S. page since I was 7 years old. I always watch for Drusie's letters. We have three cats, Tiger, Topsy and Napoleon Bonaparte. We named the last after the horse in 'A Week With the Woodneys,' when it was a kitten; and we call it Bony. How does Felix like Arkansas, now?" (He is greatly pleased, and would be more so if he could carry an umbrella.) "Why should we keep our Missouri weather at home? It has been so bad lately that we did not care for it ourselves! I have not seen a wild flower this spring, but I hope there are plenty down in Arkansas." (Yes, but we have caught and tamed most of them.) "One morning as we were going to school and our sled was going pretty fast down hill, my brother referred to 'A Slow Train Through Arkansas,' and my schoolmate said, 'Really, I didn't know there were any trains in Arkansas, at all!' And she is 16 years old, too." (My! That girl is getting old fast. Yes, there are many trains in Arkansas, but you do not see them very often. They are only worn on state occasions, weddings and that sort of thing. Perhaps when your schoolmate visited this state she was not so old as she is now, and was not invited to the governor's receptions.) "I am glad Donnie Swift has written another letter. It doesn't seem so lonesome when somebody from the same county writes once in a while. I think I will try to organize an Av. S. branch here. I still live on the farm and raise chickens, turkeys, ducks and geese. Come up some day next summer and eat fried chicken with me." (Name the day.) "My brother graduated Feb. 23. Next year I will be in the eighth grade. I inclose 10 cents for Drusie and the same for Charlie."

Harriet McCausland, Coffeyviile, Kan.: "Dear Mr. Breck: It has been so long since I wrote to you that I suspect you have forgotten me; but I haven't forgotten you; I still have the letter you wrote me more than two years ago." (You must not be so suspicious! Forgotten you, indeed! I haven't kept your letter, but there was one thing in it—the way it ended, I mean the last sentence—that I often think of; I could repeat it right now, word for word.) "I enjoy the stories in the Av. S., and I found your poem, 'The Old Man,' in the "Missionary Tidings"; and I liked him, too. I don't like to write letters." (Let me shake hands with you! We call ourselves free men; and yet when we sit down to the table with seven letters to be written, and five postal cards, we are not free, we are slaves—slaves! And yet every one who gets the postal, will think it ought to be a letter, and every one who gets a letter will think it should be longer. Of course I am not talking about Av. S. letters; they are written not because you have to, not because you owe somebody an answer. Let's have as many Av. S. letters as possible!) "I do like to talk, and if you were here I'd talk till you fled for the companionship of Felix, who does not talk all the time, even if he doesn't like Arkansas." (I am afraid Felix has more than two years in Barry county, Mo., and have some affection for the hills yet. I have been reading of our missionary, Drusie, and will make my offering this made a wrong impression. He likes Arkansas very much since he has come into his own house. If you don't think the house belongs to him, you should see him shedding his hairs on our best parlor chairs.) "As I like to read but not write, I've done the Av. S. readings, but not kept the reports. But 'I myself' began keeping them Feb. 11—your birthday—and I'll try to send them in regularly." (I wonder whose birthday has been more honored than mine!) "I think Drusie is a dear, brave girl. I am sorry for Charlie because he has no mother or father to love him. Now, I think Felix ought to wear a blue ribbon to show that he is a member of the Av. S., 'as he is already of an old-gold color,' and I send him one with my compliments. And here is a little offering to be used where it is most needed, from one of your many little friends." (The blue ribbon was received but Felix did not manifest the gratitude and appreciation that such thoughtful kindness merited. Harriet's mother adds a few lines to Harriet's letter; she says things that lose one of their greatest charms when turned out into print; the kind words of a friend with face unknown, that add happy moments to one's life.)

We are always to remember that the Av. S. is a national society, yes, international, and that the interest in Charlie and Drusie is no more a Missouri enterprise than one of Florida or Maine. For instance, here comes a ninth quarterly report in an envelope that looks like it has been slashed over with the burnt end of a stick. It is from Henry Asbury Stevens, Akita, Japan. Beulah Shortridge, Glenwood, Ind.: "I thank you very much for the prize, 'Adnah.' I started to read it the day it came, and could scarcely wait until I could finish it. I like it very much, as also my younger brother did." (That is a younger brother worth something!) J. M. Myers, Jefferson, Kan.: "I inclose $1.50 for Drusie and 50 cents for Charlie. May God bless the Av. S. in the good work." Murray, Neb.: "I am not a member of the Av. S., but an interested reader of its page. I inclose a dollar for its orphan and missionary. God's blessing upon them both! Although I live four or five miles from Murray, I send this in the name of the town, as nothing has ever been sent from here before." (That is what I like in the way of town pride!) Mrs. G. G. James, Santa Ana, Cal.: "Now that you are down among the post oaks and rocks of Arkansaw—not Arkansas—I take courage to address you, as I spent year to go direct to her. I did not wait for the first Sunday in March, but sent at once, wishing it were ten times as much. The work of the Av. S. is noble and gives pleasure to children, though they be 50 years old." Mrs. Edith Slightam, Seattle, Wash.: "Enclosed find $1 for Charlie's educational fund with best wishes to the Av. S. readers." Mrs. Dan Dick, Fairbury, Neb.: "I send $1 for Charlie's educational fund, and 50 cents for Drusie. Yours in the Master's service." Mrs. J. M. Tosh, Greenfield, Tenn.: "Enclosed find $1 for Charlie and Drusie." Mrs. C. A. Walker, Ashland, Ore.: "I send a money order for $1 for Charlie's education fund. My heart goes out to the boy." Mrs. Elizabeth Scofy, St. Francis, Kan.: "I send $1 for Drusie. I often think of her trusting the Lord and his people for her support. Let us not disappoint her." Minnie Gist, Pape, Mo.: "I inclose $1 for Charlie, $1 for Drusie."

Lillie Fisher, Dunlap, Mo.: "I have commenced my fifth quarterly report. I am very much interested in 'The Bronze Vase.' It is not raining here, but we have lots of mud and it is pretty deep, too. Our school was out last Friday, and we had an entertainment the following Saturday night. My aunt Lizzie Wallace promised me an Av. S. pin if I would keep the rules six months, and she sent in the dollar to get it with, and said I could do as I pleased with it; so I decided to send it to Charlie, and I will send 5 cents also that my teacher gave me." (I wish you had the Av. S. pin. The gold form is a pretty little ornament. And yet, I think what you have done is a sweeter ornament to you than any gold pin could be.) Carl Swift, Billings, Mo.: "After many failures I have succeeded in keeping the rules for a second quarter. It is easy to keep them after I get into the habit. I send 25 cents for Charlie." Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Bates, Hope, Kan.: "Each of us sends $1 for Charlie's education fund. We appreciate this effort for the betterment of the dependent. God bless and reward this work." Elenora Ross, Commerce, Mo.: "In hearty sympathy with the effort to give our crippled orphan boy Charlie a business education, I enclose $1 to be used in the good cause." (Two weeks ago I promised you a letter from one of our members, telling how she organized a branch society of the Av. S. But that must go over for another two weeks, as our space is filled. Look out for the letter. It will prove of great interest to all members, or to those thinking of joining the Av. S. We have also a new Honor List to announce. My compliments to you for the splendid reports that have been coming in. I said I would tell you about the music I received from Moberly. But, after all, what can I say? You just ought to hear me play the instrumental piece! And when I throw back my head and sing, "When the Sunset Turns the Ocean's Blue to Gold," you forget it is raining! I have been in Arkansas six months, and have received one contribution from a native. It is 50 cents from Millie Schnoke, for Drusie and Charlie. Whenever you see the word Arkansas in my writings, you will please pronounce it according to the standard dictionaries, that is, as if the word ended with a "w."

CATARRH IS VERY DANGEROUS

Summer is the best time to cure it when the winter blasts are over, and the soft winds blow.

HOW CAN YOU REFUSE MY TRIAL OFFER?

Ninety per cent of humanity are unconsciously breeding and nursing germs of disease in their systems, like neglected gardens growing weeds instead of flowers. Your system is like a garden. It is the natural hotbed for breeding millions of germs of disease.

Air is the agency that carries the germs of disease into the head and air passages and it must be the agency to remove them. Let the germs grow and multiply in your system and they will choke and ruin your health.

Our Liquid Spray Treatment is a germicide and is rendered extremely effective by the churning process of our perfect medicator. The Liquid Spray is reduced to such fine atoms that it penetrates every part of the diseased surface of the mucous membrane, with healing and soothing effect. It is then absorbed into the tissues where it destroys the Catarrhal germs that have burrowed into the soft surface of the decaying flesh. The system here takes it into the plasma of the blood, making our treatment not only a local but also a constitutional treatment unexcelled by any others.

I am making a common sense offer to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Carefully read it and ponder over it, then act quickly, confidentially, and be assured that you will be fairly and honestly dealt with.

I CAN CURE YOUR CATARRH

I WILL PROVE IT FREE!

Because I KNOW What My New and Wonderful Discovery Has Already Done for Hundreds—will Do for You—I will cheerfully and willingly send a full Treatment to you, Prepaid, Absolutely FREE, for TEN DAYS' TRIAL.

I offer what is really a Blessing to sufferers from Catarrh—Head, Bronchial and Throat troubles.

A new and wonderful medical discovery that cures by striking right at the root and cause of the disease—by KILLING THE GERMS.

A CURE for YOU, no matter what bad shape you are in.

Now I do not ask you to take my word nor that of the cured hundreds. Instead, I want you to try this treatment, entirely at my personal risk, at my expense. Just say the word, and I will send the treatment to you, without pay or promise on your part. If, at the end of ten days' treatment, you do not feel like a new being, if you do not honestly bless the day that you answered this advertisement, simply return the treatment to me. You are nothing out. Isn't that a fair and honorable offer? Your word decides it; I fully trust and believe you.

My afflicted friend, do not suffer longer from this cruel disease, Catarrh. Don't drag out a miserable existence, a curse to yourself, a nuisance to those around you. Don't let down the bars to more dangerous disease. (CONSUMPTION MOST FREQUENTLY STARTS IN CATARRH.)

My new treatment is applied direct. No drugs to swallow; its application is a pleasure. As if by magic, it stops the hawking, spitting, sniffing and snuffing, relieves the maddening head noises; does away with the nauseating dropping of mucus into the throat; the queer, stuffy and oppressed feeling of the head; the painful burning and smarting of the air passages. Soothes and heals the irritated membranes, and leaves the head CLEAR AS A BELL.

It is a folly to take medicine into the stomach to kill the germs of Catarrh in the head.

Air was the agency that carried the germs of disease there, and it must be the agency to remove them.

My treatment positively cures Catarrh, Asthma, Head Colds, Pains and Roaring in the Head, Bronchitis. Sore Throat, Headache, Partial Deafness, La Grippe and all diseases of the air passages by a patented method of dry inhalation.

The treatment is easily carried with you; may be used anywhere, at any time.

Read what grateful persons write:

"Your treatment has done me more good in three days than all others I have used in a lifetime." —J. D. S. ATKINS, Durham, N. C.

"After using your treatment one week I have got my hearing back, which I thought was lost forever."—REV. ALBERT EGLI, Elgin, Ill.

"I have been using your Medicator three weeks and would not take $1,000 for it if I could not get another. I can sing again, something I have not done for two years."—MINNIE COLLINS, Hayner, Ala.

The E. J. Worst Catarrh Treatment the only Successful Treatment for Catarrh Endorsed by the United States Health Report.

Read What They Say.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13, 1900.

We are constantly receiving letters from all over the country asking for information on the subject of Catarrh and the air passages of the head. We have been asked time and again to recommend some remedy which can be used with good results for these diseases.

To benefit the public at large, and to answer their questions, we have recently commissioned our Board of Experts to investigate the subject of Catarrh and its cure, to find some remedy, which would successfully meet the conditions and be easy and simple of application. The report of the Board of Experts has been handed in, and as a result, we are pleased to recommend a treatment which is manufactured by the E. J. Worst M'f'g. Co., idea of Medicated air treatment very successfully, and has designed the neat and efficient little instrument which is becoming so well known as the E. J. Worst Catarrh Medicator. It conveys the true principle of forcing the medicated air as an agent into every air cavity of the head.

As a result of this investigation we are pleased to extend to E. J. Worst's Catarrh Treatment, the unqualified endorsement of the United States Health Reports.

should convince any reasonable person that our treatments are as represented. We could not send out our Medicators on trial free as we do, if they were not. They cost us all we get for them, and in many cases more. The way we make our money is by our cured friends telling others. Surely, when we leave the paying part all to the person ordering we are doing our part.

THE OPTIMISM OF FAITH

I CAN NOT agree with those who characterize the present age as an age of doubt. This undeserved reputation is the result, let us think, of the tendency to investigate old beliefs, old forms of doctrine, old systems of philosophy, old theories of economics, and whatever else the present generation has inherited from those which have preceded it. But this sort of doubt, which desires to know the foundations on which things rest, and which seeks to verify the doctrines, traditions and philosophies which have come down to us, is entirely consistent with faith in God and his well authenticated revelations. Such doubt is ever the forerunner of a larger and truer faith. It may be doubted if any previous age of the world has possessed more intelligent, well grounded faith in the invisible God and in the eternal verities than the age in which we live. * * * While it is the duty of religious teachers to cultivate faith in the people, it is no less the duty of every man to seek to increase his own faith by all the means within his power, so that he may be what God would have him to be, and achieve what it is possible for the soul to achieve that lives and labors under the "power of the world to come." ## WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

This department is again largely given to one of our most efficient state secretaries. The justification of this is that these state more than our national secretaries will make our Pittsburg centennial the greatest jubilee in church history. They are the most potent factors in the development of all our great missionary, benevolent, and educational interests, and merit not only full hearing in this forum but the heartiest co-operation of Disciples everywhere. Remarkable success has crowned the efforts of our California board to found Churches of Christ in that marvelous land and confer on its rapidly increasing population all the blessings of primitive Christianity. A commendable feature of this letter is that it tells of achievements rather than indulges in prophecy.

Golden Opportunities by the Sunset Sea.

BY GRANT K. LEWIS, COR. SEC.

To realize the greatness of opportunity in the west, one needs to experience life in its intensity and marvelous activity on the Pacific coast. And in the rapid and substantial nature of its growth during the last quarter of a century, southern California stands alone as an object lesson of the rapid transformation of a desert and a wilderness into a garden of beauty and delight. The story of the transformation of one single old Mexico pueblo into an active, prosperous American city of over 200,000 population within a period of little more than two decades, aptly illustrates the progress of the seven great counties south of the Tahachapi mountains. In 1870 the population of Los Angeles was 5,000; in 1880, the census showed 11,000; in 1890 it had grown to 50,000; the census of 1900 revealed 102,000 residents.

All southern California is being permeated with a network of trolley lines, and towns and villas are being tied together like brilliant pearls on a necklace of gold.

To enter this field and occupy it now means to take it and hold it forever. The Disciples can just as well have the largest and most influential congregations in these growing communities as any other religious people if we but have the grace, grit, gumption and greenbacks to get up and get in on the ground floor. For ability to show quick and satisfactory returns, no mission field in the world can compare with ours. Three years ago San Bernardino was a mission point of our state society, receiving $10 a month to help to sustain its pastor. To-day it is in every way the largest and strongest congregation of all denominations in the entire county, having, after giving off members for two new churches, a membership of 500. Within this time it has rebuilt twice to meet the demands of its growing work.

Four years ago Long Beach was on the list of mission churches. To-day they have the largest and best church property, worth about $35,000, in a city of churches, and a membership of over 400, while its offering for state missions this year is over $900.

Magnolia Avenue Church, L. A., was organized two years ago, and was for a time sustained in part by mission funds. To-day they count 350 members, and their church plant is the best and most modern equipment owned by our people in the southwest. Its offering for state missions this year is $500. How is that for a "two-year-old"?

One year ago Fullerton was "virgin soil to our plea." Certain wiseacres affirmed that the little city was already overchurched; nevertheless, the state evangelists were sent to the community and in four weeks organized a church of over sixty members from among the "unchurched classes." It is now a self-sustaining congregation of over 100 members, and an influential factor in the life of the community. There are others but time and space forbid mentioning them. New fields are constantly being entered. Among those this year are Rialto, Huntington Beach, South Pasadena and South Main Street, Los Angeles.

The Disciples in this section are putting forth their brain, brawn and bullion to enter and hold this field, but it requires the strength of not merely ten thousand members, but that of ten hundred thousand, to cope with this situation. We who are on the firing line are doing our best to keep pace with the rapid material progress. We see that the morning has dawned with a clear sky, and we also realize that we must work the works of him that sent us while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work. We appeal to the constituency of the great American Christian Missionary Society for assistance.

This work in southern California and Arizona is only in its infancy. Compared with the great work our successors will do in this land favored of God above all others, with climate, scenery and resources, we are to-day only holding the franchise for lines of activity they will thoroughly equip and use for the kingdom of Christ and the glory of God. Let us do well our part and thus do honor to our fathers, who, in their generation, so effectively wrought for God. Let the present continue to be the link binding the past to the future until "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."

Long Beach, Cal.

Our Centennial Propagandists.

In behalf of myself and others, I request that you publish your Canton Lectureship address anent church federation at the earliest possible date in The Christian-Evangelist. I want to hear federation discussed by the brotherhood in convention and will deplore the spiritual condition of our brotherhood if it can not be done in the spirit of the Master. God bless you. I believe you have the confidence of the loyal Disciples of Christ.—Dan Millar (Minister), Bellflower, Mo.

I look forward with joy for the coming of The Christian-Evangelist. Every week it gives me news from all the home churches, so I enjoy reading your paper more than any other. May the richest blessings of the Master rest upon you and your work.—Sarah Fleming, Santa Monica, Cal.

Enclosed find $1.50. Please send The Christian-Evangelist another year. I can not do without the paper. It is a great comfort and help to me as my health does not permit my going to church in the winter time. May you long live to send this paper of cheer and comfort to the afflicted.—Mrs. Hugh P. Wood, Clarence, Mo.

I beg to inform you that I have been taking The Christian-Evangelist for many years, paying $1.50 per annum for it, and as I am now out of the ministerial ranks I guess I will have to continue to pay this price, which is entirely satisfactory, as the paper is worth very much more than that.—W. Daviess Pittman, Ex-Secretary Christian Business Men's Association.

I have been a reader of your paper for many years. It seems that each year it grows better. It to me is an inspiration. Its firm stand on the vital questions that concern the religious world is an inspiration to all its readers. I earnestly hope our heavenly Father may deal kindly with you in your great Christian work and spare your health and life many, many years.—Mrs. Helen B. Holloday, Wakenda, Mo.

I want to extend my hand to Brother Garrison in appreciation of the stand he has taken for the only consistent grounds we, as a people, can take with regard to the movement Christendom is making, however stumblingly, in the direction of answering our Lord's prayer for unity. I thank him for the Christlike spirit in which his contention is carried on. May the good Lord guide and sustain him in the future as he has in the past.—B. T. Wharton (Minister), Marshall, Mo.

In a private interview our evangelist very heartily approved the course of The Christian-Evangelist on the federation question, and just as heartily deprecated the course of some of our other leading papers; as such course would ultimately lead us into the meshes of the narrowest sectarianism. Coming to see it in this light and the illogical and inconsistent position in which such a course would place us before the religious world has caused many of the brethren here and elsewhere to change front on this important question. In fact, it is a matter of sad surprise that our entire brotherhood as one man is not in favor of the proposition. The Christian-Evangelist is doing a mighty work. Let the light shine in.—T. J. Richardson, Havensville, Kan.

Current Events

The San Francisco Disaster.

The damage done by the earthquake in San Francisco and vicinity last Tuesday morning is past all accurate computation at this date. The number of lives lost is conservatively estimated to be fully one thousand. Three hundred thousand people have been rendered homeless by the destruction caused by the earthquake shock and the fire which succeeded it. The shock itself, which was one of extraordinary severity, destroyed the heart of the business district with vast loss of property, but did not wreck a large number of residences. It occasioned a fire however which spread with alarming rapidity, owing to the inability of the fire department to fight it in the crippled condition of its apparatus and with the water mains disconnected and broken by the earthquake shock. So that, between the earthquake and the fire, the city was doomed to practically complete destruction. Pestilence and famine are now added to the other terrors of those who remain in San Francisco. The destruction of the railway terminals and the distortion of tracks for many miles from the city renders it difficult either to send away those who wish to leave or to bring in supplies of food for those who remain. The buildings of Leland Stanford University, at Palo Alto, are reported to be completely wrecked. The earthquake was felt all along the coast but did comparatively little damage, so far as has yet been reported, except at San Francisco. At Honolulu some buildings were destroyed and several lives lost.

A Bar to Divorce.

The United States Supreme Court, by one of those five-to-four decisions which have been singularly frequent in recent years, has established the doctrine that a divorce granted by a state court is valid in other states only if both parties are, at the time of the proceedings, subject to the jurisdiction of the state which decrees the divorce. This will put an end to the most flagrant abuse of the present divorce laws, namely, the practice by which a party desiring to secure a divorce could remove to South Dakota or some other state with a lax law, and, having technically established residence there, secure a divorce under the laws of that state without the presence, and often without the knowledge, of the other party. It has been held hitherto that such a decree must be accepted as valid in all states by reason of the constitutional provision that each state shall give full faith and credit to acts of other states. But a decree of divorce, where the parties are residents of different states, is an act which must affect a citizen of a state other than the one issuing the decree, and it would be an infringement of the proper sovereignty to hold that any state must nullify its own acts with reference to its own citizens in order to give "full faith and credit" to an act of another state. If Mr. and Mrs. A. are married under the laws of Ohio, it is the right and duty of Ohio to maintain that fact in behalf of Mrs. A. so long as she remains a resident of Ohio, although Mr. A. may secure a decree of divorce in South Dakota. This is the substance of the opinion handed down by Justice White and supported by a majority of the court. The decisions will undoubtedly occasion some confusion, for some persons who have remarried will find their divorces revoked, and children of such second marriages following invalid divorce will of necessity be declared illegitimate. A decision of the court may have an ex post facto application, though a legislative enactment can not, for the former, though it may contain a new doctrine, is supposed to be only a new statement and exposition of what has already been the law. The operation of the law in such cases is to be regretted, and Justice Holmes opposed the decision on the ground that it would work too great hardship on innocent persons. But with reference to cases arising in the future, the effect of the decision will be wholly good. It will prevent the nullification of reasonable divorce laws in 44 states by an unreasonably lax law in one.

Lynching.

There is nothing new to be said on the subject of lynching. Even the horrible exhibition of mob fury and bestial cruelty at Springfield, Mo., last week suggests no new comments. It is not a question as to whether the punishment is too severe for the crime charged against the victims. If any crime deserves the death penalty that one does. So far as the victims are concerned, their death at the hands of the mob was not appreciably more painful than legal execution would have been. So a protest against the lynching is not properly based on the ground that the punishment was too great for the crime. But two other considerations ought to have some weight with sane people—even with those yellow governors who do not hesitate to apologize for lynching. The first is that nobody knows even yet whether the right men were punished. Two days after the lynching the injured woman says that the more she thinks about it the more she is certain that these were the guilty men. At first she was not sure about it. One can imagine how much credence is to be given to that kind of belated testimony. The other consideration is an equally familiar one which the few respectable advocates of lynching uniformly overlook, namely, that society owes justice to itself as well as to its criminals; that the constitutional provision against "cruel and unusual punishments" is intended even more for the protection of society than for the protection of the possible victims of such punishments; and that a community which engages in a lynching, in a frantic attempt to do cruel justice to a criminal, does a cruel injustice to itself. It has always been a problem how society can inflict necessary punishment upon malefactors without suffering more than she inflicts through the reflex brutalizing influence of the transaction. The cruel slave-driver who drew blood with his lash from the naked backs of men and women, injured his own soul more than he injured the slaves' bodies. Any community which permits itself to assume the slave-driver attitude toward those who are the objects of its condemnation, must suffer a similar deterioration. The Springfield mob, so the papers tell us, was not "composed of the most prominent and respectable men in the city," as is often, though generally untruly, said of lynching parties. It was composed of the scum and refuse of the town, whose evident desire was not to do justice and vindicate the honor of women, but to enjoy a debauch of lawlessness. Here the mob spirit and the lynching impulse displayed itself in its true colors.

St. Louis and the Southwest.

During the past week St. Louis has been entertaining a convention of the commercial clubs of the southwest. The southwest contains greater undeveloped possibilities than any other section of our country, and St. Louis is the natural point of contact between this great and growing region and the older and more developed section which westerners call "the east." Not many years ago almost the whole of the southwest was classed as part of the Great American Desert, which was supposed to stretch, austere and uninhabitable, from the Sierras to the suburbs of Kansas City. It was conceded, of course, that some of this wilderness had more or less value as an open range for long-horned cattle. Then Kansas began to come to life and produce other crops than grasshoppers and sunflowers. Texas was found to be more than an empire of sagebrush. It developed farms as well as ranches, and easterners found that they needed their dress suits in Dallas and Fort Worth quite as much as in Buffalo or Pittsburg. Oklahoma became civilized and settled so suddenly that it was scarcely like the opening of a blossom, but rather like the bursting of a rocket, except that its beauty does not fade. New Mexico and Arizona, rich, but nobody yet knows how rich, are wrestling successfully with the problem of irrigation, proving that natural aridity is a blessing rather than a curse, coining their golden sunshine into golden coin, and drawing even more treasures from their fertile fields than from their productive mines. Missouri and Arkansas, linked with the southwest and a part of it, form the boundary and transition from that region to the older east. For the present the southwest must be busied with the production of raw materials rather than with manufactures. Its needs are growing with its resources. A few years will see a great development of commerce between these states and the manufacturing centers. St. Louis hopes to continue to be, as she already is, the chief gateway for that commerce.

Defenders of the Faith.

A dispatch says that an Irish-American has proposed to the pope the formation of an organization of loyal Irish Catholics throughout the world for the purpose of invading France and restoring to the church the rights and privileges of which it has lately been stripped. A modern crusade against the infidel. But times have sadly changed, we fear, and we doubt whether a sufficient band of fighting Irishmen could be collected for that holy war. But there will be some people in France who will stand in constant fear of such an invasion, now that some crack-brain has suggested it, just as there are some good people in the United States who look for a Catholic uprising and a restoration of the Inquisition in this country, and some in England who suspect another Guy Fawkes plot every time Parliament is opened.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

IV. The Protestant Era.

3. Other Reformations (Continued).

We need not enter here into the mooted question of the origin of that splendid body of Christian people known as Baptists, whose American origin, at least, dates back to the days of Roger Williams. We have already seen that back in the days of Luther, and no doubt long before his day, there were those who stood for believers' baptism, for liberty of conscience, and against the usurpations of authority over individual liberty by either the church or state. No doubt these views were firmly held, and quietly spread among the people, though they had little opportunity of flourishing under the rule of the state church in the Old World, when dissenters were regarded as traitors. No one man stands for this movement, but it has had a succession of great leaders, both in Europe and America, and has been a mighty bulwark through the centuries for religious liberty, for a regenerated church membership, for believers' baptism, and for congregational autonomy.

It is unnecessary to deal with the subdivisions, which unfortunately have broken up these several Protestant bodies into separate parties and denominations, between which there has existed often a more bitter feeling than between more remotely separated bodies. Enough has been said to show that the era of Protestantism has unfortunately been an era of division and subdivision. It should be borne in mind, however, that the leading Protestant movements came into existence as protests against the tyranny and corruptions of an apostate church and are the results of sincere and earnest efforts to etablish a purer faith and doctrine, and to correct existing abuses. This fact is sometimes overlooked when these movements for religious reform are characterized as the "daughters of the Mother of Harlots." This characterization of the great Protestant bodies of our time ignores history and fact in the interest of partisan zeal. Men and women of heroic faith and courage went to the stake, to the guillotine and to the flames because of their loyalty to Jesus Christ, and their zeal in behalf of religious reform. Heroes like Wickliffe, Huss, Luther, Melancthon, Zwingli, Calvin, Wesley and a great host whose names are less known to fame, but whose faith and devotion to God were not less true, have lived, and wrought, and suffered persecution, and many of them death, in behalf of religious freedom and a truer faith, and we to-day have entered into the inheritance which they have left us. It is a species of ingratitude, of which no Christian ought to be guilty, to disregard the labors and sacrifices of these heroes of faith whose names are recorded in the Book of Life. It is to be false to history and to fact to speak of these great Protestant movements, born out of the travail of soul of mighty men of God, seeking to purify the church in doctrine and life, as "daughters of the Mother of Harlots."

Had there been no Luther there probably would have been no Calvin, and had there been no Luther and Calvin there would have been no John Knox or John Wesley. And had it not been for this illustrious line of reformers, consecrating their genius, their talent, their lives, to the cause of religious reformation, there had been no reformation of the nineteenth century, led by such men as the Campbells, and Stone, and followed by a long and saintly line of heroes and heroines willing to sacrifice all for the sake of Christ and his truth. We shall never recognize our own religious movement in its true relation to others which have preceded it until we see these others in their true historic setting, and are able to recognize our infinite indebtedness to them for what they accomplished in behalf of religious freedom and truth. It will mark a distinct gain in historical knowledge and in Christian spirit and humility, when we shall cease to speak of our fellow-laborers in behalf of Christian reform as mere "sects" with all the opprobrium attaching to the New Testament use of the term, as some do, while we claim for ourselves the right and title of churches of Christ. This manifestation of high churchism does not look any better when it crops out among us than it does when it is set forth by the older and more aristocratic bodies which claim a direct succession from the apostles. Such exclusiveness is not only contrary to the free spirit of our time, but it is out of harmony with the spirit and teaching of him whose disciples we claim to be. One of the objects of this series of studies will have been accomplished if it shall help us to a point of view that will enable us to see our true relation to other religious movements, and to have in consequence a better appreciation of the great work to which God has called us.

Not one of these movements, however, as we have seen, confronted the problem of a divided church, nor did one of them set itself the task of seeking a basis of unity upon which all could stand together in a common fellowship, even as our Master prayed. Each of them saw evils to be remedied and errors to be corrected, and set itself to the work of reformation, and each of them, let it be said in truth and justice, has made a distinct contribution to the return of the church from its Romish captivity to its original purity and conformity to Scriptural rule.

"The Finality of the Christian Religion."*

This volume is not easy reading. Its large use of technical terms, and its frequent discursions into the realms of philosophical speculation, practically take it out of reach of the average reader. We have laboriously persevered through the volume with the view of being in a position to advise our readers concerning it, many of whom will be asking whether it would be worth while to read it. To all such inquirers we would candidly answer, no. Not that we think it dangerous; its clear and final rejection of facts and truths imbedded in New Testament history relieves it from any charge of being an insidious attack on Christianity. It makes a clear-cut issue with New Testament Christianity. If the New Testament record is only reasonably trustworthy Professor Foster's book is false in its method of reasoning and its conclusions. If his book be true the New Testament, as history, may be remanded to the theological scrap pile.

The one presupposition that controls all Professor Foster's reasoning is that the supernatural element in Christianity must be eliminated, seeing that science and philosophy have overthrown the possibility of the supernatural. Of course this excludes the deity of Christ and all his alleged miracles, and Professor Foster does not shrink from the logic of his premises. It is sad havoc this makes with the New Testament record, and there is little ground left, when he is through, on which to vindicate the honesty of the men who companied with Jesus and who have left us, as was supposed, their testimony concerning him whom they called Master.

Of course Professor Foster does not admit that Christianity has been overthrown. Like Professor Harnack, and Wernle, Professor Foster would "disengage" the "essence" of Christianity from its "historic shell" in order that men of science and philosophy may still believe in it. But when the historic shell or wrapping has been stripped off from "essential" Christianity, there is no miracle, no bodily resurrection of Christ, no atonement, no ordinance, no church of his founding, but only a few general principles and lofty ideals. If Professor Foster sees that this remnant is ill fitted to meet the real needs of men here in the world, there is no hint of it in his book, as we now recall. A purely human Christ could not, of course, be expected to anticipate and provide for the religious needs of men in all coming time.

We must give Professor Foster credit for a clever piece of criticism against "Naturalism"—the materialistic phase of science that ignores the spiritual in man and the spiritual world. He points out very clearly its limitations and its inadequacy to account for spiritual phenomena. For Professor Foster believes in a suprahuman world even though he reject the supernatural; in a spiritual world above the material. And yet he can not conceive of the possibility of this spiritual realm's controlling the material, in any way not discovered by human science and philosophy, which are as yet necessarily imperfect.

No one can deny Professor Foster's keenness as a thinker, nor his wide reading and masterful summing up of the results of various systems of thought. His courage and honesty of conviction are not here questioned. But he seems to us a man who is lost in a world of abstract theories and ideas, and needs to come in contact with solid facts, with the practical needs of men, and above all, to receive the kingdom of heaven as a little child, trusting God when he can not see all the way. We feel sure that many things which Professor Foster regards as having been overthrown will be found standing and exerting a beneficent influence on mankind long after his "little system" of philosophy has had its day and ceased to be.

"True to the Original Purpose."

"Thorp Spring, Tex.

"My Dear Brother—You are right, and these are the true words, 'Standing true to the original purpose of our reformatory movement.' Does any one among us believe that the fathers of this reformation would not have welcomed with joy such an opportunity as the present one for co-operation among the Protestant religious bodies? If he does he needs to go back and study more carefully the real purpose and spirit of those fathers. Addison Clark."

"March 31, 1906."

These words strike the real keynote of what The Christian-Evangelist is seeking to accomplish. Our sincere desire is to see our religious movement held true to its original aim. That there has been a wide departure from the spirit which originated this movement, on the part of many among us, must be manifest to all who have followed recent discussions. With many, that large, free spirit which characterized our fathers in the beginning when they were seeking the true and catholic basis of unity upon which all Christians could unite, and which was quick to utilize every opportunity for making known this basis to their brethren in other religious folds, has given place to a different aim and a narrower spirit. This is not true of the real leaders of our movement, who still cherish the ideals of the fathers and who are not to be diverted by any appeals to passion or prejudice from our real mission in the world, as a force working for the unification of Christendom. But many have been led astray, and it should be the highest aim of all men of influence among us to neutralize these hurtful and divisive tendencies and to remove the misconceptions and evil suspicions which are alienating a number of good people from their brethren and from our real mission in the world.

Brother Clark is right in saying we "need to go back and study more carefully the real purpose and spirit of the fathers." And this is just what many are now doing, and it is what The Christian-Evangelist proposes to help them do. No revival would do more to give fresh impetus to our cause than a revival of the spirit of unity which actuated the leaders of this movement.

In the light of our past history we have no doubt but that the great majority of the brethren will in time be brought to see eye to eye on the questions which have been made the occasion of the present disturbance, but meantime, much harm will have been done, much energy will have been expended in wrong directions, our influence as a Christian union movement will have suffered, and our work be greatly hindered. But such has been the zigzag course of history. It is a time for patience, for prayer, for self-examination, and for uncompromising firmness in standing for the highest and the truest ideals. In a word, we must stand "true to the original purpose of our reformatory movement," which is a movement within Christ's church to heal its divisions by a return in faith, doctrine and life to New Testament Christianity.

Notes and Comments.

The appalling catastrophe of earthquake and fire which has visited the city of San Francisco and other towns along the coast is such as to call forth the profoundest sympathy, as well as practical aid, from all sections of the United States. It is sure to do this. No city in the Union has ever suffered serious disaster that has not received substantial aid from all its sister cities throughout the country. It is impossible at this writing to ascertain with any accuracy the loss which has been sustained, but enough is known to assure us that thousands of people are homeless and will be dependent upon assistance from the outside to shelter and feed them for some time to come. In the presence of these great elemental forces which carry such devastation of property and of human life in their pathway, any man stands overwhelmed and awe-stricken. It is a fresh illustration of how close the unseen world lies upon the borders of the seen, and how unexpectedly death may summon multitudes of people into the presence of the great Judge. What a frail and uncertain thing is our human life! How little worth living it would seem to be, without the assurance of that spiritual world in which these disasters of time and of flesh do not enter! Let us do what in us lies to care for the destitute and the wounded, to comfort the bereaved, to strengthen the hands and the hearts of those who have been bereft of fortune, and in every way to alleviate the sorrow and distress which have befallen these cities and towns on the coast which have been visited by these destructive forces.

A very interesting kind of federation meeting was held at the Union Avenue Christian church on Wednesday evening, April 18. The Fountain Park Congregational Church united with that congregation in a union prayer-meeting service which terminated in a baptismal service in which the Congregational minister baptized three of his members in the baptistry of the Union Avenue Church. Brother Philputt led the service, and Brother Toomey, pastor of the Congregational church, made a talk on the Scripture lesson. At the close of the prayer-meeting, Brother Philputt read a passage from the sixth of Romans, and Brother Toomey buried his candidates in baptism after the original custom, saying, as he stood in the water, before pronouncing the formula, "It is enough that the servant should be as his Master." There was a large audience and it was a delightful service.

Referring to the above incident, which is not an uncommon one, why would it not be an excellent idea for the churches which profess to give liberty of choice to candidates as to how they will be baptized to prepare a baptistry in their churches and baptize their candidates, who request immersion, in their own buildings? This would only be in harmony with their claim to give perfect freedom of choice. If this were done the object lesson in itself would soon do the rest. In some such way, perhaps, the baptismal problem is to be solved. It will never be done by debating the question.

Ernest E. Crawford, minister of the little church at Albuquerque, has issued a card, on the front of which is the name and location of the church, and the hours of service, with name and residence of minister, and on the opposite side the following excellent statement of the position and aim of the people with whom he and his church are identified:

> "We believe in God the Father, whose name and nature is Love; we believe his nature and his attitude toward men were perfectly manifested in the life of his first born Son, Jesus the Christ, the Elder Brother of all humanity; we believe in the ever present Holy Spirit, leading men into larger truth and purer life. We wear the name 'Christian,' not excluding others, but because it honors Christ, and it alone is gladly accepted and borne by all. We practice the one baptism that in its form commemorates the Death, Burial and Resurrection of the Christ, the great basic facts of Christianity; incorporated, in the true spirit of obedience, into the individual life, this symbol demands the death and burial of all sin, individual and social, and his rising into the Christ life.
> "On this simple yet all-inclusive faith we stand, and plead for the unity of all Christians. This plea is the very reason for our existence as a people. We invite men to learn of Christ and obey him, but all must have full liberty of thought in him. Will you work with us to unite the Church and save the world?"

Thus conceived and understood in its naked simplicity and grandeur, who would not be willing to sacrifice and suffer for such a cause? In the wilderness of denominational divisions, strifes and rivalries, it lifts its voice, pleading for peace and unity among all the followers of Jesus Christ. It says, when it comes to understand its nature and mission, "One is our Master, and all we are brethren; let us put away the things that divide, and unite upon the things in which we agree, and in working together upon our unities God will show us the way to a larger and more perfect union." At last the Evangelical Protestant religious bodies have said, "We do not see our way clear yet to abandon our denominational organizations, but we are willing to unite under Christ, our divine Lord and Leader, and co-operate as far as is practicable in promoting the common interests of the kingdom, thus making manifest the unity which already exists, and trusting him to lead us into still closer co-operation if he so wills." Our fathers longed to see this day, but did not, dying in hope. To us is given this supreme opportunity and responsibility.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Although tardy in her coming, Spring, gentlest and fairest of the four seasons, seems to have arrived at last. One feels it in the soft, vernal breezes, sees it in opening buds and springing grass, and hears it in the singing of the birds. Nature responds readily to her magic touch and all living and growing things are giving evidences of life. Trees and shrubs are arraying themselves in delicate apparel of green, and the air is fragrant with many a flower that has burst its prison cell to become a thing of beauty and a joy while it endures. Down in the thicket by the branch, the familiar notes that greeted our ears back in the springtime of life, are heard, just as of old, as wooing birds call their mates. At these familiar sights and sounds one feels himself a barefooted boy again, wading the shallow brook, or fishing in its deeper pools, or gathering a handful of early flowers and watching, with the wonder of childhood, the transforming power of spring. Alas! one recalls, too, the constitutional languor and weariness which seized him at this season of the year when compelled to do such prosaic work as plowing the field, or planting the corn. That "tired feeling" which has become so familiar to the public through patent medicine advertisements, had its inception and its most pronounced development in those halcyon days. But with all its pains and penalties, and the sense of injustice when one was compelled to work when he desired to play, who does not cherish the memory of those early springtime days, when the earth was covered with flowers and the air was vocal with the songs of birds, and when all the trees of the field seemed to clap their hands with joy?

At such a season of the year, when Nature is rejoicing at her new resurrection life, our annual congress convenes in the city of Indianapolis, and by the time this appears in print, our ministerial hosts will be gathered in that city, and our intellectual gladiators will be measuring broadswords, good-naturedly, of course, over some of the living questions of the day. Our congressional discussions have always been marked not only by freedom of thought, but by the best of humor and good fellowship. It is wonderful how differences which have been magnified into the dimensions of a mountain, dwindle down to the proportions of an ant-hill when men face each other on the arena of free discussion, and where empty declamation and bald, unproved assertions count for nothing. It would be a revelation to some of our good brethren who have been reading one of our bellicose journals and who imagine that the reformation is about to split asunder because of grave heresies and wide departures from the faith, if they should attend the congress at Indianapolis and find, to their utter astonishment, that these charges, so freely bandied about in our newspapers, have no vouchers in our congress. Men have to "make good" in a meeting of that kind, and are more guarded in their utterances. There is nothing like a free platform, parliamentary rules, time limits and keeping to the question to dissipate mental fog in which are supposed to lurk fatal heresies. Our congress has been a wonderfully unifying influence by its calling to the bar of public accountability both the latitudinarian who abuses the meaning of the word "liberty" and the reactionary who has made himself and others believe that most of our leaders are on the down grade to the demnition bowwows.

From examination of the program of our congress this week, it is difficult to see any topic upon which we are likely to have any very animated discussion. It is hardly probable that any very serious difference will be developed between the Baptist brethren and the Disciples upon the questions they are to discuss. Divergencies of sentiment there doubtless will be, but vital differences there are none, the polemics on both sides to the contrary notwithstanding. The question of federation will be sure to come up in discussing ways of promoting Christian union, but it has been developed more than once that there is no difference between us on that subject. Federation, as defined by its friends, has had no opponents. Federation, as presented by its opponents, has had no advocates. This will be an astonishing statement to those who are dependent upon some of our papers for their information, but our readers know that this is true, with exceptions, if any, too unimportant to be noted. The federation to which no opposition has been or can be made, is co-operation with other Christian bodies for the accomplishment of common ends, as far as possible, without compromising our principles or conscience. The kind of federation which no one among us advocates is one that involves the endorsement of all the errors of those with whom we co-operate, the compromise of our plea for union, and the submission of our judgment and our conscience to the keeping of a committee, or council, whose judgment we are compelled to obey whether we approve or not. The unanimity with which our brethren favor the former is excelled only by that with which they reject the latter. In other words, the kind of federation opposed is not proposed. This was developed at Des Moines in 1904, repeated at Canton recently, and will no doubt be further confirmed by the proceedings at Indianapolis. In spite of these facts, however, we do not doubt but that there will arise issues enough at Indianapolis to keep the brethren awake, and no one is anticipating a dull congress.

We have spoken elsewhere of the appalling disaster which has overtaken the city of San Francisco and some of the smaller towns adjacent thereto. We revert to the matter here to remind the brethren throughout the United States that this unspeakable calamity will be sure to make demands upon our liberality to relieve the wants of our own brethren who have been deprived not only of their homes and their means of subsistence, but of their churches and church privileges by this sad visitation. If the ties of brotherhood mean anything, this meaning should assert itself at a time like this. "And whether one member suffereth, all the members suffer with it." This is Paul's interpretation of the unity of the body of Christ. While contributing as citizens to the general relief fund, as we will all feel it a privilege to do, we will not forget that we owe a special duty to those who are bound to us by the spiritual ties of a common faith and a common cause. They have a right to look to us in this hour of their calamity and deep poverty for our sympathy and our assistance, and this aid we should render without diverting one dollar from other channels of benevolence essential to the ongoing of our cause. Our convention in that great city last summer was a benediction to our whole brotherhood on the coast, and served to cement the ties of fellowship and brotherhood between them and their brethren farther east. We can now furnish a still more striking proof of our love in ministering to their necessities as their condition may require and our generosity may prompt. While waiting for further developments in relation to the condition and needs of our brethren in these stricken cities of the coast, let us be prepared to do promptly and gladly what our hands find to do in this hour of their sore visitation.

One of the missionaries in the employ of one of our mission boards has recently had a remarkable experience which he has communicated to the Easy Chair. He had been an ardent, and yet conscientious, opponent of the federation movement from its presentation at Omaha to the present time. He writes, concerning his recent experience, as follows: "I am in the habit of rising early and having a season of private prayer. A week ago this morning I rose between 4 and 5 o'clock and I was on my knees petitioning the Throne of Grace. I was asking for guidance and help to always be right and do right. Just then I had an indescribable sensation in my heart. It was dark in the house and my eyes were closed, but a bright light seemed to stand before my vision, and a voice said to me, 'You are wrong in opposing federation. This movement is from God, and to oppose it is to fight against God.' I was greatly astonished, and had an indescribable feeling of awe. As I considered the matter I reflected that I needed that kind of an answer, for I thought I was right in oposing federation. . . . I write you to-day to assure you that I am for federation, and will pray that the people of God may all cease their opposition." This experience is quite interesting apart from any reference to the subject of federation, as illustrating how God sometimes speaks to an honest, inquiring soul that is seeking his counsel and guidance. It is not necessary to suppose any miracle. It was only an answer to the prayer of a devout soul, coming in an unusually clear and striking manner. Both the vision and the voice were no doubt internal, but were none the less clear and convincing because of that. There is a "still, small voice" that speaks to the soul in its moments of reverential silence, conveying light in darkness, comfort in sorrow and strength in weakness. A cold materialism or rationalism may deny that God thus answers prayer, but devout souls in all ages know by experience that God is as near to the soul of man to-day, and is as ready to communicate light and strength through a receptive faith, as in any time in the past.

The Wide Home Mission Field

By HENRY L. MOREHOUSE,
Cor. Sec. of the American Baptist Home Mission Society

Home mission problems in America are more complex, more varied, more shifting, more urgent, and more stupendous than in any other Christian land under the sun. Tremendous has been the strain during the last forty years. Directly after the war several great tasks were simultaneously thrust upon us in the swiftly-expanding west; in the changed status of the Indian; in the emancipation of the negroes; in opened Mexico; and in the unparalleled migration to America. Demands were almost bewildering. Evangelistic and constructive work had to be planned and done at the same time. The far vision of faith often directed the adoption of methods, even as Japanese gunners at Port Arthur, watching signals on remote hilltops, trained their guns apparently to pierce the sky; the huge projectiles, however, in their parabolic flight, falling with destructive force on the unseen Russian battle ships in the bay.

A first and constant field of missionary effort has been the North American Indian. There are about 4,500 members of Indian Baptist churches in the five civilized tribes, with native preachers. Several tribes of "blanket Indians," just emerging from their old ways, have recently given remarkable illustrations of the transforming power of the Gospel preached to them through interpreters, encouraging us to press this work with greater vigor than ever.

The negro problem puzzles statesmen, philanthropists and Christians. The mystery about the presence of ten millions of negroes, chiefly among fourteen millions of whites, no man can unravel. And they are here to stay. No other Christian people ever had such a home mission field as this.

By means of well-equipped Christian schools, academic, normal, collegiate, medical, theological, and industrial, we have endeavored to lay hold of the talented tenth man, and send him out with mental breadth and balance for the elevation of his people, and in the schools of the American Baptist Home Mission Society 500 students for the ministry are enrolled annually. And of the 60,000 students who have been enrolled in the schools of the society, multitudes have returned as lighted torches to their benighted people, making brighter homes, better churches, leaders in moral reforms, good citizens, while a number are taking to Ethiopia the blessings of the Gospel.

The making of a race is our mission; a race that in forty years has increased from four to ten millions, with a yet greater ratio of Baptist increase from 500,000 to 2,000,000—a phenomenal thing in modern missions. The expenditure of $4,000,000 by the American Baptist Home Mission Society in these forty years has been one of the best investments in the world. Many, indeed, are yet degraded; but are not many whites, even in the old centers of Anglo-Saxon civilization? The Hebrews got out of Egypt in a day, but it took forty years to get Egypt out of them. Who expects the negro in forty years to overtake the Caucasian, with a start of a thousand years? But they are coming on. Forty years ago the negro preacher who could read was the exception; now, of 12,000 Baptist preachers, the exception is one who can not. Out of the depths, up from slavery to noble Christian manhood and womanhood, many have risen. In my twenty-six years of service for the society, I have seen poor, coarse, negro boys and girls develop into cultured, able, influential characters, consecrated to the service of Christ. Whoever, therefore, asserts that the American negro is incapable of high attainments, and that time and money have been wasted on him, thereby discounts his own sanity, traduces the race, and dishonors Christ, its Maker and Redeemer.

A third field, with its peculiar characteristics, is that of our foreign population—Asiatics, Europeans, French Canadians. America is the world's magnet. The Chinese began to come in 1849. With his heathen notions, his reverence for the past, his conservatism, his transient residence, lack of family life, and his antipathy to Americans because of outrageous treatment, the Chinaman's evangelization here, as in China itself, has been slow; and yet much has been accomplished and many have returned to give the Gospel to China.

The Japanese are coming now. We have a hopeful mission among them. If we can make them as good soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ as they are of their emperor, what a force in the kingdom of God they will be!

Other nationalities are legion—a million of French Canadians and their descendants mainly in New England; twenty-eight millions of foreign birth and foreign parentage mostly in the north and west; in our large cities outnumbering the native American stock three to one. A million more are expected this year. New England is becoming New France and New Ireland; and the birthplace of American missions is itself now a needy mission field. A man once told me that to gratify his curiosity when a boy he walked ten miles to see an Irishman. Now they are ubiquitous on the police and in municipal politics. New England has thirty Irish mayors; New York city has about 700,000 of Irish birth and immediate descent; 800,000 of German parentage; and twenty-eight times more Jews than Jerusalem, and more than any other city of the world—a full 700,000. Large sections are populated exclusively by the foreign elements. Where on earth is anything like it? Where on earth has such a world-wide mission field been flung into the very lap of evangelical Christianity? Where else are such opportunities for their evangelization? At times we are appalled by the situation; stand aghast at possible perils to our civilization; while the indigestibility of much of the recent accessions from eastern and southern Europe threatens the body politic with acute gastritis. In portions of the northwest, indeed, there is a new racial amalgam similar to that which formerly gave England its virility. Evangelical Protestantism is confronted, on a large scale, with religious formalism, sacramentarianism, sacerdotalism, miracle-working bones, bigotry, ecclesiastical tyranny, infidelity, atheism and anarchy, with a close approximation to the continental Sunday.

While the flood of immigration continues we must reach them in their own tongues or not at all. Our method in this respect has the divine precedent in the inscription on the Cross in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, and in the proclamation at Pentecost of the Gospel to every man in his own tongue.

I stood a few years ago by the active crater of Mauna Loa, in Hawaii, as the fiery fluid was hurled high in the sky and then with devastating fury flowed for miles down the mountain side at night like a stream of molten gold in a setting of jet. Would you suppose that any good could ever come out of that? By long processes of attrition, decomposition, and pulverization lava has become soil which, under wise cultivation, produces abundant harvests of sugar-cane for the sweetening of the world, while the islands, themselves of volcanic origin, are now the [illegible] the Pacific. Sugar out of lava! By the grace of God this is what we are getting out of multitudes on fire with evil—sugar from lava!

With the development of the west missionaries went on tedious overland journeys of 2,500 miles, and also by the Isthmus of Panama to the Pacific coast in 1845-1849, and subsequently wherever the thronging multitudes went, in mining camps, on the prairies, in new railway towns, preaching the Gospel in sod houses, log cabins, empty stores, public halls, school houses, private houses, and in the open air, winning wanderers back to Christ, organizing churches and Sunday-schools, building meeting houses, leading in moral reforms and in educational enterprises—living shuttles in the rattling loom of frontier life, weaving into the forming fabric of western civilization the strong, white threads of Gospel righteousness. Men of mark and of heroic mold were many of these pioneers, like one who traversed vast regions, about 4,500 miles, mostly on foot, in one year; and another who in a few years with his Indian ponies traveled nearly 100,000 miles.

Think what it means, if the spiritual is to keep pace with the material development, that in the west within the last forty years the railway mileage increased from 2,500 to 70,000 miles! Think what it means when, in a new territory opened to settlement, 200,000 people rush in at the firing of a signal gun, and in a week cities rise as by magic! In our methods we have had to be "minute men," marching at "double quick." Where else on earth has there been such stress in home mission work?

In its infancy the west was cradled in a crass materialism, with the songs of Mammon as its lullaby. And there is Mormonism. A gigantic task, but half done, has it been to win that west for Christ. Great, however, have been the gains. Moral Saharas once swept by withering simoons of sin, like some of the deserts reclaimed by irrigation, are blossoming as the rose and yielding rich fruits of righteousness; and the bleak, bare, rocky, frigid mountain top, where the handful of corn was sown, hears the shaking of the harvest like Lebanon.

There we must be vigilant and vigorous for a generation to come; for there preeminently we are dealing not with an indolent, effete, unprogressive people at ease in the well-worn seats of ancestral custom, but with the most enterprising, nervous, forceful, audacious element of a race that has been called the conquering and the unconquerable race of the world, which, for good or for ill, is mightily to affect the evangelization of the awakened eastern world with which it stands face to face.

Work for a United Church to Do

By EZRA SQUIER TIPPLE,
Professor of Practical Theology, Drew Theological Seminary

Perhaps the better point of view to-day is not as to the work which a united church may do, but rather what it must do, for paradoxical as it may seem, the greatest and most important tasks confronting the Church of Jesus Christ have to do with the united church. That the church is united is taken for granted, for do we not sing, and have we not sung—

> "We are not divided,
> All one body we"?

It must be true, therefore, for that song has been the marching hymn of the Christian church for a generation. Nevertheless, the problem which the united church faces is that of a reformation of Christian sympathy and of ecclesiastical affiliations, of attitude and of practice, of feeling and of denominational behavior. The nineteenth century placed denominationalism above Christianity. In the first Continental Congress, which convened in Philadelphia in 1774, no one thought of independence and few of war, until Patrick Henry gave utterance to the patriotic declaration, "I am not a Virginian, but an American!" We are Christians first of all, not denominationalists, but a sectarian spirit has been cultivated at the expense of catholicity. Narrowness of life and bigotry of thought have obscured the Gospel vision of the one body of Christ. Dogma has taken the place of a universal faith. The Emperor Julian declared that he had found no wild beasts so cruel to men as most Christians were to each other. It has seemed at times as if denominational jealousy and rivalry have struggled for the souls of men as hungry dogs fight for a bone. Quarreling, bickering and discourtesy have been in some sections, and in some decades, as ordinary and commonplace as the gossip of villagers. So at least it must have seemed to some of the world's "Great Hearts." Every member of the body of Christ for itself, the arm for the arm, the eye for its own sake, the foot for the foot alone. The work which the united church must first do is to relate the foot to the arm, all parts of the body each to the other, so that "The eye can not say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you."

This ought not to be an impossible task. The various Christian organizations—there are said to be at least 150 different sects in the United States—have many things in common. Like Israel, we have come from a life of bondage; we have a common heritage; we are bound for a spiritual Canaan. As Schiller says, in "William Tell":

> "Though mountain ridge and lake divide our bounds,
> And every canton's ruled by its own laws,
> Yet are we but one race, born of one blood,
> And all are children of a common home."

With so much in common, why should not denominationalists have respect unto Christian unity? Here is work for a united church, which is not united, to undertake. In the Talmud is the story of many pilgrims who came to the gate of a great city. Each was hungry and thirsty, each spoke in a different language and said one word. They looked angrily at one another, and it seemed as if they were likely to come to blows. Hastily the keeper of the gate sent for an interpreter. He listened to each, smiled, and said, "Give them grapes. Each in his own tongue has asked for them." Trained in different schools of denominational thought, speaking perhaps a different theological language, or using different theological terminations, the members of the great Christian bodies are coming at last to feel that they are actuated by similar motives, moved by similar impulses, serving under the same Lord, each striving for the same goal. Men are beginning to be haunted as was Maurice by a desire for unity.

The duty of the Christian church at this hour, then, is to find some bond of union. Such a bond of union can not be found in liturgy, nor in any form of church government. Salvation is in neither of these any more than there is life for a dead person in the handles or the wood of a coffin. Nor can the basis of union be in creeds, for so long as men think there will be differences of opinion.

Phillips Brooks said, "The real unity of Christendom is not to be found at last in identity of organization, nor in identity of dogma. Both of these have been dreamed of and have failed. But in the unity of spiritual consecration to a common Lord—so earnestly sought by every soul that, though their apprehension of him whom they are seeking shall be as various as are the lights into which a hundred jewels break the selfsame sunlight—the search shall be so deep a fact, so much the deepest fact in every soul, that all the souls shall be one with each other in virtue of that simple fact, in virtue of the common reaching after Christ, that common earnestness of loyalty to what they may know of him. There is the only unity which is thoroughly worthy either of God or man." And it is this sort of union that the church federation idea seeks to establish. It does not wish to bring about a sentimental union of the churches, but it does aspire to find a working basis of union. It desires at least unity in sentiment; it is willing to concede divergence of opinions. As Lyman Abbott says, "The remedy for sectarian differences is not agreement in method; it is not subscribing to the same creed, using the same ritual, or joining in the same ecclesiastical organization. It is recognizing in different organizations, with their different creeds and their different rituals, a common purpose. It is willingness to work with men with whom we differ." The united church needs nothing so much to-day as wisdom.

The closer relation of the churches can never be brought about by the decree of pope or the deliverance of the cleric; it must result, if at all, from the dominant good sense of the people. That there is waste in all our efforts is only too evident. Men of judgment and business sense are saying that our methods are unbusinesslike, that our sectarianism is criminally disastrous. It looks as if we have been too much concerned with the near view of things, rather than with a comprehensive vision of the growth of the kingdom of heaven upon earth.

Some years ago when one of the trains on the Michigan Central Railroad stopped at Falls View, to give the passengers an opportunity to look at Niagara Falls, I stood with many other passengers looking at the rushing, roaring, falling splendor. It was in the early morning, and the sun was just rising. The beauty and the glory were as of the Mount of Transfiguration. Suddenly my attention was arrested by the chatter of a woman near me, who exclaimed, as she pointed to a small pool just below us—between us and the mighty flood—on which were a half dozen ducks, more or less, splashing and spluttering, and near which were a few trees in decaying autumnal foliage, "Oh, isn't that pretty?" Pretty! Unquestionably it was pretty; but how could she see that when Niagara, supernally majestic, was scarce a stone's throw beyond! Some souls are adjusted only for the mediocre, the ordinary; having eyes they see not. They can see a coin, but they fail to see the bush that burns and yet is not consumed.

Is it not this sort of a vision which most Christian people have had? They could not see beyond their own little parish; they were too much occupied with their own small concerns to appreciate properly the world movements of the kingdom. Tenacity of doctrinal view is all right in its place, but in the presence of a common, menacing foe we are to unite ourselves for effective attack. Pilate and Herod became friends again that day when Jesus was brought before them. The forces of evil are united against the forces of good. Why should not the one question which we ask of any church, or individual, be the question which Jehu asked that old Arab chief, Jehonadab, whose services he desired, "Is thine heart right as my heart is with thy heart? If it be, give me thine hand." That is the supreme test; nothing else can equal it. On the day before the battle of Trafalgar, Nelson took Collingwood and Rotherdam, who were at variance, to the spot where they could see the fleet opposed to them. "Yonder," said the admiral, "are your enemies. Shake hands and be good friends." Charles Kingsley once wrote to a Baptist, "My dear friend, go on and do that, namely, talking to men of their sins, and whether you call yourself Baptist or Buddhist, I shall welcome you as one who is doing the work of God and fighting the battle of the Lord, who makes war in righteousness." The work immediately ahead of a united church is to show that it is no longer a question of uniform or badge, but of spirit. "Art thou for us or for our adversary?" not even shall this question be asked. Christ's position must be our position: "He that is not against us is for us."

A federated church, which is the momentous question now before the church of Christ, is a union against a common foe. Herein it differs from church unity. Church unity has to do with principles, church federation with practice; the one with belief, the other with behavior; the one is a bond on paper and in theological statement, the other is the leaguing of Christian people of all shades of Christian belief against an arrogant and wily foe. Every interest of the kingdom of God upon earth demands that Christian people get together. I believe that spiritual unity already exists. Now let the united church show the world and the enemies of Christ upon the earth that we are one in faith, hope and charity; that we are one, without compromise of opinions, without sacrifice of essential beliefs, without doing violence to our distinctive opinions or churchly practices; that we are one in the face of common danger, one in line of battle, one in persistent effort to make the city a safe place in which to live, one in desire to cause the waste places of villages and country districts to blossom as the rose, one in the supreme desire to bring this world to Jesus, the Christ.

A Christian Only

By GEORGE H. BALL, D.D.

To be a Christian only may mean much or little. To be merely a Christian signifies the lowest possible grade of discipleship, a mere babe in Christ. Such an one is a Christian only. But this term may mean a Christian of the very highest grade, one who has laid aside all carnality and attained unto perfect conformity to Christ. There are very few such, if any. The great apostle, in the ripeness of his consecration, did not count himself to have attained, or to be already perfect, but was pressing onward to know Christ, "and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death." To retain nothing of the old life, and lack nothing of the new, is the true Christian's aim; to this he strives to grow; it can only be attained by growing in grace and knowledge.

To begin to be a Christian is a precious thing; to begin right is important; to grow and keep on growing is imperative. Emphasis should always be put upon beginning correctly, especially beginning with a true spirit of obedience, and trust, working by love shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Spirit. The beginning by repentance and confession is essential. He that fails to confess Christ fails fatally. We belong to the public as well as to ourselves. "No man liveth unto himself"; if he attempts it he sins, and wrongs both his neighbors and himself. We must not only have light in ourselves, but must let it shine, must make it shine by acts of service, by conduct, by living and working with Christly zeal.

Many act as if the beginning of discipleship is the only necessary thing. They do the first things after a fashion, and never do anything more. In reality there is no beginning of value unless it includes continuing, growing, serving, working. First acts have no value, or significance, if not followed by true, faithful Christian living. The fruitless branch is cut from the "true vine" because it lacks true life. The great thing is life, life that bears fruit, that serves a purpose, that shines and works.

There are a great many letter Christians, tenacious for form, but careless of spirit and life. Millions think themselves Christians, because they were baptized in infancy and confirmed afterward. They trust in the "letter," the perverted letter at that, and lack the Christ life. They are called Christians, but are not. Some adults also confess with the lips and are baptized in proper form, but lack the Christ-life. They may keep up the form of profession, may call themselves and be called Christians, but they are letter Christians only, destitute of real life, fruitless and the same as dead. Their usual habit is to emphasize the letter and minimize the life, both in speech and practice. Right here is a serious peril, to which we are all exposed.

"By their works ye shall know them"; by our works we may know ourselves. "Be not deceived: whatever a man soweth that shall he also reap." We are sure to sow something, a carnal life, or a spiritual life. The character we form is the seed we sow, whether carnal, selfish and sinful, or spiritual, Christlike—active in service for humanity. Our chief business is to make the will of God done on earth as it is done in heaven. He who does most for this is therefore a Christian of the highest grade. Lack at this point is more serious than at any other. The most perfect saint is the one who does the best work on this line of service, for he excels in obeying the mandate, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Repentance signifies this. It means to turn from neglect of duty to the doing of duty, to rendering to God his due, which is done by doing all possible service to mankind. God is glorified when we make men Godlike. This is repentance unto life, repentance continued, the beginning of honesty worked out into active life. Any other repentance is spurious.

Faith also means this. "Faith without works is dead." Real faith in Christ involves love for the person and the mission of Christ. Such faith works by love for the souls of men just like the Savior's love. "If we have not the spirit of Christ we are none of his." The spirit of Christ is expressed in sacrifice for humanity, just as Christ expressed it.

Baptism signifies this. It looks forward to service. Incidentally, it stands for a change of heart, but really and most emphatically for the service we covenant to perform. The full name of God into which we enter by this rite means work, redemption, conquest. The great thing is the work we covenant to do. The promise is nothing unless we actually do the work.

Forgiveness means this. Sins are blotted out by redemption, from their control. Pardon is deliverance from bondage to sinful forces which have controlled us. The fact that we have sinned can not be blotted out nor covered, but the disposition which led to sin and held us in bondage to sin is changed by the grace of pardon, by the power of the Christ-life which enters and renews the heart. This is emancipation, release from bondage and condemnation, and enrollment in the family, in the army, among the working forces of our Savior, the Captain of our salvation, who is leading his army onward to the conquest of the world. The great thing, therefore, in our reconciliation to God is service, working together with God, helping forward the mission of Christ on earth. The final result is to bring humanity to God in heaven for the enjoyment of eternal life, but the immediate and most pressing work to be thought of, to be prayed about, to plan for, to carry upon our hearts as our daily burden, to train ourselves by education, by every possible means for increasing our power and skill to perform, to accumulate money and all possible resources for our use, is the redemption of the human family from sin, ignorance and misery, and their elevation to the highest possible type of men and women and all that such elevation signifies for personal and social life and comfort on the earth before we reach eternal life beyond.

All Christian organizations, plans and services are truly Christian just so far as their aim and spirit and life signify "working together with God" under the leadership of Jesus Christ for the redemption of the human family, and no farther. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth"; it is the Spirit of Christ which settles our standing; "he is the way and the truth and the life." We are in the way and have the truth and the life when our hearts beat like the heart of Christ,

A BUSY WOMAN

Can Do the Work of 3 or 4 If Well Fed.

An energetic young woman living just outside of N. Y. writes:

"I am at present doing all the housework of a dairy farm, caring for 2 children, a vegetable and flower garden, a large number of fowls, besides managing an extensive exchange business through the mails and pursuing my regular avocation as a writer for several newspapers and magazines (designing fancy work for the latter) and all the energy and ability to do this I owe to Grape-Nuts food.

"It was not always so, and a year ago when the shock of my nursing baby's death utterly prostrated me and deranged my stomach and nerves so that I could not assimilate as much as a mouthful of solid food, and was in even worse condition mentally, he would have been a rash prophet who would have predicted that it ever would be so.

"Prior to this great grief I had suffered for years with impaired digestion, insomnia, agonizing cramps in the stomach, pain in the side, constipation, and other bowel derangements, all these were familiar to my daily life. Medicines gave me no relief—nothing did, until a few months ago, at a friend's suggestion, I began to use Grape-Nuts food, and subsequently gave up coffee entirely and adopted Postum Food Coffee at all my meals.

"To-day I am free from all the troubles I have enumerated. My digestion is simply perfect, I assimilate my food without the least distress, enjoy sweet, restful sleep, and have a buoyant feeling of pleasure in my varied duties. In fact, I am a new woman, entirely made over, and I repeat, I owe it all to Grape-Nuts and Postum Coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Centripetal Chaos

By William Durban

Prelude.

I have been slumming in East London. And, looking in on the workers of the great East London mission, with its six branches, I have been both surprised and delighted at the scenes I witnessed. Wonderful are the transformations accomplished. The two most singular centers are Paddy's Goose and the Old Mahogany Bar. Each of these was formerly a notorious saloon with a low music hall attached. Formerly also indescribable orgies were indulged in and brutal crimes were perpetrated. These two places were the most dangerous death traps in all London. Daily and nightly sailors from all lands were inveigled, drugged, robbed and flung into the streets. The entertainments were such as I dare not describe on paper. Old inhabitants have shocked me by their recitals of what went on. But twenty-one years ago the Methodists took in hand a mission amongst these dens. They acquired the lease of Paddy's Goose and purchased the Old Mahogany Bar. Both of the spots of former revelry and devilry were converted into homes for Christian workers, and the halls into mission chapels. What salvation from deadly sin really means is vividly illustrated in such localities. In respectable society we can form no adequate idea at all of the battle with the powers of darkness that is being waged by those who plunge down with the lamp of life into the abyss and penetrate the labyrinth of human misery.

Two Conflicting Currents.

Like many others of my ministerial brethren I have for many years felt that my religious work has impelled me toward the prosecution of sociological studies. And in the course of these I have been driven to the conclusion that we are entering on a new era of social history in which all conditions will be changed. All over Europe disintegrating forces are steadily working. These forces act alike in the economic, industrial and political spheres. One of our English politicians said the other day that he had noted lately the rapid growth of class hatreds. This is a perilous development in society. I greatly fear that this dictum is only too true. Then, in the various European states all the tokens point to coming disruption. I have been chatting with the famous Hungarian philosopher, Dr. Emil Reich. He anticipates a sharp conflict between Austria and Hungary as the result of the friction now felt. In Germany the ominous strengthening of Socialism is disquieting the higher and governing classes. France is seething with unrest, both political and religious. In Great Britain the masses of the toilers are determined to assert themselves and their rights against the feudalism of class privilege.

Now, while these signs of centrifugal forces in play attract the attention of every thoughtful mind, and indicate an approaching epoch of violent agitation, on the other hand a most curious tendency to centripetalism is manifest in the religious sphere. Politically and socially communities are everywhere tending to separatism. But religiously there is almost universally a movement toward union. The Disciples of Christ have reason to rejoice concerning this unexpected manifestation of a focal attraction. Spiritually, the signs of the age are eminently reassuring. Materialism, skepticism, infidelity, rationalism, indifference, agnosticism and secularism are all on the decline. Every keen observer must have come to the conclusion that it is so. I am absolutely sure that any good preacher advertised anywhere has a far better chance of a great audience to-day than when I was a lad. Also I must testify that wherever some efficient revivalist or evangelist makes his appearance he excites far more interest than he would have done a quarter of a century ago. I have in these articles spoken of the remarkable rapprochement between science and religion evidenced by the writings and addresses of Sir Oliver Lodge, Lord Kelvin and several others of the scientific geniuses of the day. These colossal representatives of philosophy and science in various branches have lately been most active in their expositions of the spiritual implications of the marvelous and mysterious facts of the universe. Radium, the X-rays, wireless telegraphy and other inexplicable phenomena are interpreted by the new school of philosophy as showing where matter hovers on the borderland of spirit. The other day, in the City Temple, Mr. Campbell said that he had no difficulty in believing in the resurrection, because for him there was no difference betwen matter and spirit. That is another way of expressing from the pulpit what men of the scientific laboratory say on their part.

Where Confusion Comes In.

The attempt to reconcile religion and science is full of profound interest. But other movements are exceedingly perplexing. I now come back to the other topic with which I was dealing, and which is closely related to the one on which I have for a moment diverged. The new spiritual inclination of scientists is telling potently on religious narowness, bigotry and sectism. As the minds of the more thoughtful people in the churches become affected by these broad and lofty speculations of a sublime philosophy, how can they be content with the cribbed and cramping creeds and artificial dogmas concocted in ages when science was not yet born? No longer are the majority of Christians likely to rest in satisfaction with the conclusions arrived at when theologians dwelt in the Dark Ages. There is something unutterably ludicrous in the spectacle of a denomination, or a church, or an individual wearing the shackles that were forged in the times when men believed that the earth was the center round which the sun moved. It was then that many of the dogmatic creeds were manufactured on which sects have been founded.

The confusion of present-day thought in great measure arises from the desire on the one hand for larger liberty of thought, and on the other from the natural wish to conserve traditions endeared by the sanction of custom. The active federation enterprises amongst the Free Churches on both sides of the Atlantic surely prove how the hunger for reunion has been irresistibly operating. But there are both dark and bright sides to such movements. Federation is a vast experiment. In itself it can not achieve organic reunion. But it commits whole denominations to the pathway which ultimately must lead to Christian unity. I note the lively discussions amongst Disciples concerning federation. These are full of interest, as giving the views of intelligent brethren. But after all that may be said, the gratifying point is the strong indication on all hands of discontent with things as they are. No longer are Christian people generally satisfied to be divided. In some way they long for concord and co-operation. Things are being written against sectism which would never have been penned a few years ago. Therefore, let the Disciples of Christ take heart afresh. Their main principle has taken root. Their sublime formula is being studied. Their aim and plea must win.

HARD TO DROP

But Many Drop It.

A young Calif. wife tallks about coffee:

"It was hard to drop Mocha and Java and give Postum Food Coffee a trial, but my nerves were so shattered that I was a nervous wreck and of course that means all kinds of ails.

"At first I thought bicycle riding caused it and I gave it up, but my condition remained unchanged. I did not want to acknowledge coffee caused the trouble for I was very fond of it. At that time a friend came to live with us, and I noticed that after he had been with us a week he would not drink his coffee any more. I asked him the reason. He replied, 'I have not had a headache since I left off drinking coffee, some months ago, till last week, when I began again, here at your table. I don't see how any one can like coffee, anyway, after drinking Postum'!

"I said nothing, but at once ordered a package of Postum. That was five months ago, and we have drank no other coffee since except on two occasions when we had company, and the result each time was that my husband could not sleep, but lay awake and tossed and talked half the night. We were convinced that coffee caused his suffering, so he returned to Postum Food Coffee, convinced that the old kind was an enemy, instead of a friend, and he is troubled no more by insomnia.

"I, myself, have gained 8 pounds in weight, and my nerves have ceased to quiver. It seems so easy now to quit the old coffee that caused our aches and ails and take up Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. There's a reason.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Malta is called the Queen of the Mediterranean. The Maltese call it "The Flower of the World," perhaps because they never saw any other part of the globe. It is an English stronghold, as effective as a naval and military base as Gibraltar, and no place on this Magnum Mare we are traversing has greater historical interest as well as commercial importance. For 3,000 years it has been associated with heroic names and startling events. There is an ancient story that a cyclopean tribe inhabited it, half human and half divine. For 760 years it was under the Phenicians; then Greeks, Carthaginians, Romans, Goths, Arabs, Germans, Spanish, French and English have held it. It is in the very midst of the cradle of civilization, sixty miles from Sicily and equidistant from Constantinople and Marseilles. The main island has about one hundred square miles. One of the little group was called Hyperia by Homer, and was the supposed residence of Calypso, the nymph that shipwrecked Ulysses by her syren fascinations on his way home from Troy, and kept him seven years. Her grotto is shown at Gozzo. Paul, when a prisoner on his way from Jerusalem to Rome to plead his cause before Nero, 60 A. D., was wrecked here in a rocky bay which still bears the name, "The Bay of St. Paul." It is a few miles northwest of Valetta, the chief city, and is a broad inlet two miles wide, running inland about three miles. The Tower of St. Paul dominates the shore, a square stone structure erected in 1610. A small fishing village is there now as in Paul's time. A dark, threatening, straggling ledge of rocks rises above the surface of the water some distance from the shore, over which the sea breaks in clouds of spray. On this ledge, after being tempest-tossed for fourteen days and nights, the bark which bore the apostle is supposed to have foundered. "They ran the ship aground; and the fore part stuck fast, and remained unmovable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves." There is a statue of Paul erected near by, and bays, churches, streets and chapels, shrines and springs are named for Paul, and a great festival, Feb. 10, commemorates the wreck of the tentmaker.

Much ink has been wasted in controversy as to whether this was really the island and this the bay where Paul met with his maritime adventure; but there is little reason to question it. The average visitor sees the "certain creek with a shore into which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship" (Acts 27:39).

Fourteen hundred years later Charles V. deeded Malta to the homeless Knights of St. John, "the Knights Hospitallers," the most famous order of medieval chivalry, known more familiarly as the Knights of Malta. This was the earliest systematized charity of which we have any record, the history of which overshadows the most vivid romance. Who does not know the story of de la Valette and of the Grand Masters! Who does not recall how the Knights of St. John made the island the bulwark of Christendom against the Saracens! Who does not remember the degeneracy of these Hospitallers, who fell until they were little better than the Turks they contended against! "The worse the man, the better the soldier," said Napoleon. Malta for centuries was a nest of Corsairs and the Knights themselves became a lot of pirates. Under the leadership of de la Valette, most famous of the Grand Masters of the order, the city of Valetta was founded and a series of fortifications begun that have been without a parallel. The Knights became a great sea power, turning the tables upon the Turks by constant piratical expeditions against Mohammedan Corsairs, carrying off slaves and loot after the most approved Algerian style, and built their great fortifications with the slaves and money captured on the seas. With the increase of wealth and power came laxity in their vows of chastity and temperance, and growth of vice and luxury among them brought to their ranks the adventurers and libertines of all Europe. Still, it must be said to their credit that but for these Knights the Ottoman power would have swept all Europe with devastation and death, and not until they began to decay did the Algerians become the terror of the sea.

We reached Malta during the carnival. It was a great show for us Americans. The people were there—all the people. It is a mystery to an old fellow to see the fun in these festivals, but I suppose they have their virtue in the element of play. The Strada Reale, or Royal street, was the center of the attractions. It seemed to be a sort of orgy of frivolous amusement. Battles of flowers, battles of candy, battles of confetti, open-air masquerading and universal tomfoolery prevail. Everybody vies with everybody in making himself ridiculous. Everything is voice, bustle, laughter, turmoil; everywhere the manifold forms of saturnalian freedom. Little children dressed in most grotesque clothing, young people wearing masks and arrayed in all colors, playing their tambourines on the heads of passers-by; carriages and donkey carts and dogs decked in ribbons and flowers, and loaded with merry revelers, and all out for a lark. It gave us a fine opportunity to see all sorts and conditions of Maltese, for which we were grateful.

Malta has been owned by England since 1800, when Napoleon gave it up. As a fortress it is said to be as formidable as Gibraltar and more useful. It requires 25,000 soldiers to man the defenses. The fortifications are most impressive and we see a number of warships and torpedo boats in its splendid harbor. The island, 17 miles long by 8 broad, is a huge rock, covered with thin but fertile soil. There are few trees, because of the [illegible]don Paul mentions. The climate is so mild there is not an unproductive month in the year, its 60,000 acres under cultivation producing two or three crops annually. The city of Valetta has 80,000 people, is built upon a promontory, and is full of surprises. On the main street is an opera house, where they say Patti made her debut, receiving £5. How long ago that was they don't tell us, but no doubt when Susan B. Anthony was a giddy girl. The streets are a constant climb, giving rise to Byron's lines:

> "Adieu! ye cursed streets of stairs!
> How surely he who mounts you swears"

The cathedral of St. John is the most interesting public building. We attended a service here and heard fine music. It is richly decorated. A notable painting, "The Beheading of John the Baptist," is just behind the altar. The chapels are rich in gold and silver and art, the railing in front of one of them being of virgin silver and escaped the cupidity of Napoleon, the champion butcher and thief, only because a quick-witted priest had painted it black a little while before. The tombs of the Grand Masters and over 400 marble memorials of the Knights, with curious inscriptions and emblems of heraldry, give special interest to the great structure. The Knights of Malta lavished their wealth upon this church. There are vessels of silver and gold, crosses, pixes, monuments, chivalric emblazonments, paintings, carven stone and marble, tapestries and frescoes that are gorgeous beyond description. They claim to have the bones of John the Baptist, a finger of Mary Magdalene, a few stones that were used in the martyrdom of Stephen, and a thorn from the Savior's crown; and the story is told how the alleged right hand of John the Baptist, encased in a glove of gold, and with a diamond ring on the finger, was shown here to Napoleon and he slipped the ring on his own finger and thrust the hand aside with the sneering remark, "Keep the carrion!"

Malta has many curious things. It seems a paradise for dogs, donkeys, cats and goats. One sees on every hand the goats driven around and milk served while you wait, in the original packages, so to speak. Lace is one of the chief articles on sale, and everybody buys it at great prices. Peculiar high-prowed "dghaisas," or Maltese boats, throng the bay—a great way of spelling daisy, as the fellow said "Psyche" was a great way of spelling "fish." Apocryphal coins of the Knights of St. John and Maltese crosses are among the things passed off on tourists. There are three prices for everything, the price the traveler is asked to pay, the price he pays and "the price my Lady Brassey paid." Dogs were also offered for sale on every hand, $5 being an ordinary price for an ordinary brand. "Carrozellas" are the cabs used by the Maltese, and the drivers are direct descendants of the ancient Jehu, who drove furiously. Native women wear curious headgear—a "faldetta," or one-sided hideous hood or sunbonnet—to their black cloaks, as characteristic of Malta as the mantilla is of Spain; and the story goes that Napoleon did not like the Maltese women and enjoined the wearing of this abomination as a sort of penance—another reason for the eternal anathematization of the Corsican ogre. A curious ornamentation of the street corners, is seen in the figures of knights and saints. Indeed, the knights are everlastingly in evidence. They are the greatest personalities in Malta. Their eight-pointed cross confronts us at every step. Their ghosts walk the highways. Their Grand Masters are immortalized in marble and bronze. Their portraits hang on every wall. Their faith and works are seen in churches and names of streets. Their bones are worked in all sorts of gruesome mosaics in the Church of the Monks—the skulls and leg and arm bones of 2,000 of them, like those of the 11,000 virgins in St. Ursula at Cologne. Most of all Valetta is a place of war. Ages of toil, millions of money, and three centuries of engineers have produced a bewildering mass of curtains and ravelins, and demilunes, and ditches, and palisades, and drawbridges, and bastions, and earthworks, enough to delight the souls of Miles and Corbin, and all the rest.

The Maltese are a sort of mixture of Arab and Italian. The people are generally temperate and industrious, but ignorant and superstitious. Only one-tenth can read and write, and many of the clergy are as illiterate as their parishioners. They marry at 12 or 13 years of age. America has done more for the people of the Philippines, an inferior people, in six years than England for Malta in a century. The Roman Catholic religion prevails. They have a priest for every 20 families. The Colonial Society of England and the Scottish Free Church are doing missionary work here, but there is a loud call in every place I have yet visited for the March offering. If not yet taken, let it be your sacred duty to render it at once to the Lord.

The Only Way

By W. R. WARREN,
Centennial Secretary

Every man who has a living income is sharing it to some extent with some one who has not, and yet there are thousands who are both worthy and needy and have no special friend to meet their necessities. These must be cared for by state and other charitable institutions. No matter how many poor relations you are supporting, you are paying your portion of taxes for maintaining the poor relations of all your county.

So it is in missionary work. Even if you carry your Testament in your pocket and seize every opportunity to give its truth to the men you meet, what about the thousands and millions whom no man with a Testament is meeting? The practical way of giving them the Word is for all Testament carriers to combine, and by each contributing a small amount employ men who shall make it their special business to search out those who have been neglected. The American Christian Missionary Society is the accepted and acceptable clearing house for this combined missionary activity in our own country.

But it has yet been able to attempt to reach the neglected only where they are grouped in thousands and tens of thousands. The great, populous New England states, with their mighty influence over the rest of the country, are depending upon this agency for the New Testament plea. The multiplying millions of negroes at the south have nowhere else to look for essential Christianity; and it is a grave mistake to fancy that the negro needs some peculiar brand of religion, for instance a highly emotional sort. The emotion is already in his nature. What he needs is the plain, straightforward Gospel. The millions of newly arrived people from European countries should have the Gospel given to them in their own tongues. If we wait for them to learn English and to come into our churches to hear it, our plea will find their minds and hearts pre-empted by influences inferior or positively pernicious.

We can not worthily celebrate our centennial without effectually reaching these three great classes of our population, and the American Christian Missionary Society is the only channel through which we can successfully operate. Therefore, the $200,000 at which the society aims this year should be granted without fail. Let every individual and every church do the small part that is asked and it will be accomplished.

"Home and Native Land."

By W. P. Bentley.

If magnificent opportunities, praiseworthy achievements and a noble ambition secure a commensurate response from a great people, this will be the most successful year in the history of the American Christian Missionary Society.

There are reasons why it should be so. A succession of fat years has filled the granaries of the land with corn—the people's purses are plethoric with coin. Our brotherhood never was as rich as it is to-day. There is no lack of means now in the possession of the brethren. It is only a problem of releasing it and laying it upon the altar of the Lord.

And, corresponding to this, never were there so many demands made upon the society; cries for help arise upon every hand. The society can answer only one in four! The brotherhood surely does not understand that three-fourths of these opportunities are lost, else it would speedily multiply its offerings. I have an earnest conviction that the income of the society should be doubled at once. This is absolutely necessary to enable it to come within a measurable distance of meeting the crying needs of a whole nation. Our gifts to this work are not proportionate either to our numbers or to the work we hope to accomplish. Two things our eyes would see: A Christian America and an evangelized world. The former is a prerequisite to the latter, and nothing will hasten the world's conversion more than the union and growth of the church in America. Every dollar spent in America has a world-wide influence.

Home Missions and Evangelism.

By Roger H. Fife.

Perhaps few see the real need of home missions more than the general evangelist. His engagements in various parts of the country bring him in personal contact with many needy fields, from which the most earnest appeals come for help. They write, "Can you not come and spend four or five weeks with us? A good evangelist could no doubt build up a good, self-supporting congregation here in a few weeks, if we can only enter the door that is open to us now. But we are few in numbers, and can not promise more than so much for the meeting. Can we not get a little help from our Home Missionary Society to put this work on its feet?" Brethren, such calls are coming from many growing towns and cities throughout our country, and I do not believe there is an evangelist among us who would turn a deaf ear to such an appeal if he has any assurance that he can have his own family provided for while he is there. One of the best meetings I have held during the last few months was with such a church. I sacrificed $10 per week from my salary for their sake, and after making the date for the meeting I had calls from three larger churches for the same time, but refused them to keep my promise with the weak church. What we need is a larger offering for our home mission work, so our board can help many of these needy fields. They will soon be occupied by other religious bodies if we do not "go up and possess the land." Our home missions and church extension go hand in hand with evangelism, and we will measure our success during the four years' campaign we are entering upon by the amount of our gifts for this most needed work.

A New Summering Place.

In another place will be found an advertisement of the "Christian Outing Ground Association," at Long Lake, Iosco county, Michigan. The plan of establishing summer resorts under Christian management and with Christian associations has taken firm root among us, and this is the last one of the new resorts which has been established. It is on the opposite side of the state of Michigan from Macatawa Park and Pentwater, and will accommodate a large number of people who live nearer that inland lake. The brethren who have this enterprise in charge are well known and their reputation gives assurance that the management will be satisfactory in every respect. These summer resorts become real missionary centers, and while giving rest and recreation to weary people, exert a wide and beneficent influence in behalf of Christianity.

George A. Campbell's lecture on "The Common Man's Religion," I outline as follows:

Every political and social problem to-day is centered in this common man. In seeking to answer, "What of His Religion?" one discovers that he is not found in any relatively large numbers in any of the present day churches, but may be found with his Sunday newspaper, or sleeping soundly, or resting quietly at home, or at his labor union meeting, the theater, or the park; yet we would suppose that the masses of men would flock to the institutions bearing the name of the meek and lowly One, the emancipator of men, the friend of democracy.

But because the common man does not attend church shall we conclude that he is not at all religious? It is estimated that there are more people in our large cities who were once adherents, but who rarely, if ever, attend church now, than there are attached church members in these same cities. I think it will be found that there are an increasing number of common men living entirely apart from the church and its preaching services who nevertheless hold positive religious beliefs that are more or less vital in their lives.

Religion, with its glow and fervor, with its shadows and doubts, can not accurately be tabulated. The feeling of joy or sorrow or fear can not be put with arithmetical precision in figures or words. To reach conclusions with reference to the common man's religion is not found in what his that of observation as we converse with him, as we see him in his varied life.

The common man believes in God. How does he reach his faith in God? That is a question he does not discuss much, but leaves it for the theologian; yet, if you press him for an answer you will get the three reasons that the varied philosophers of all time have given us. First, some would tell you that they believe in God because he has miraculously revealed himself to the world. Second, others would tell you that they believe in God because they feel him. Third, still others will tell you that there is evidence of God all around us in the outside world, and soon they will give you the arguments that the theologian calls the moral, the theological, the cosmological and the ontological reasons for the existence of God. The working men are not troubled with as serious doubts over the apparent duality of the universe as the studying man.

But the dominant note of the common man's religion is not found in what his views of God are, but in what his views of man are, and the social relationship in which he finds himself. He reasons from himself and his fellow man to God. He loves his neighbor whom he has seen, and then God whom he has not seen. It is from the crowded centers, where fifty per cent of our people live, that is being struck the dominant note of the common man's religion. Scientists call it sociology; laborers call it unionism; the church calls it the heart of the Gospel; Christ calls it love. The common man's first, and almost exclusive, thought is to get a livelihood.

> "Yer dead with no tombstone to puff up your name
> W'en a feller is out of a job."

Hence, the first commandment seems incidental in the common man's religion as compared with the second. The average man is kindly-hearted, not churchly-hearted. No words express his feelings better than the little poem, "The House by the Side of the Road." He is not reached by an appeal to the miraculous. It is outside his experience and foreign to his thought.

The mass of men accentuate in their own thought three things as to sin. First, they are to a degree lenient with sin; second, they view it as a loss—a bad investment; third, they are hopeful as to the outcome of sin. The arrangements of the future the average man leaves sarcastically with the philosopher and theologian, but reverently with God. His quarrel is not with Christ, but with ecclesiastical functions and institutional Christianity. In the eyes of the common man churches are not built or managed for the socialization of the community. There is too much preaching down, and not enough living with. Men are no better after coming into the church than before. The church makes the Christ of love, who would unite men, to become a divider of men. We must burden our souls with this problem, with taking the Christ of us all to the brother of us all. It may be that God is using "the church without the church" to teach the church within some overlooked but true aspects of Christ's matchless personality.

How may the church be more serviceable? First, let us return to Christ's intensity. Let his disciples learn his absorbing thought and purpose dominating every moment of his life, and pervading every word and deed. The kind of revival we need is not a diffusive one, getting greater numbers to enroll their names upon the clerks' books, but an intensive one that will cause the disciples of the Lord to know him intimately in his relationship to God and man.

Second, the church should learn to become more democratic in its organization and methods. Its duty is not simply to call men to its temples, but, through its believers, to take its Christian ministries and visitations as far as its ability can reach. The average man does not distinguish between the claims of different churches. He is not arguing as to which church he will join, but is casting all churches over. He who thinks the mighty problem of Christendom is to extend his own denomination has not got his ear to the ground and heard the deep and mighty undertones of our common life.

Third, the church must have spiritual vision. It has breathed the dust and dirt of the earthly and partisan too much. It must have a God perspective. It ought to seek loyalty to the fathers, not by proclaiming the message they proclaimed, but by courageously interpreting God's will to our time as they did to theirs. It ought to pour out its life's blood to men wherever oppressed. It ought to, with the critical acumen of the mind of to-day, examine every tenet and doctrine it holds to see if it is not stressing some of them, at least, far beyond what is relatively true, and try every spirit that claims its attention—the old spirits and the new, and especially the spirits of religious newspapers—in order to accurately estimate the results of its work and the value of its methods as adapted to this age. Then it will be able to serve the suffering multitudes and be the mighty avenue to peace and power.

The review of Mr. Campbell's paper was by H. A. Denton, of Maryville, and it was the only paper that pretended to be a real criticism of any of the original papers. Most of the reviewers had been able to find little fault with the original papers presented, and had proceeded to set forth their own presentation, or an amplification of some theory discussed in the original paper. Mr. Denton's paper, however, was perhaps too minute in its criticism. He found fault with Mr. Campbell's use of the term "common man," which was, in the main, the labor union man of the city. He also wanted a definition of the term, "religion." He did not seem to believe that the common man had little to do with Jesus through the churches to-day. The labor union class, he held, does not lie at the source of things. There are more common men in other classes which are at the real roots of our society. In what six months of the good old days did we ever see more common men rally round the banner of the Cross than in the past half year? He disagreed with the lecturer, and believed that the quitting of the church was because Christ had first gone out of the heart of many men. He questioned that part of the lecture that dealt with the order of man's belief in God and man. All the great fundamentals of life and religion are first dogmatically imparted and accepted, and so lived through our earlier years. He did not believe that sociology and unionism are co-ordinate headings in classification, nor synonymous terms, nor did he believe that either of these, separately or together, is the same thing that the church calls love. Mr. Denton even criticized the lecturer's poetical quotations. He found fault with his statement of the theological views of the masses. He thought the view of sin set forth as held by the common man an inadequate one, being a purely naturalistic one. The lecturer's arraignment of the church he thought was more pertinent to some members who pervert its functions and authority. He agreed with all the lecturer's main statements as to how the church may become more serviceable, though he found points of criticism in some of the details. He believed that in the experience of the church its days of diffusion have been its days of intensity. To sum up, he said it seems that the lecturer thinks "that if Zion would dock her ships at the port of socialistic unionism and adopt the chart and compass of materialistic evolution before the last dash across the narrow strip, the whole fleet would reach port without accident or battle, and with scarcely transport capacity to carry the multitudes that would join the excursion." From this extract it will be seen that Mr. Denton's review had some cutting things in it, but on the whole it did not materially hurt the impression made by Mr. Campbell.

There was some uncertainty as to when the discussion should be held. W. T. Moore moved that it should be proceeded with at once, and continued "until we get tired." C. H. Winders asked if it were not the fault of the churches, after all, that there was so small a class of the common man in them. F. N. Calvin thought the lecturer had greatly overdrawn the picture. His experience seemed to be that the labor union is lacking in the spirit of love. J. H. Garrison called attention to what he conceived to be the aim of the lecturer, namely, to present to them the view of how the other fellow looks at the question. He suggested that perhaps our religion was too conventional and doctrinal. E. M. Richmond thought that if we had the spirit of the Master we could reach many who now seem to be lost to the churches. T. A. Abbott referred to an experience of W. J. Dawson and his church of eight hundred going down into the slums of London. Others also took part. Mr. Campbell, in his reply, made a fine plea for throwing aside mere theories and facing the real question as to whether we are reaching the people. "I am not in Chicago," he said, "because of higher criticism. My whole life is in this work of winning the working man." Catholics, he claimed, are reaching these men better than the Protestants.

M. A. Hart's paper on the "Education of the Child in the Bible School," was thought so well of that its publication in full was requested by a vote of the lectureship. It will be put into pamphlet form by the Christian Publishing Company, and I trust will be widely scattered, for it is in every sense an admirable treatment of its theme. I can not do justice to it in a brief paragraph, so do not attempt any synopsis of it here.

C. H. Winders, the reviewer, found himself in perfect accord with every position taken by Brother Hart, so presented an entirely independent paper. After showing the great value of Sunday-school work, and what a force it was in the life of the church and in religious education, he insisted that it must be made the one great educational branch of the church, and that it should be carried on in conformity with pedagogical laws as laid down by trained educators. He did not find a solution of the problem for the majority of our churches in a salaried superintendent, for hundreds of the churches can not even pay their preachers a decent salary, but we must make the hundreds of men and women, who are capable, see that nowhere will the same expenditure of time and energy and thought yield such results as in the Bible school. In the selection of teachers, the first thing to consider is a simple, sincere, consecrated Christian life. The next, there must be an abiding interest in children—the ability to make oneself companionable. He, too, made a plea for more of the male element in the Sunday-school. While he believed every church should cheerfully furnish the equipment needed in the form of charts, books, etc., there was an equipment which the teacher must largely furnish himself. He commended the teacher training classes and showed the importance of a knowledge of the Bible to the teacher. Next to this was a knowledge of children, and perhaps the greatest problem, he thought, was that of the curriculum, and he rather favored the graded system of lessons. The work of the Bible school, he pointed out, was of vital interest to the minister, and his interest in it should be of the deepest.

Owing to Dr. Mathews' sickness and his inability to fulfill his part on the program, Wednesday afternoon was found to be free so it was arranged that three of the brethren should address those who remained. C. H. Caton delivered a very thoughtful and uplifting sermon. It was a plea for visions. In the heart of man the religion of Christ, he said, is one, but in the head it is many. The four great intellectual giants of the nineteenth century, he pointed out, came back from their investigations and researches with dust in their eyes, but God brings us to the place where we shall be like little children and accept things from God as they do. As long as we have the latchstring on the outside to the knocking prophet, he said, we will grow. A good deal of our religion is pure intellectualism, he said, and he used W. T. Moore, perhaps the oldest man present, yet "the youngest in the bunch," as an example of one who would have been "so dry twenty years ago if he had been a pure intellectualist that you could have shaken him and he would have rattled as an empty gourd." Brother Caton's presentation of the supplementary relations of the intellectual and the visionary was one of the finest deliverances of the three days at Canton. He was followed by Professor Sharpe, of Columbia, who gave some of his impressions of the lectureship, which were in an entertaining and "snappy style." E. M. Richmond was the last speaker and he took occasion to emphasize his belief that there was no one among us who was seeking to surrender anything that we hold as of essential value. A very delightful and helpful devotional service concluded this afternoon's sessions.

The executive committee appointed consists of C. M. Sharpe, R. G. Sears and W. F. Richardson. The committee on membership consists of F. N. Calvin, B. T. Wharton, Levi Marshall, F. J. Yokley and G. H. Bassett. Paul Moore.

The Men Who Are Conducting the Home Mission Campaign

W. J. Wright, Superintendent of Evangelism.

S. M. Cooper, President American Christian Missionary Society and Chairman of Acting Board.

George B. Ranshaw, Field Secretary.

Recent visits to representative churches and correspondence with leading workers in the field, make it apparent that interest in home missions is constantly and rapidly growing. I do not hesitate to prophesy that this interest will express itself in the May offering. One of the most encouraging facts incident to the present campaign for the evangelization of America is the hearty support our preachers, who have the vision, faith and courage essential to leadership in this great work, are receiving from the business men in our churches. I am not an old man, but can distinctly recall the time when the preacher who enthusiastically advocated either home or foreign missions from his pulpit, did so at the risk of losing his position. To-day in many churches we are delighted by a different attitude, for their members, recognizing the great mission of the church, perceive the weakness of the professed leader who does not wisely and earnestly labor for the extension of the divine kingdom.

There are not a few churches among us to-day whose contributions to our organized missionary work on the days appointed are not dependent upon their having pastors. This statement does not discount the influence of the preacher. With efficient leadership the offering would no doubt be greater, and, besides, the healthy state of these churches is due largely to the work of those who in faith, hope and love have ministered to them in the past.

Brethren, on the first Lord's day in May, when our pastors proclaim to us the needs and possibilities of the American field, let us rally to the support of home missions as never before. In a nation, the industrial activities of whose subjects touch the whole world, whose national life by virtue of her being one of the great world powers is everywhere recognized, it is absolutely necessary that we preach the Gospel, not simply for the conversion of the individual, but that we emphasize the social extension of Christianity that its holy principles may find expression in our social, industrial and political life. Let us cherish the high ideal inherited from our forefathers, and pray and labor that this republic may not be simply in name, but above all in fact, a Christian nation.

S. M. Cooper.

Our Budget

—Congress in session this week at Indianapolis.

—Full reports of congress proceedings in our next issue.

—May offering for home missions May 6. Be sure to keep that before the people.

—The St. Louis churches made offerings for San Francisco sufferers last Lord's day. There is an outpouring of generous gifts from all over the country to meet the pressing needs of the victims of earthquake and fire.

—These great disasters serve to bring out the best there is in our human nature. They show us that there is much good in man, as well as evil. They indicate the influence of Christ on the world.

—No one doubts that a greater San Francisco will spring out of the ashes of the city that is now destroyed, for the same energy and enterprise that built the old city will build the new one.

—We are compelled to omit our symposium on federation this week on account of the press of other matters upon our columns, although we have some of the best articles we have yet received. No one objects to the kind of discussion we are having in this symposium.

—There are many signs, however, that discussion of this subject will soon be unnecessary, as we are hearing from men now from all parts of the country who, as fast as they are learning what federation means, are saying, "We are for it, as you present it, heart and soul." This will be the almost universal verdict just as soon as the light is turned in on regions that have been kept in darkness.

—M. L. Anthony is in a meeting at Corning, Ark.

—J. N. Johnston, pastor at Coshocton, O., writes that a new building will doubtless soon be a realization.

—Everything is prophetic of a prosperous year's work under the ministry of J. H. Henderson, at Tallula, Ill.

—The Ninth District Convention of Kansas will be held at Norcatur May 22, 23. A. R. Williams and Guy L. Conklin, of Norton, are the president and secretary.

—The simultaneous campaign in the various churches at Clinton, Ia., has closed. We have not yet had a report of its results. Our own church will continue its meeting.

—R. A. Staley, who has removed from Raton, N. M., to Dinuba, Cal., where he has accepted a call, was married April 5. F. B. Scrimsher will succeed him at Raton.

—Harry G. Hill, after giving his lecture on "One-sided People," at Lynchburg, O., was recalled to give three temperance addresses in the local option campaign now going on in that city.

—E. P. Wiles, who has been holding a meeting at Muncie, Ind., says the church expects to become a living link in the home field by May 1. He reports W. H. Allen doing a fine work there.

—P. A. Cave has been elected president of the pastors' conference in Maysville, Ky. The alliance is composed of the Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist and Episcopal ministers, and meets semimonthly.

—The spiritual life of the church at Louisiana, Mo., under E. J. Lampton, is seen in the good report of the Bible school, Endeavor and prayer-meeting. The orphans' home collection was over $32.

—Arthur Stout, of Marcelline, Mo., writes: "We are federating with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in a revival. We have not given up our plea, however. I find that even the other religious bodies have much for us to covet."

—A fine meeting is reported from Mobile, Ala., by Claude E. Hill, who speaks highly of L. D. Sprague, who had charge of the music. It is from this church that J. W. Henry, the new secretary of the Business Men's Association, has come.

—W. F. Turner, of the First Church, Joplin, Mo., has been over in Kansas addressing the state ministerial association. His theme was, "Some Conditions of Successful Evangelism." One result of the address is three invitations to speak at other places in Kansas to help prepare for meetings or for new buildings.

—Roger H. Fife, of Kansas City, Mo., who has been making a fine record as evangelist, has associated with him as his singer, Bro. Herbert H. Saunders, of Noblesville, Ind., who is also making a good record as evangelistic singer. They are now engaged in a splendid meeting at Chattanooga, Tenn., at the close of which they go to Metropolis, Ill., about May 6.

—Charles E. Smith, minister of the Calhoun street church, Charleston, S. C., thanks the Editor heartily for his answers to recent questions, entitled "The Federation Catechism," saying, "Your answers are safe and sane, and it is hard to see how any one can reasonably take issue with any one of them." They do not have to "take issue" with them. They can make a new issue, and fight that!

—The brethren at Keokuk, Ia., have just burned the note and mortgage against their building, which amounted to $3,500. The church is now out of debt, after a hard and persistent struggle. M. J. Nicoson, the pastor, says he has never seen more enthusiastic giving and more willing sacrifice. The membership is rich in faith and good works, and is doing a splendid work in the city. The property is worth about $25,000 and the present building was begun in 1894, but not dedicated till November, 1897. Brother Nicoson entered upon the pastorate in March of this year.

M. J. Nicoson.

—A devoted friend of The Christian-Evangelist writes: "I really think Brother Garrison should call Brother ——— down for his gross misrepresentation of his position." It is because it is "gross," and the people see it for themselves, that we have not felt called upon to correct it. A good sister wrote in the other day to the business department, saying, "I am so thankful the Editor is leaving us to decide whether he has 'surrendered our plea,' and several other questions like that."

Spring Medicine

In thousands and thousands of homes—in cities, towns and villages—three doses a day of Hood's Sarsaparilla are now being taken by every member of the family.

Why such wide and general use? Because Hood's Sarsaparilla has proved itself the Best Spring Medicine, by its wonderful effects in cleansing the system of all humors, overcoming that tired feeling, creating appetite, clearing the complexion, giving strength and animation.

Over forty thousand testimonials received in two years, by actual count.

—J. H. Rogers, one of our colored evangelists, has gone to Ocala, Fla., and is trying to arrange to hold a meeting. He reports that there are a few scattered Disciples in that city.

—E. W. Allen writes that his church at Fort Wayne, Ind., has secured Charles R. Scoville for September and October, and rented the Princess Rink, which will accommodate three thousand people, for the campaign.

—The church at Owensboro, Ky., has just voted to employ an assistant to R. H. Crossfield, its minister. The congregation has had an increase of two hundred and fifty during the past year. There are over four hundred in attendance at the Sunday-school. Harry D. Smith, of Hopkinsville, Ky., has just begun a meeting for this church.

—John G. Slayter, East End Christian Church, Pittsburg, Pa., writes: "My work is quite hopeful just now. Had a great Easter, with 17 additions—10 of them by baptism." Referring to current discussions he says: "I am fully in accord with the federation movement as presented at New York City and advocated by The Christian-Evangelist, and believe that the great majority of our men feel as I do."

—On Easter Sunday, April 15, at the Union Avenue Christian Church, sixteen persons came forward at the invitation at the close of the morning sermon by Brother Philputt, eleven to make the good confession. At night there was another confession, making seventeen additions for the day, which, in the absence of any extraordinary service, was a noteworthy manifestation of spiritual interest.

—W. A. Fite has just concluded a series of twelve sermons on the Holy Spirit, delivered to his church at Windsor, Mo. It is the first series of sermons on this subject ever preached in the town. We hear that they have done much to deepen the spirituality of the church, which was rent by division. A meeting is to be held in May, conducted by home forces, with L. D. Sprague, of California, Mo., as singer.

—In a paper on Christian Unity before the St. Louis Presbytery's spring meeting, Dr. J. N. Beall, a few days ago, said: "Perhaps never before in the history of the church was there such widespread interest manifested in this subject as at the present time. Church union is in the air. It is talked about, preached about, written about and prayed for. Denominations are vying with each other for the honor of first overtures looking toward conciliation and fellowship, fraternalization and consolidation. We live in a blessed time of amity."

—S. R. Maxwell has just returned to St. Louis after holding two good meetings, the last at Vanceburg, Ky., where he found differences of opinion hindering the advance of the work. S. S. McGill, the very excellent pastor, has resigned to take effect in June. Brother Maxwell commends him to some good church that needs a pastor. H. H. Moore, of Greenville, N. C., has been called to take charge of the church at the expiration of Brother McGill's term.

—A note from Brother David Rioch, who has charge of our boys' orphanage and industrial school at Damoh, India, announces that he and his wife will leave India on May 8 for England, where they will spend some time prior to coming on to America. Sister Rioch's people live in England, and Brother Rioch hopes to have an opportunity to visit all the English brethren and tell them of the work he is trying to do in India.

—We publish in this issue the Plan of Federation proposed by the Interchurch Conference in New York City, at the request of several readers. Preserve it for future reference. Consider that 40 men were on the committee representing 29 different religious bodies, and you can but marvel that there is so little in it that is objectionable to any one. Notice the freedom from denominational terminology and the use instead of common or scriptural terms.

—The quotation from Alexander Campbell on sectarianism is a part of a series of quotations sent in by S. B. Lindsay, of North Tonawanda, N. Y., but we are unable this week to find room for more. Others will appear later. It will be seen that Mr. Campbell was even more "unsound," as some men count unsoundness, than the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist. Before we are through with these quotations it will be seen who has made a "new issue."

—The first regular meeting of the Officers' and Teachers' Association of the Christian Bible Schools of St. Louis was held on the evening of April 17 at Compton Heights Church, J. A. Gardner presiding. Every Bible school excepting Union Avenue was represented, by either a paper or a short talk on helpful topics along Bible school work. Many interesting facts and theories were brought out, and the parliament which followed proved most valuable to those who attended. The next regular meeting should find a crowded house. It will be held in June, after the state convention, at the Hamilton Avenue Church.

—Dear Brother Garrison: I heartily indorse all I have read or heard spoken in favor of church federation, and more especially W. T. Moore's article in The Christian-Evangelist of March 15, entitled, "The Dutchman's Dilemma." He speaks just like one who knows what he is talking about. D. D. McLean.

Bowling Green, Fla.

Brother Moore is entirely familiar with our history and has not forgotten what we started out to accomplish, as some seem to have done. The men who personally knew the fathers favor all approaches to Christian union.

—Bro. E. A. Frost, Cassville, Mo., in whose behalf we recently made an appeal, has been trying to earn something for self support, but his health has compelled him to desist, for the present. He is grateful to the few brethren who have remembered him. Referring to current discussions he says: "I do hope and pray that all of the brethren, in the discussions which may arise, will not forget their brotherly obligations to do all things in love. May God help us all to live in love." This is a timely admonition of one of God's old and disabled servants.

—A reader asks us to answer the following questions:

(1) Do the majority of the ministers of the Christian church teach that Jews, and that Emerson and Holmes and all who reject the divinity of Christ, must be lost?

(2) If it is the belief of The Christian-Evangelist that Emerson and Holmes may be saved, what is the warrant for that belief? C. S. B.

(1 and 2) We think a "majority of the ministers of the Christian church" claim no right to pass judgment upon who will and who will not be saved. They are content to affirm their belief in the divinity of Christ as the only Savior of sinners, and leave it to the great Judge who knows all conditions of outward circumstance and inward disposition to allot to each his destiny. In this position, or attitude, The Christian-Evangelist fully concurs.

—In a letter just received from Evangelist Herbert Yeuell, enclosing communications from Manchester, N. H., it appears that the Park Theater is the cheapest suitable building that can be secured for the meeting. The rent of this, with cost of advertising, and salaries of singer, pianist and evangelist, will be not less than $200 per week, with traveling expenses to be added. From this it will be seen that Bro. W. J. Wright's estimate of one thousand dollars for the cost of the meeting is a very conservative one. This, however, would be a slight cost for the establishment of a church in one of the principal cities of a New England state in which we have no church. Up to date, we have received only $32.10 in response to the notices which have appeared in The Christian-Evangelist. We are trusting there are many of our readers who will feel that they would like to have partnership in this aggressive enterprise which looks to the planting of a new church in a region of the country where we are practically unknown. All such may address their contributions to the Editor of this paper.

—We regret to learn that Madison A. Hart has decided to leave Missouri. He will close his work at Fulton the fourth Sunday in June and enter upon the pastorate of the church at Pomona, Cal., the second Lord's day in July. Brother Hart is one of the most promising of the young ministers in the state. He has brains, education and a workable spirit. During his four years' pastorate at Fulton a new parsonage has been erected at a cost of more than $3,000, the membership has been almost doubled and the offerings for missions more than doubled. He was the acting president of the lectureship this year, in the absence of Brother Frank, and his paper on the "Education of the Child in the Bible School," which the Christian Publishing Company will put in pamphlet form, was perhaps the gem of the papers presented at Canton. We can only spare him from Missouri for a needy field, and the great state of California is especially needy just now.

PICTURE OF WAR ENGINE "GENERAL."

A beautiful colored picture, 18x25 inches, of the historic old engine "General," which was stolen at Big Shanty, Ga., by the Andrew's Raiders during the Civil War, and which is now on exhibition in the Union Depot, Chattanooga, Tenn., has been gotten out by the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Ry.—The "Battlefields Route" to the South. The picture is ready for framing and will be mailed for 25c. The "Story of the General" sent free. W. L. Danley, Gen'l Pass. Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

The Day set for the offering for Home Missions is May 6th. If every preacher who reads this paper will give the members of his congregation an opportunity to contribute on that Day, we are confident that more than $200,000 will be received this year. But it all lies with the preachers. We have no criticisms to make, no grievances to air, no complaints to utter. We rejoice in every good work under whatever auspices. But if we are to do the work expected of us we must have $200,000 this year—not a dollar less. The people will give that amount as soon as they see the necessity. We cannot reach all the people. The preachers are our sole dependence. We believe in our preachers. We are sure they will do their best to answer every appeal. Our brothers in America cry for the Gospel. We, as your agents, are doing our best to answer their cries. New fields invite us. We want to enter at once. Anything short of $200,000 will cripple our work. We appeal to the consciences of our ministers. We confidently expect an adequate answer.

"unfortunate statement that sectarian churches are true churches of Christ"! If this brother can find a statement of that kind from our pen we hope he will send it in for revision. We regard the groups of believers embraced in what are called the evangelical denominations, as "Christian bodies," because they accept Jesus Christ as Lord, and are more or less perfectly carrying out his will and manifesting his life. The local churches embraced in these "Christian bodies," being composed of those who believe on Christ and who manifest his spirit, are, in our judgment, to be regarded as churches of Christ in spite of their doctrinal errors, just as the Christian church, in spite of many gross errors, in doctrine and practice, was still regarded by Paul as a church of God. Is this heresy? Neither sectarianism nor denominationalism is any part of Christ's church, the former being of the flesh, and therefore sinful, and the latter being a temporary condition of the church, growing out of historic conditions, which is destined to pass away.

Conference for Education in the South.

A great welcome will be extended by the people of Lexington to the educational conference, which goes there upon the invitation of the collegiate institutions of central Kentucky, of the Chamber of Commerce of Lexington, and of the municipal authorities. The invitation was offered by President Jenkins of Kentucky University, at the meeting of the last conference in Columbia, S. C.

Governor Beckham will deliver the address of welcome on Wednesday, May 2, and the members will be given a reception at Sayre Institute. The two following days, May 3 and 4, will be occupied with the serious business of the meeting, which concerns the promotion of common school education among the children in the southern states.

The local committees have planned several entertainments for the visitors. A novelty to the northern visitors will be a woodland feast, when a Kentucky burgoo and barbecue will be served under the forest trees. This will be an immense affair, for it is estimated that there will be present at this conference anywhere from three to five thousand people. There will be excursions from Lexington to various parts of the bluegrass country.

confusion. We are entering on a time of curious groping after an ideal by many leaders who know what they want, but, strange to say, do not want to reach it in the only possible way. Federation is one of the experimental ways of seeking the goal. By its means those who have been sundered will at least learn to know and respect each other. Therefore, let us not frown on federation. It is bringing those to look over the barriers who will afterward themselves make bold to pull the barriers down.

Plan of Federation

To Be Recommended for Approval by the Constituent Christian Bodies.

PREAMBLE.

Whereas, in the providence of God, the time has come when it seems fitting, more fully to manifest the essential oneness of the Christian churches of America in Jesus Christ as their Divine Lord and Savior, and to promote the spirit of fellowship, service and co-operation among them, the delegates to the Inter-Church Conference on Federation assembled in New York City, do hereby recommend the following Plan of Federation to the Christian bodies represented in this conference for their approval.

PLAN OF FEDERATION.

1. For the prosecution of work that can be better done in union than in separation a council is hereby established, whose name shall be the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

2. The following Christian bodies shall be entitled to representation in this Federal Council on their approval of the purpose and plan of the organization:

[Here follows a list of 30 Christian bodies.]

3. The object of this Federal Council shall be: (1) To express the fellowship and catholic unity of the Christian Church. (2) To bring the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world. (3) To encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel concerning the spiritual life and religious activities of the churches. (4) To secure a larger combined influence for the churches of Christ in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people, so as to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life. (5) To assist in the organization of local branches of the Federal Council to promote its aims in their communities.

4. This Federal Council shall have no authority over the constituent bodies adhering to it; but its province shall be limited to the expression of its counsel and the recommending of a course of action in matters of common interest to the churches, local councils and individual Christians. It has no authority to draw up a common creed or form of government or of worship, or in any way to limit the full autonomy of the Christian bodies adhering to it.

5. Members of this Federal Council shall be appointed as follows: Each of the Christian bodies adhering to this Federal Council shall be entitled to four members, and shall be further entitled to one member for every 50,000 of its communicants or major fraction thereof. The question of representation of local councils shall be referred to the several constituent bodies, and to the first meeting of the Federal Council.

6. Any action to be taken by this Federal Council shall be by the general vote of its members. But in case one-third of the members present and voting request it, the vote shall be by the bodies represented, the members of each body voting separately; and action shall require the vote, not only of a majority of the members voting, but also of the bodies represented.

7. Other Christian bodies may be admitted into membership of this Federal Council on their request if approved by a vote of two-thirds of the members voting at a session of this council, and of two-thirds of the bodies represented, the representatives of each body voting separately.

8. The Federal Council shall meet in December, 1908, and thereafter once in every four years.

9. The officers of this Federal Council shall be a president, one vice president from each of its constituent bodies, a corresponding secretary, a recording secretary, a treasurer, and an executive committee, who shall perform the duties usually assigned to such officers. The corresponding secretary shall aid in organizing and assisting local councils and shall represent the Federal Council in its work, under the direction of the executive committee. The executive committee shall consist of seven ministers and seven laymen, together with the president, all ex-presidents, the corresponding secretary, the recording secretary and the treasurer. The executive committee shall have authority to attend to all business of the Federal Council in the intervals of its meetings and to fill any vacancies. All officers shall be chosen at the quadrennial meetings of the council, and shall hold their office until their successors take office. The president, vice presidents, the corresponding secretary, the recording secretary and the treasurer shall be elected by the Federal Council on nomination by the executive committee. The executive committee shall be elected by ballot after nomination by a nominating committee.

10. This plan of federation may be altered or amended by a majority vote of the members, followed by a majority vote of the representatives of the several constituent bodies, each body voting separately.

11. The expenses of the Federal Council shall be provided for by the several constituent bodies. This Plan of Federation shall become operative when it shall have been approved by two-thirds of the above bodies to which it shall be presented. It shall be the duty of each delegation to this conference to present this plan of federation to its national body, and ask its consideration and proper action. In case this plan of federation is approved by two-thirds of the proposed constituent bodies the executive committee of the National Federation of Churches and Christian workers, which has called this conference, is requested to call the Federal Council to meet at a fitting place in December, 1908.

Alexander Campbell on Sectarianism

When Alexander Campbell was censured by an "Independent Baptist" for remaining among Baptists and admonished that he might as consistently have felllowship with Pedobaptist sects, he expressed himself, in "The Christian Baptist," Vol. III, page 238, as follows:

"I have tried the pharisaic plan, and the monastic. I was once so straight, that, like the Indian's tree, I leaned a little the other way. And however much I may be slandered now as seeking 'popularity' or a popular course, I have to rejoice that to my own satisfaction, as well as to others, I proved that truth, and not popularity, was my object; for I was once so strict a Separatist that I would neither pray nor sing praises with any one who was not as perfect as I supposed myself. In this most unpopular course I persisted until I discovered the mistake, and saw that on the principle embraced in my conduct, there never could be a congregation or church upon the earth.

"As to 'the purblind Pharisee who strains out a gnat and swallows a camel,' because he will not have full communion with all the evangelical sects in the mass, I have to remark, that it is not optional with me or you whether we would have Christian communion with them. They have something to say upon that subject; and here, once for all, it must be noted, that my having communion with any society, Baptist or Pedobaptist, depends just as much upon them as upon myself. Some Baptist congregations would not receive me into their communion, and if any Pedobaptist society would, it is time enough to show that I am inconsistent with my own principles when any 'evangelical sect or congregation' shall have welcomed me to their communion, and I have refused it. At the same time, I frankly own, that my full conviction is, that there are many Pedobaptist congregations, of whose Christianity, or of whose profession of Christianity, I think as highly, as of most Baptist congregations, and with whom I could wish to be on the very same terms of Christian communion on which I stand with the whole Baptist society."

"Dear sir, this plan of making our own nest, and fluttering over our own brood; of building our own tent, and of confining all goodness and grace to our noble selves and the 'elect few' who are like us, is the quintessence of sublimated pharisaism. The old Pharisees were but babes in comparison to the modern: and the longer I live, and the more I reflect upon God and man—heaven and earth—the Bible and the world—the Redeemer and his church—the more I am assured that all sectarianism is the offspring of hell; and that all differences about words, and names, and opinions, hatched in Egypt, or Rome, or Edinburgh, are like the frolics of drunken men; and that where there is a new creature, or a society of them, with all their imperfections, and frailties, and errors in sentiment, in views, and opinions, they ought to receive one another, and the strong to support the infirmities of the weak, and not to please themselves. To lock ourselves up in the bandbox of our own little circle; to associate with a few units, tens, or hundreds, as the pure church, as the elect, is real Protestant monkery, it is evangelical pharisaism.

"If we would heal the sick, we must visit them; if we would restore the lame, we must take them by the hand; if we would correct, inform, or reform erring Christians, we must do as the Savior did; —bear with their weaknesses. We must seek every opportunity of converting the sinner from the error of his way, of instructing the weak and feeble-minded. It is lame charity which requires all its objects to be as rich, as wise, and as strong as ourselves. And the history of the world does not afford one instance of any man, or set of men, reforming, or restoring, or enlightening, or comforting the society from which they separated. And the systems and sects which they built, in the lapse of a few years, were as much in need of reformation, as those from which their founders separated."

A Commendation.

In point of fact The Christian-Evangelist always strives to accept advertising from reputable and responsible concerns only, and quite generally succeeds in this effort.

In the very nature of things, however, we are sometimes in a better position to speak positively concerning one advertiser than of another. General information is usually reliable, but specific information is much more so. Our advertising manager has taken pains to investigate the standing and reputation of the Apex Manufacturing Company (see advertisement on last page of this issue), and as a result we feel gratified in presenting the propositions of this concern to our readers, being confident that in doing so we are rendering to them quite as much service as we are to the Apex Manufacturing Company.

The company is incorporated under the laws of Illinois, with an authorized capital of $150,000. Its officers are: John J. Pitts, president; Abel Brooks, vice president; R. T. Lain, treasurer, and J. A. Harrison, secretary and general manager. All are leading citizens of Bloomington, Ill. The president is an officer in the First Baptist Church, the other three officers are active members of the Christian church in that city.

The concern itself is the result of the combination of the following favorably known vehicle manufactories, viz.: The Keystone Carriage Company, of Cincinnati, and the Columbus Vehicle Company and the Parsons Vehicle Company, both of Columbus, O. It has a well-equipped plant and a large force of experienced workmen. Not being a member of any trust or combination it is absolutely free in its dealings with its customers, and, selling direct, is able to make a fair profit and yet sell at a lower rate than that charged, necessarily, by the retail dealer. They have issued a splendid catalog of 80 pages (a real work of art), illustrating and describing their vehicles, harness and saddles, which can be had for the asking. In their publication they tell of the material entering into the manufacture of each separate part, and the method of construction. The book is not only decidedly handsome but exceedingly interesting. Every reader of this paper who contemplates the purchase of anything in their line will do well to write for a catalog and examine it. It will surely detract nothing from the attention you will receive to mention that you are a reader of The Christian-Evangelist. The Apex Manufacturing Company give a binding guarantee, signed by an officer of the company, with every vehicle sold.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

The St. Louis Letter.

At a recent meeting of the ministers of St. Louis and vicinity 81 additions to the various churches were reported, 34 by confession and baptism. Compton Heights reported 11, with 7 baptisms; Hamilton Avenue, 8, with 2 baptisms; The First, 18, with 2 baptisms; Hammett Place, 3, no baptisms; Lansdowne (Brother McFarland's meeting), 25, with 17 baptisms; Fourth Church, 4, with 2 baptisms; Union Avenue, 7, with 4 baptisms; Carondelet, 1, with no baptisms; Maplewood, '5, with no baptisms.——George L. Snively has been called to the Second Church and will preach on Lord's days and attend to business in the Christian Publishing Company during the week. We hope to hear good reports from the Second.——The Compton Heights church now has four Christian Endeavor Societies, or rather four departments of the Christian Endeavor Society—Junior, Intermediate, Young People's and Senior department. All are in most excellent condition. All but the Juniors hold their meetings at the same time in different parts of the church, Sunday at 7 p. m. The Juniors meet on Friday at 4 p. m. The First Church has the largest Senior society among our people in the city; Union Avenue has the largest home Bible school in the city, with the Fourth and Compton Heights close seconds. Compton Heights has the largest number of children under its care of any of our churches, having three Bible schools, with about 800 pupils in all.——Brother Jones, of East St. Louis, and Bro. C. O. Reynard, of Alton and Lansdowne, Ill., are two promising young men of the East Side, who take part with us in our regular ministers' meetings.——At a recent meeting of the City Mission Board it was decided to purchase a lot in Carondelet and move the work there to a more suitable location. We hope to have a suitable house for that work all completed and paid for by the time of our centennial celebration. Brother Ireland has worked hard in that field and deserves better accommodations.——Compton Heights is trying a rather unique plan to pay off the church debt as the notes come due. One day in the year is set apart as church debt day, and every member is asked to give his income for that day toward the debt. We hope in this way to meet our notes promptly and at the same time avoid a specially heavy burden on the people at any one time. The members are enthusiastic over the plan, but so far as that is concerned they are generally enthusiastic over every advance in the Master's work.

The state lectureship has come and gone. It was good, but not so good as it might have been, nor as good as it may be made. The addresses were good and if length is any indication we would say that the writers put a great deal of time on them. At least several of them put a great deal of time into reading them. We may be out of harmony with our brethren, but we think that any man who is capable of writing an address for such an occasion as a state lectureship ought to be capable of bringing it to within forty minutes. No man can hope to say all that may be said on the subjects discussed at such meetings, and any one capable of writing for such an occasion ought to be able to say enough in forty minutes to get the subject fairly before the assembly. Hence, if we were making rules to govern our lectureships we would limit the first speaker to forty minutes, and the reviewer to thirty minutes. We would so notify them when assigning the subjects, and when the time assigned them had expired have the chairman call them down, and if the chairman did not do it we would call him down.

While we are criticising we wish to speak of another matter that seems to need some attention. We wish the ladies would either change the style of the hats they wear to church or take them off. We feel sure that Paul never had any experience with the kind of hats that are worn these days, or he would never have advised the women to keep them on in meeting. It is not often that we ministers get to sit in the audience, hence we do not know the trials through which our auditors pass week after week. But recently we have had a little taste of it. Together with big hats and one hour and ten minutes and one hour and a quarter speeches, we have larger sympathy with the people who sit in the pews than ever before. How can one be converted unless he hear the sermon? How can he hear and enjoy the sermon unless he see the preacher? How can he see the preacher behind such hats? We are in perfect sympathy with that rendering of the text that makes it read, "Top not come down."

Canton is one of the delightful small cities of Missouri. The people have hearts as big as the hill and college both together, and such good things to eat, and so much, and such a cheerful welcome; such hospitality can not be excelled even in Kentucky.—F. N. Calvin.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

A large number of your readers sent me recipes for removing stains from my dress. I thank them all. In answer to inquiries regarding the fruit business, I would say, I made $121. last week, sold directions to 121 families; people pay $1. for directions quickly. I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh and costs almost nothing. I feel it my duty to give my experience, as anyone who will try, should make one or two hundred dollars in a few days right round home. I will mail a bottle of fruit and complete directions to you, for 21 two cent stamps, which is only the cost of bottle, fruit, mailing case, postage, etc. Address Francis Casey, No. 201 W. 111 St., Block 10, New York, N. Y. With a bottle of fruit for people to see and taste, you should sell hundreds of directions.

Oregon.

We are nearing the time of our "annual meeting" and several churches have sent no offering to the larger work of the state, and a good many pledges are yet unpaid. Get ready for Turner, June 21 to July 1. We hope to have Victor Dorris as chief speaker, and we will have the presence and help of F. M. Rains, R. P. Shepherd; of California, and A. L. Chapman, of Washington. All the national societies will be represented by able speakers.

March witnessed the closing of several good meetings, which have added something like 175 to the membership of the churches. The men in the field are doing splendid work. I am glad to be permitted to spend April largely in helping the pastors of this state in preparing for the "May offering." Last year Oregon stood twelfth in the amount given by states and third in the average gift per member, yet our gift was only $1,344 and the average 13 4-5 cents each. Just 43 churches made offerings, and only 17 of these were on the roll of honor. Of the $1,344 given in last year's offering the church at Athena gave $360, leaving $1,000 for the other churches. If I have things straight, for the $1,344 that Oregon gave, the A. C. M. S. is returning to this state through the O. C. M. C., "living link" work in eastern Oregon and by gift to the church at LaGrande, the sum of $1,400. Of this the State Board receives $750, the $650 going directly into eastern Oregon.

Let us push this year's offering until it shall be worthy our great "plea" and shall permit our gift to go far beyond our borders and aid the 23 other states more needy than our own.—F. E. Billington, Corresponding Secretary O. C. M. C., Cottage Grove, Ore.

From the Crescent City.

The Soniat Avenue Christian Church of New Orleans has recently held a successful evangelistic series of meetings with E. L. Crystal, of Baton Rouge, as our leader. We call this a successful meeting, although there were only 11 additions—8 baptisms. A dozen additions here is equal to 100 in many other places. Brother Crystal is an excellent evangelist and song leader. The meeting continued three weeks. It was my privilege to speak for Brother Crystal's congregation in Baton Rouge while he was here. That is an heroic band of Disciples, and they are struggling manfully under a heavy debt. Brother Crystal is doing a good work there, which is supported jointly by the C. W. B. M. and the A. C. M. S.

Our Louisiana churches are making progress in state missions. The offerings excel many of our old and wealthy churches in the central states. Soniat Avenue gave $86; Monroe, "the baby church," $50; Alexandria, $55; Shreveport, $150; Leesville, $125; Crowley, $12; Lake Charles, $200. Where is there a better record than that?

Since our meeting closed at Soniat Avenue there have been three additions by letter, and the letters were of recent date! If only our people would unite with us before their letters mildew and their hearts suffer from fatty degeneration! A man of good promise is in jail here for forgery, whose wife has carried her church letter in her trunk for four years. There was a time when he would have come into the church if his wife had made the start.

The second anniversary of the organization of the Soniat Avenue Church by the American Christian Missionary Society has just passed. Organized with 23 charter members, there were 39 when I came here, 15 months ago. In two years the original number has been almost multiplied by four. In the 15 months 51 have been added, and there are now something over 60 active members. The past year the church gave $502 to missions and benevolences outside of the local work. The church is planning to pay off a note of $600 due the Church Extension Board July 1. We have a splendid property worth about $8,000. All this work has been possible only through the aid of the American Christian Missionary Society. For fifty years and more we have had but one church in this city, but now we have a second, which is already as large as the first and just as efficient. We should soon have a third church in this city.
—Marcellus R. Ely, New Orleans.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

CARLETON BLDG., ST. LOUIS.

In the matter of investments, I desire to state my position, so that my friends and the public may know how I operate.

I do not carry a line of investments "for sale," as other brokerage and bond houses do, but recommend and purchase for my clients such securities as I feel certain are good and in every respect safe and secure as to principal and interest.

Not having a line of investments to sell, I can give an unbiased opinion and disinterested advice concerning investments, that I could not do otherwise. I REPRESENT THE PURCHASER, and not the maker or seller of securities, and for my services in these matters I charge a reasonable fee. You pay for legal or medical advice; why not pay for advice in the matter of investing your money?

These are the days of specialists, and I claim to be an INVESTMENT SPECIALIST!

Illinois Notes.

We are happy to welcome Lee Tinsley back to Illinois. This, we believe, means a strong and great church at Olney, if the church gives the co-operation and support which it is competent to do. ——We hope E. W. Sears will be able to do a great work in his new field at the good old church of Vienna.——J. W. Watters has entered one of the strong churches of Illinois in taking up the work at Niantic. The field in some respects is undeveloped, but great possibilities are before it. ——We welcome G. W. Thompson from Missouri to the good field at Robinson. The harvest is great and laborers few in that part of the state. ——We trust that J. A. Clemens and the Waverly church will be successful in greatly enlarging the work.

Returns from Education day continue to remind us that preachers and churches, at least some of them, are awake to the importance of the Christian college which trains most of our aggressive ministers, leaders and missionaries for the Lord's work. There is no disparagement to the man who is heroically fighting the battles of the Lord without thorough training, for none deplore the want of liberal equipment more than he. But in this age of learning and complications we must have more men especially fitted to carry on the aggressive warfare of the kingdom of God.

Fifty-seven churches have observed Education day and reported up to date. This is the largest number we have ever had in Illinois, and we wish we knew the interest manifested in other states. The work is at the very foundation and will give power and efficiency to every department of Christian effort. The amount contributed is $1,263.96, with more to follow. This is a small sum, but a good beginning. The average is $22 for each contributing church. Some of our stronger churches are not in this fellowship. Only about one church in eight made any effort so far.

The offering on Education day by the church at Eureka was $423, Paris $133, Bloomington (Second Church) $64.50, Rock Island $42.25, St. Augustine $37.90, Decatur $30. These are the larger givers, although some small churches did nobly. If space permitted all would be printed, with the preachers' names.

Strenuous life and constant exposure seemed to make it necessary to give up the work for a time. I sought the balmy breezes of the south, and with my good wife spent a month at Hammond, La. It is a pleasant little city of about 2,500 people, 53 miles north of New Orleans, on the Illinois Central railroad. Its artesian water, ever-blooming flowers and lovely sunshine made it a place of delightful retreat from the snow and ice and winds of Illinois. The population is about half white and half black. More than half the white population are from the north, Iowa, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana and Ohio making the larger contributions. The great industry is lumber making. Large pine logs are brought in by ox wagons and tram railways from near-by to ten miles away. Strawberries and vegetables are raised in considerable quantities. We found a delightful church of Christ of about 80 members. Frank Lanehart is the much and justly loved minister, who gives all his time to them. The Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor Society, C. W. B. M. and the ladies' aid would compare favorably with any church of equal size in the north. Three times the church has been on the roll of honor for its missionary offerings. No wonder it is happy and prosperous.

John A. Stevens, the state evangelist for Louisiana, held a short meeting during our stay, and several were obedient to the faith. He is rapidly enlarging the work of the state. There are not a great many churches in the state, but every one has regular preaching. He considers it his business to see that they do. He is a man of splendid ability in the pulpit, as well as a good organizer and manager of the King's business. His wife is a most competent leader of the music in his meetings and helper in every way. We shall gratefully remember the friendship and social fellowship of Brother Lanehart and his noble flock.

We found New Orleans a typical southern city, although the business man of the north is not unknown. There is a large section where the houses for miles are low and poor, occupied by foreigners. I asked a friend if these people were all really poor or did they just choose to live this way. He said, "Nobody knows." He then related how one of the men, a fruit vender, had a concession to have a stand on the street outside of a large store. As the time for a new lease approached, the merchant objected to the landlord's re-letting the concession to the dago again. The owner of the building so notified the dago, but before time to close up the new lease the dago had bought the entire building and notified the merchant to move out. So "nobody knows."

Two small churches of Christ are found in the city. The first was reorganized by Alexander Campbell and D. P. Henderson, in 1857. It has a modest home, a membership of less than 100, to whom A. C. Harris ministers. About two years ago Evangelist Stevens organized the second church further out in the residence portion. It has about an $8,000 property, a membership of about 80 souls and a good Sunday-school and other departments of usefulness. M. R. Ely is the minister. Brother Crystal, of Baton Rouge, and he were holding a meeting; several had confessed Christ. The leading spirit about the church is Brother Denholme, formerly of Missouri, who sends his Christian love to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family.

The Home Missionary Society is doing wise work in the state, and our colleges are contributing noble men to carry forward the work. May the Lord bless the men who struggle in the sunny southland.—J. G. Waggoner, Eureka, Ill.

Northern Ohio Notes.

J. L. Deming, of Norwalk, has been preaching every Sunday afternoon for several months at Clyde, and now has an embryo church ready for organization. The fund being raised by the Endeavor Societies of the state will probably be used to support a pastor there. Already Brother Deming has another point in view where he proposes to do a similar work. The Norwalk church has bought a lot in the best location in the city. ——The Galion church is preparing to build. I was over to preach for them recently, and took pledges for the building fund. A very desirable location, much better than the present one, is likely to be secured. Charles A. Pearce deserves much credit for his faithful work during the past three years, under very great discouragements.——Under the leadership of J. K. Shellenberger the Wooster church has bought a building site in a much better location. A new building in that college city will mean much for the work of the entire state.——S. H. Forer, recently minister for the Fourth Avenue Church, Columbus, has cast his lot with the Presbyterians and will serve the First Presbyterian Church at Norwalk.——The splendid new Central Church of Marion was dedicated April 8. I preached the dedicatory sermon and am conducting a short meeting. Three years ago a little band of people from the First Church organized this church and undertook the erection of a building that would be a credit to our cause in the state. A fine location was selected that commands the best residence section of the city and only a few blocks from the business center. The new church is built of cement blocks and looks as well as if built of the finest stone. It cost only $13,000, but is equal to any $25,000 building that I have ever seen. O. D. Maple has been the capable director general of this great work.——W. H. Pinkerton, of Paducah, Ky., conducted a home missionary rally at Mansfield. His address at night was one of the very best that I have ever heard, and I try to hear every well-known speaker in the nation at least one time.

I went over to Connersville, Ind., to hear Scoville and to claim his promise made to me when we were working together in Chicago, that if I would come to Mansfield he would hold a meeting for me. After hearing him again I am persuaded that no other living man can do what he is doing. If Torrey or Chapman were to try to hold meetings for individual congregations it would soon be seen that they can not do what he is doing. I predict that when he begins union evangelistic work he will do what Torrey and Chapman have never been able to do. Next year he will be with us in Mansfield.

Byron C. Piatt, of Ashland, who has been engaged in anti-saloon work for some time, is ready to locate again as pastor when a suitable opening presents itself. I believe him to be eminently fitted for evangelistic work and advised him to undertake it. He has consented to do so if the churches desire his services. I hope he will receive many calls for meetings at once. I would esteem it an honor to be instrumental in causing such a good man to enter the field that offers the greatest opportunities of any that the world presents to-day.

The work at Mansfield continues to prosper beyond all our hopes. This is truly a great church. If I am able to enlarge its missionary spirit it will be a model church.—Bruce Brown, Mansfield, O.

Easy to Make Money!

You want to make some money? What woman or man does not? You have a good use for some money you could make without interfering with your regular duties, or you would like to do some regular work that will pay you well. Let us tell you how. You can do it by selling the Mound City Dishwasher. Agents are making from $3.00 to $10.00 a day, depending upon the amount of time they give to it. You should do as well. Only a few minutes a day will accomplish wonders right in your own neighborhood. The machine almost sells itself as soon as it is understood. Think what a delight it would be to a housewife to wash, rinse and dry her dishes without once putting her hands in the water. Think how much labor and time she would save and how much nicer her hands would look. Don't you think it would be easy for you to sell a machine like that, especially one that costs but little and is easy to operate and one on which you make a big profit? Write at once to the Mound City Dishwasher Co., Dept. 407, St. Louis, Mo., for full particulars and their liberal offer to agents. They will give you exclusive territory if you apply for it right away. If not, get to work right where you are and make some money.

THE WHEAT AND THE TARES.

There are tares in fields where the units are congregations as well as where they are individuals. Those churches that are lukewarm, nonmissionary, that are rearing no ministers of the Gospel and are not preparing mortals for the skies are surely as tares.

This parable forewarns us against being too sanguine of absolute purity and perfectness in Zion. Though there be tares in the church, the Lord's plans are not frustrated. With all its imperfections, he will yet accomplish with it all he designed while giving his life for its establishment.

It is often that tares are degenerates from good grain. There may be no power in vigorous wheat to transform the tare back into a useful plant, but by its own health and life it may prevent degeneration. So with us, health is more contagious than disease, and we may save many from spiritual deterioration and we may even make good wheat of some now appearing to be only tares.

Many would fondly so interpret this parable as to have the wheat represent church members, and the tares those who have never made a profession of religion. But here, again, judgment seems to begin in the house of God. The contrast is not between men of the world and men of the church, but between the fruitful and unfruitful professor. It is fearfully possible for one to be an office bearer in the church for years and attend all the prayer-meetings and yet at last be found in the bundle of tares.

The same shine and showers nourish the tares that bend low the grain with its weight of wealth; but after the sickle, one is burned and the other treasured with care. It is so in fields of humanity. The unjust share the prosperity of the good. At times they seem to get more than their share, but harvest comes, the sickle falls and their destinies are seen to be most variant. The tares are burned with the fire that is not quenched, but the good are borne in triumph home, beautiful trophies of redeeming love in the harvest home of souls.

The tares and wheat in society may be easily distinguished by the discerning. In the former class we immediately place the brewer, saloonist and gambler, and with them, no matter how refined and well educated they may be, all who devote themselves to the fashionable rounds of idleness, whether men or women. Those who take more from the common store house of the community than they produce are tares. With the wheat we classify servant and savant, peasant and prince, regardless of financial, educational or hereditary differences, provided only they add to the world's stock of good, material, moral, emotional and spiritual.

In the exchange only those are called producers—the "wheat" of society—who bring golden treasures from field or mine, wring them from inventive genius, or enhance values by transportation or combination of commodities. But there are producers of higher values. He who comforts the sorrowing, gives courage to the faltering, by chisel or brush communicates new conceptions of beauty and idealism, writes a song multitudes chant while rising to higher levels of thought and life, or plants the hope of immortality and glory in a human heart, God and all whose opinions we prize hold among the real producers—"the wheat of humanity."

SKIN PURIFICATION.

Effected by Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Pills when All Else Fails.

The agonizing itching and burning of the skin, as in eczema; the frightful scaling, as in psoriasis; the loss of hair and crusting of scalp, as in scald head; the facial disfigurement, as in acne and ringworm; the awful suffering of infants, and anxiety of worn-out parents, as in milk-crust, tetter, eczema or salt rheum—all demand a remedy of almost superhuman virtues to successfully cope with them. That Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Pills are such stands proven by the testimony of the civilized world.

We have the purest of air, the water is clear as crystal and the fishing and hunting are of the finest. The lakes are full of the finest fish, such as Bass, Pickerel, Perch, etc., and the streams are full of the beautiful Speckled Trout. We are located 66 miles north of Bay City, Mich., on the Rose City division of the Detroit & Mackinac R. R. The accessible feature of our property is unexcelled.

OUR OBJECT.

Our object is to make this one of the finest Recreation and Summer Outing Grounds anywhere to be found. The principal features will be fishing, boating, bathing, canoeing, hunting, yachting, kodaking, ball playing, lawn tennis, etc. We expect to make this a place where people can go to spend their vacation about as cheaply as they can stay at home.

NOW LISTEN.

It is the plan of this organization to sell lots at a price and upon terms that every man or woman can secure one; and as the price of lumber is so very low, a cottage can be erected at a very low cost. ### THE PARABLE OF THE TARES. —Matt. 13:24-30, 36-43.

Memory verse, 30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.—Gal. 6:7.

This lesson is based on another of the parables spoken at the Sea of Galilee. The parable of the tares is closely akin to that of the sower in the subject matter of the picture which is used to convey the religious truth. Both are parables of the farm and represent the development of character and of the spiritual life under the figure of the growth of seed. But while the parable of the sower exhibits the different results of good teaching on the hearts of different kinds of men, the parable of the tares shows the outcome of good and bad teaching when applied to the same sort of human nature.

The parable of the sower takes no account of the existence of any but good seed in the world, and any failure of fruitfulness appears as the result of unreceptiveness or unproductiveness on the part of man. But there is a contagion of evil as well as of good. There are evil motives and suggestions which pass from life to life, which are so widely disseminated that they seem a part of the very air that we breathe. Even good natures may be corrupted by them. The question of responsibility is not here raised, but the question of consequences is clearly answered. However good may be the soil, tares bring forth tares. Weeds come from weeds as surely as wheat from wheat. Admirable qualities of heart and mind and high native endowments are no guarantee of a rich harvest of character. The harvest will depend upon the kind of seed that is received and allowed to germinate and grow in the life. Better a small crop of wheat from poor soil rightly sowed, than a luxuriant harvest of thorns from rich soil occupied by evil.

The parable of the tares is an answer to that easy and false philosophy of life which demands that sin be immediately punished and that righteousness be indicated without delay, and that loses faith in God and attacks the whole moral order of the universe on observing that this program is not always carried out. Why does the good man suffer and why, if there be a good God, do the wicked flourish? This was the question which puzzled Job. He saw that the simple philosophy of his three friends, who made sin and suffering inseparable and could not imagine virtue and happiness apart from each other, was too simple to be true. It did not take account of all the facts. The same problem of suffering and evil has busied many generations of philosophers and bothered many plain people.

Why are the wicked allowed to prosper? Because the social fabric of humanity is too complicated to permit the prompt punishment of every sinner without inflicting undeserved suffering on the righteous. If the world were constructed on a basis of absolute individualism, doubtless it would be arranged that sin would get its immediate and just reward. But no man liveth to himself. As the roots of wheat and tares are intertwined in the field, so are the interests of the righteous and the wicked closely connected. And so, rather than pull down the whole fabric of society in order to punish sinners, God can afford to be patient. But justice will yet be done. There will be a final reward and punishment.

"The field is the world"—not the church. The parable is sometimes cited in support of that conception of the church that it should include good and bad alike, and that the bad should be allowed to remain in it. But this is not the application of it.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

May 2, 1906.

THE UPPER CHAMBER.—Acts 2:1-12,37.

Pentecostal gleamings: Joel 2:28-32, Zech. 1:12-17, Is. 46:12,13, John 14:15-21, John 14:25-29, John 16:7-14, Acts 1:4-9.

The tongues of fire most appropriately symbolized the presence of the Holy Spirit. He comes to destroy that which is unholy and destructive, even as a consuming flame; his testimony glows with light and power; his indwelling makes men's hearts burn within them with love for their Redeemer and with kindling thoughts of the glory of the Father to be revealed in them.

Those men went from that audience with God and so preached as to convict men of righteousness, of sin, and judgment. With desperate earnestness sinners asked, "What must we do?" and before the sun went down on that Lord's day, 3,000 souls had been saved as brands from the burning. Let us prepare ourselves for this heavenly enduement and then go forth and tell of Jesus and his love and we also will have souls for our reward.

The Holy Spirit did not long manifest himself through the apostles till it was noised abroad, and "the multitude came together." O that in our churches were more men and women through whom the same Holy Spirit might be manifested to men and speak to them! "Create in me a new heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me," that I may help draw all men unto thee. Eloquence, sensationalism, persistent invitations, all have their part in filling our churches, but naught else will so avail as Spirit-filled communicants.

The miraculous works of Bible times are still wrought by the Lord, though different methods may be employed. He still changes water into wine, and hangs it in purple buckets on the hills. On Pentecost his disciples preached the new Gospel in 20 languages, but through the operation of his Spirit on the hearts of men, schools have been established wherein students have learned to translate the Scriptures into 400 dialects and give to manifold more the Gospel than heard it on that historic day. The Lord's arm is not shortened and we live in the most miraculous of ages.

Those going forth from that upper room "spake as the Spirit gave them utterance." "May the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer." Had the followers of Jesus continued to speak in matters religious only as inspired by the Spirit none of those sad chapters of church history telling of division, sectarianism, persecution and of resulting indifference and infidelity had ever been written. Let us cultivate more and more the grace of speaking the dialect and sentiments inculcated in the early disciples in that sacred upper room.

Here was the supreme fulfillment of Joel's prophecy of 800 years before: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit." The prophets never had the Spirit in such measure—Jesus had not yet come. That to which they looked forward with such eagerness, for the Comforter which Jesus also promised and for which he bade apostles wait had now come in fulness and for all the children of the faith. Blessed are we for whom this heavenly enduement is intended and which we all may have without stint.

BUCKLEY.

Brother Mark Buckley, preceded by his companion, Sister Cornelia Job Buckley, by only four weeks, fell asleep, March 3, 1906. Sister Buckley was in her eighty-third year, he in his ninety-first. She was born near Virginia, Ill., her last earthly home, and he in Oldham, Lancashire, England. They celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary several years ago. They were loyal members of the Church of Christ, and saw their five children who survive them obedient to the faith. Everybody who knew them intimately esteemed them highly for their true nobility of character and their generosity of heart. Brother Buckley, though for several years very frail, was ill only a few hours. He was expecting to soon follow his companion, and the day before his death had transacted considerable business down town, setting his financial interests in perfect order. Both funerals, conducted by the writer, took place from the Church of Christ.

Virginia, Ill. JOHN W. CARPENTER.

BUTLER.

Amanda, daughter of William and Mary Black, wife of B. B. Butler, yet living at age of 82, born December 13, 1830, near Elkton, Ky., died near Denver, Ill., February 28, 1906. She had been the Lord's disciple over 55 years, and was a charter member of the Denver congregation.

Canton Mo. B. H. CLEAVER.

LUCAS.

Mrs. J. P. Lucas' maiden name was Jennie Elizabeth Wilbraham. She was born at Fort Covington, Franklin county, N. Y., June 18, 1849. Her father was from England, and her mother from Canada. She leaves one brother and two sisters. The brother is William Wilbraham, of Cresco, Ia., and the sisters are Mrs. W. J. Clark, of Britton, Mich., and Mrs. J. N. Calkins, of Chicago. Their father was a soldier in the English army, and arrived in America in time to take part in the civil war. Mrs. Lucas' girlhood was spent in Laporte, Ind. August 31, 1873, she was married in that city to J. P. Lucas. Four children came into the home, two girls and two boys. Leona D. and George W. are living. Nettie Glenn died Feb. 26, 1898. Albert Wilbraham died in Colorado City nine months later to a day. Thus half of this family is in heaven and half upon earth. Mrs. Lucas became a Christian at Laporte, Ind., when a girl, under the ministry of M. M. Lord, a pioneer preacher. Since the date of her marriage her history and that of her husband has been one. Together they labored in 1875 in northern Indiana, at Rolling Prairie and Newcastle. For five years they served the churches at Millburg and Vandalia, Mich. In 1881 they moved to Harlan, Ia., and lived there two years. They were five years at Bedford, Ia., and two and a half years at Centerville. In 1890, chiefly on account of Mrs. Lucas' health, they came to Colorado Springs and labored most successfully for three and a half years. The next four years were spent in Kansas, at Emporia and Creston. Mrs. Lucas' health was again the chief factor which brought them back to Colorado City, in 1898. Brother Lucas did evangelistic work, and supplied various pulpits until three years ago, when he was appointed chaplain of the Colorado state penitentiary at Canon City. Here in Colorado Springs their work was remarkably successful. Their pastorate of three and a half years was the longest in the 30 years' history of the church. They began in a small, inadequate building on Huerfano street, but when they left the church was worshiping in a beautiful modern house on North Nevada. When they came there were 120 members. They left a membership of 556. No other ministry in the history of the church has been so abundantly blessed of God. In all these splendid achievements she was a full partner and helpmeet. It is the testimony of the husband that her hold on people has always been stronger than his. For 18 years she battled heroically against death, but at midnight, April 6, her spirit was liberated from the frail body and she was at rest. As a wife, mother, friend and neighbor, and as the consecrated Christian companion of a busy and successful preacher, her character was ideal. CRAYTON S. BROOKS.

NOBLITT.

Nancy M. Noblitt, born in Adair county, Mo., in 1846; died at Weatherford, Okla., March 9, 1906. Her maiden name was Stice, and since becoming a Christian at the age of seventeen she has been true to her pledge and lived a consistent, faithful life. In 1865 she married William P. Noblitt The interment took place at Moberly, Mo.

WOOD.

The beloved wife of Bro. J. H. Wood, minister of the Second Christian Church, Augusta, Ga., passed away at the parsonage there on March 3. She had been in ill health for a few years, but her death was wholly unexpected at the time. She is survived by her husband, father and mother, five brothers, two sisters and two children, aged about 9 and 7. The funeral services were conducted in the Christian church at Winder, Ga., March 6, by the writer, assisted by Bros. T. M. Foster and P. H. Mears. As Miss Myrtis Saunders she was united in marriage with Brother Wood in this same church a little more than nine years ago. W. A. CHASTAIN.

THE VICTORY OF FAITH

By E. L. POWELL

Twenty-one Sermons and Addresses in the Author's best vein

HEAR WHAT A FEW SAY:

Dean W. J. Lhamon, of the Bible College of Missouri, Columbia, Mo., says: "This volume is of such a high order, so vigorous and inspiring and Christological, that it may well be studied as a homiletical masterpiece, and as indicative of the trend of best pulpit work among the Disciples of Christ."

The Christian Observer says: "Mr. Powell is pastor of the First Christian Church of Louisville, Ky., and in the 20 sermons in this volume he gives valuable and attractive food for religious thought. While in some places he presents the peculiar views of his denomination, he deals, for the most part, with the Gospel in its gracious truth and adaptation to the needs of human hearts."

F. M. Green, Akron, O., says: "All of the sermons bear the marks of thought, and all of them are felicitous in expression. They are strong enough to give pleasure to study, simple enough to be easily understood and palatable enough for the most of religious appetites. Such sermons can not fail to do good to the real lover of earnest, honest and faithful teaching."

The Louisville Courier-Journal says: "'The Victory of Faith' has 20 sermons and addresses, covering almost every phase of religious thought and life, each treated in Dr. Powell's own inimitable way."

The Louisville Evening Post says: "These sermons and addresses are those of an active thinker and worker and, together, form a real help to the practice of Christian doctrine. Many are printed as delivered, and have, therefore, the style and manner of the author as he speaks from his pulpit. The dominant note is that of triumphant Christianity making its way through the doubt and darkness of the world and of the individual. The volume is well named—the whole subject is the victory of Christian faith."

Another says: "These are masterly addresses by one of our most gifted and successful preachers who is held in high esteem throughout the brotherhood."

"Still Open to Conviction."

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I am a reader of both the "Christian Standard" and The Christian-Evangelist and while I have some ideas about this church federation business, I am, I believe, still open to conviction.

Noticing an open letter from Dr. Sanford in The Christian-Evangelist, one or two expressions he uses prompt me to write this brief article. He says, "Surely those who enter into the fellowship of federation councils, national, state or local, ought to be ready in a spirit of loyalty to Christ to accept and, as far as possible, unite in the furtherance of aims and decisions that have the general approval of its members." Now, Dr. Sanfard had just finished saying that the federation has "no authority over the constituent bodies adhering to it." If the individual members of the federation comprise the constituent bodies "adhering to it" and those individual members must be bound by "the general approval of its [the federation's] members," why will not "the constituent bodies" be bound also? It seems to me that Dr. Sanford is contradicting himself.

Again, he says that federation "urges action that will manifest to the world not only the spirit of Christ, but the oneness of believers in him." I thought, and I believe many others have thought, that federation was for the purpose of developing "oneness in Christ," rather than "manifesting it to the world." If we already have "oneness in him" why should we have federation? Isn't "oneness" better than "federation"? We all know we have no "oneness in him" to-day, so, according to Dr. Sanford, federation is for the purpose of manifesting to the world a falsehood.

Again, if "Christ is the head of the church," and Dr. Sanford says he is, is not the church, or churches, the body? If the body, then we are one, and need no federation to make us one, and if some sections of the body (sectarian churches) have severed their connection with the head, do not you think the best kind of federation for them would be to unite to Christ, the head? Then, indeed, we would all be one; even as Christ and God are one, so would we be one in Christ, the New Testament way of "federation." E. E. Lowe.

Arkansas City, Kan.

[It is a real pleasure to answer the questions of a brother who, although he has given some thought to federation and has some ideas on the subject, is "still open to conviction." With perfect candor and brotherly consideration we will attempt to answer his questions, and we heartily welcome all such to our columns:

1. The first difficulty relates to an apparent contradiction, as it seems to our querist, between the statement which Dr. Sanford quotes from the proposed "Basis of Federation," that the federal council "has no authority over the constituent bodies adhering to it," and his own statement that "those who enter into the fellowship of federation councils . . . ought to be ready in a spirit of loyalty to Christ, to accept, and as far as possible unite in the furtherance of aims and decisions that have the general approval of its members." Is this last statement anything more than we would all say concerning those who participate in the deliberations and actions of our missionary conventions which disclaim any authority over their "constituent bodies," the churches? Would we not all agree that brethren entering into the fellowship of these conventions "ought to accept, and as far as possible unite in the furtherance of aims and decisions that have the general approval of its members? That is exactly what the delegates to our conventions ought to do, "as far as possible." And yet that is not in the slightest degree inconsistent with our claim that our conventions exercise no authority over the churches or individual members; no authority, but only the influence of reason and right.

2. The second difficulty relates to Dr. Sanford's statement that federation "urges such action as will manifest to the world the oneness of believers" in Christ. Our correspondent's idea is that federation was for the purpose of developing oneness in Christ. Now, our idea is that federation will both manifest the unity that already exists and will necessarily develop a still greater oneness. No one can deny that the evangelical Protestant bodies do hold many vital truths in common. Why not manifest this unity for the sake of the good it will accomplish and with the view of perfecting unity? We agree with our brother that the oneness we now have is incomplete; but we can not agree that there is no unity, and we do not believe that he so intends to be understood, but only that there is not perfect unity. So it does not appear that there is any contradiction in the statements of Dr. Sanford, nor any real difference between his view of what federation should accomplish and that of the rest of us.

3. Yes, Christ is the head of the Church which is his body, and all true believers are members of his body, that is, his church. Unity among all the members of his body and their harmonious co-operation is the ideal condition; but we have not yet attained to that ideal. None of us can claim to be perfectly obedient to the head, nor to co-operate with all the members of his body. Federation is a step toward the realization of this end.—Editor.]

A Spring Song.

Shall I believe again in spring?
My heart is cold with wintering,
My flowers are slain with frosty dew.
Oh, shall my garden bloom anew?
My frozen lilies to the light
Lift up their cups of green and white,
Shall leaves come on my empty trees,
And there be roses and heartsease?
The king is dead, long live the king!
The old king's ermines are brought low,
And the young king's new purples show;
Shall I believe again in spring?
This morning is a rosier thing,
And bears some promise in her eyes.
Spring's rumor runs, a sweet surmise,
Up from the taproots to the bough
Wherein the new sap rises now;
A veil of blue makes soft the skies
That were sealed fast with wintry gray.
A dancing wind has blown away
The memory of the winter's day.
The sun has lighted up perforce
The golden bonfires of the gorse,
Lest haply men and maids forget
That kissing is in season yet.
I'll take the hint the gorses give,
And I again will love and live.
My feet shall dance, my tongue shall sing,
And I'll believe again in spring.

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymond and Rhoda, when dying, tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymond and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half-brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. Rhoda has a visit from a mysterious man named Boggs, who claims to have been sent by Mrs. Revore's half-brother to find out whether the children know anything of a bronze vase. After much delay it is decided to send Rhoda to an orphan home, and Raymond to Mr. Omer's farm.]

PART II.

CHAPTER II.

It was not long before Baby felt very much at home with Raymond; enough to manifest a decided tendency to tyrannize. But Raymond, though not yet thirteen years old, had no intention of being put under subjection, either by his misfortunes, or by Baby. Perhaps he often felt that his position as nurse to Tom's child was not one that his mother could have viewed with contentment; but he realized that he was earning his board, and that at present this was as much as he could hope to do. Houndpup was also won over by the youth, and these three—the orphan, the baby and the dog, became at last fast friends. Tom and Fred, the other farmhand, left the house very early, after Tom had cooked breakfast and they did not come back till noon, when "Aunt Sophy," the black cook at the Omer mansion, sent them their dinner by her daughter—a tall, slim, aristocratic negress, who never entered the premises of the "Hands" without a comtemptuous flirt of her head. After the noon meal, Tom and Fred were gone again till dusk, when the scornful Jane Emma again came with two loaded baskets, and with a haughty sweep of her skirts.

Raymond realized that in the eyes of Jane Emma he occupied a lower social scale than the hands themselves, since he served Tom's child. But Raymond did not care for that. Even at this age, he showed a spirit of independence and resolution which in later years brought full fruit. Many a lad in his position would have sulked at the task imposed upon him, and while it would have been hard to resist the winning ways of Baby, many a youth would not only have grumbled and fretted in privacy, but would have made his discontent a source of discomfort to those around him. Raymond realized perfectly that as an orphan without a cent in the world he must win by his own efforts whatever position he might afterward occupy; that he could not float along on the current of events and hope to arrive at any of the thousand ports of success. He must work, and work hard; and he must win the approval of those with whom he was thrown. There were hours during the day that Raymond was freed from his task of nurse, for Baby took a nap—blessed nap!—right after dinner, which sometimes extended to 3 o'clock. Here was time that was Raymond's own; time not to be spent in grieving because he was less fortunate than others, not to be wasted in sighing because he had no home and no money and because he was an orphan. Raymond was determined never to waste any time in grieving for more time. When baby slept Raymond worked.

In the evenings the farmhands were weary and heavy after their day's labor. They went to bed soon after supper. Tom and Baby slept in one room, Fred and Raymund in the next. When Fred, a grizzled, wiry little man with long whiskers and big ears, and a thin, high, lisping voice, had gone to bed, Raymond would get out his books and seat himself by the smoky lamp. It was hard, sometimes, to keep awake. Sometimes he fell asleep in the middle of an example. Sometimes he could stay awake for hours, but thoughts of Rhoda seemed racing after each other in his brain. Sometimes the lessons were so hard and his ability to understand them so numbed by a hard day's play with Baby that he could only stare at the printed page repeating words which he did not understand. But all the same as soon as Fred laid his long whiskers on the pillow and drew up the sheet over one large red ear Raymund stacked his books beside the lamp and began his mental toil. Fred and Tom were greatly interested in his efforts. Tom was not sure that he approved.

"My wife would of liked that kind of thing," he said, "but it wasn't in me. Besides, what's the use? It won't help you plow corn, Raymund, and I reckon that's what you'll have to do when Baby gets old enough to stay alone, or to come out to the field. You've got plenty of time now, but when you are put to hard work you won't be able to sit up to it. You ought to just feel once, just for the knowledge of how it does feel, to sweat and strain in the hot sun from early dawn to twilight. When you come trompin' home after one of my day's diggin', you don't keer whether 2 times three is six or not! The mull'plication-table ain't nothin' to you, then; all you want is victuals and a bed."

"I intend to keep it up," said Raymund. "I mean to have an education, whatever comes! As sure as the night rolls 'round I'll be by the lamp with my books. The lessons may not come to me, but I'll be there ready for them!"

While Baby slept Raymund put in some of the time studying, but not all; and when baby was awake, Raymund put in most of the time amusing him, but not all the time. The youth had set himself the task of cleaning up the premises apportioned off to the "hands." It was a great undertaking for a lad not used to hard labor, but Raymund had begun to face great undertakings with an unfainting heart. In the course of time the weeds were cut, the discarded wheels were carried to the rear, the path was cleaned, the grass was cleared of plantain.

One afternoon as the lad was dragging a broken wheelbarrow to the rear of the "Hands' House," in order to try his ability as a repair man—having first convinced Baby that it was all a game—Mr. Omer hailed him. The owner of the farm stood near the ornamental fence. "Hey, boy! What are you doing?"

"The wheelbarrow didn't look nice in our front yard," said Raymund, pausing in an uncertain attitude; "I thought I'd hide it back with the other old things, and maybe I can mend it."

"Who has been cleaning up your place?" asked Mr. Omer. "You?"

"Yes, sir."

"I'm not going to pay a cent for that work," said Mr. Omer, frowning. "It don't have to be done."

"Of course not," said Raymund, "but you don't object, do you?"

"Oh, certainly not, certainly not," returned Mr. Omer, his frown passing away. "If it amuses you, go ahead. All I ask of you is to keep the baby satisfied so Tom can work. Tom's the best hand I ever had. Go ahead if you want to."

"It makes the place look so much better," said Raymund, who could not prevent a note of pride, as he glanced about upon his transformed yard."

"It looks right tidy," said Mr. Omer. He went away. That evening after supper, while Tom and Fred were smoking their pipes before going to bed, and talking in drowsy, rusty voices about the long ago, Mr. Omer came down the path and stopped at the edge of the porch. It was a most unusual honor, and Tom said, in a voice that showed he was rather afraid he was taking a liberty, "Would you sit down, sir?"

"No," said Mr. Omer. "I just came to tell you, Raymund, that I went to town this evening and brought back some paint. It's in the carriage house. If you would like to paint this house, you can. I notice you like things tidy, and enjoy fixing up, and if you want to you can get the ladders at your spare time, and paint. Mind you, it is all according to how you feel about it. If you don't want the job, it's nothing to me. I thought you might like to do it for the looks of the place—not that it is the least benefit to me—and I was willing to pay for the paint. That's all!"

"It will be fine!" cried Raymund. "It will make the house look just like new!" Mr. Omer, without replying, went back to his own yard. Raymund appealed to Tom and Fred: "Won't we feel fine?" he cried. "People will hardly know the place when I get through with it."

"Like enough you'll fall off the ladder and break your neck," said Fred, who was not hopeful by nature. "And did you ever paint a house? You'll get it all streak-ity. And the smell of the paint will be just awful!"

"What do you want to do it for, anyhow, Raymund?" inquired Tom in astonishment. "You won't git nothin' for it."

But Raymund was wiser than Tom and Fred. He painted the house; and by carefully working on a small space at a time, there were no discernible streaks when the work was finished. "It do look fine," Tom admitted as he came home one evening, "and now that the smell is wafted off, I'm glad it is did. But they didn't seem no use of all that work for nothin'!"

One day, not long after the completion of the painting, Raymund carried his books to a shady corner of the front yard, not far from the Omer fence. Baby was asleep. With the intention of having a long, quiet study, Raymund settled in the bluegrass and opened one of his old school books. Just then Nelsie Loraine came out of the big brick mansion, which, from this corner of the "Hands' Yard" was in plain view. Raymund caught just one glimpse of the girl, then turned resolutely to his book. He had never exchanged one word with Mr. Omer's daughter, and though he had often seen her in her yard while he toiled in his, she had never betrayed by so much as a look that she was aware of the youth's existence.

She was a beautiful girl, far the most beautiful that Raymund had ever seen. It was no descredit to Rhoda to admit that; Rhoda was pretty, but she had never made a pretension to surpassing loveliness. Rhoda was quaint with her extremely light hair and her blue eyes, her delicate, well-formed body, her slender limbs and little feet. But Nelsie Loraine was exquisitely beautiful. Her hair was brown—luminous, warm, golden brown. So were her eyes, a liquid, intense brown. She was heavier than Rhoda, more fully developed as it seemed, yet she was scarcely so old. She was taller, too, and wore a look more mature; it was not a sweeter look, but it was one that had its own peculiar charm. Raymund, though his eyes were fastened to his algebra, knew exactly how Nelsie Loraine looked. He had watched her too often not to know. And wonder of wonders! On this delightful October afternoon she was approaching the iron fence where it ran near the cottonwood tree, under which he was half-reclining. And, wonder of wonders! She was about to speak to him. For we have not given all this description of Nelsie Loraine to have her go back into her house without one word to Raymund or to anybody else. She spoke to him right then, though it will be a week before we can hear what she said.

Nancy's Pride.

BY ZEPHINE HUMPHREY.

There was once a little girl who did not have any pride. It was a great failing her Aunt Jane said, and drew her black shawl about her shoulders, sighing resignedly. Nancy's failings were manifold.

But Nancy at least was conscientious.

"What is pride, Aunt Jane?" she inquired, sitting down on her little stool and propping her chin in her hand. She was going to investigate this thing.

"Pride?"

Aunt Jane considered a moment, holding herself erect. Perhaps she thought that by giving the sentiment expression with her shoulders she might hit on the right definition.

"It is only a proper self-respect," she asserted at length.

Her tone was unconsciously defensive, but then that might have been only because Nancy was such a critic. One had to be on the defensive with her.

Self-respect! Self! Nancy glanced down at her new brown shoes. She respected those, if you please. Were they, perhaps, a part of herself? But it is wrong to be proud of one's clothes; all Sunday-school books say that. Self! Nose and fingers? Arms, legs and feet? No, impossible.

"What is self-respect, Aunt Jane?" she was forced to inquire humbly.

Aunt Jane sighed explosively this time. The child was just too impossible!

"Nancy! Have you no right feeling?" she cried. "Asking me what self-respect is!"

Then she folded her shawl across her breast with immense determination, and set to work to make matters clear to this strangely lacking intelligence.

"You are always being imposed on, you know," she began not unkindly, though very accusingly. "The other children can do anything they choose with you. I saw Susy Jenkins the other day take your doll right out of your arms. And when there's any mean work to be done, running errands or mending dolls' furniture, you are always the one to do it. It makes me so angry; I'd like to run out and send those children about their business. They make fun of you, too; they don't like you the better for your easiness. People never do, you know. I thought Tommy Baldwin insulted you when he laughed at your loose teeth yesterday. I was looking for you to fire up then; but, my goodness, if you didn't laugh too! I never saw such a child. Susy and Lucy aren't loyal friends to you, not a bit. They wait till you're not looking then they put their arms round each other's necks and walk off whispering. My patience!"

Aunt Jane was quite worked up by this time. Her thin face was flushed and her eyes shone bright. She confronted Nancy squarely. But something in Nancy's answering gaze checked her suddenly. There was a dawning trouble of pain which did not become those clear gray orbs, serene as a summer sea.

"I guess the cake's done now," Aunt Jane said, and vanished abruptly into the kitchen.

Nancy went slowly up to her room. She had much to think about. She stopped on the way and looked out three words in the dictionary, "pride," "self-respect," "impose." She sat down by the window and leaned her chin once more in her hand. She was very grave and thoughtful. So, they did not like her, it seemed, these dear companions of her playtime. It had never occurred to her before to question the matter of like or dislike; she had simply played and been happy. But now that she came to think about it, she knew that she loved Susy and Lucy dearly; yes, and Tommy Baldwin too, there was no doubt about it. And they did not like her, they made fun of her, imposed on her. "Let me see," Nancy paused to think, "what does 'impose' mean? Oh, yes; 'to deceive, to delude, to mislead.'" Those were hard terms indeed. Alas! the realization of "self," which had been so difficult half an hour ago, was sharp enough now under this new stress.

Nancy quivered and shrank. Very well, then, she must fire up. She must rid herself of this scornful disgrace. Not even to know she was being laughed at! Not to have suspected once that she was being imposed upon! No wonder Aunt Jane was humiliated to have such an abject niece. She blushed with her shame and confusion. But how begin to redeem herself, to fire up and have pride?

"If I only had known it yesterday," she thought regretfully, "when Tommy laughed at my teeth. But it's too late now. I went and laughed too. I am so ashamed! And how am I ever going to know when it happens again? If Aunt Jane's around, I can ask her; but mostly she isn't around. It's going to be very difficult. I shall have to watch and watch."

Poor Nancy screwed her forehead into fierce little puckers, and her gray eyes looked very stern and determined as she went out to face this new problem.

But she need not have disquieted herself. It is easy enough to discover offense.

"What's the matter, Nancy?" Susy asked, as they played together that afternoon. "Are you waiting for something?"

Nancy hesitated. She could not quite bring herself to say, "Yes, I am waiting for you to impose on me." But the case was even so. She forgot to play every now and then, she held her breath, she was restless and uneasy. She was so afraid the thing would happen and she not be quick enough to see it, that was the difficulty. It was distinctly a bore, she discovered, this matter of having pride; but then many things are bores in this world that are nevertheless one's duty. Nancy was, as we said before, very conscientious. She held on her way determined.

"Nancy!" Susy's tone was indignant. "What are you thinking about? You've let your doll fall out of her chair. What is the matter with you?"

Nancy pricked up her ears at that tone. Perhaps her chance was coming. But no. Though she pondered the matter with care when Susy had quite finished, she could not make the occasion seem one for a just resentment. She had let her doll fall out of her chair; that was the simple truth. She felt a certain vague disappointment, for it is hard work having pride, and she was growing tired. But she must bide her time.

"I declare, you do act so queer to-day!" Susy's exasperation was keen. "It's your turn to set the table and you haven't touched a dish."

This time perhaps? Nancy turned her head thoughtfully to one side, viewing the situation. No, for she had not set the table. Again the accusation was true. One can not resent the truth.

"Dear me!" she sighed in her troubled soul. "It is very difficult. I wish I could go and ask Aunt Jane. I'm afraid it is always going to be true, whatever Susy says; and then how can I? Oh, dear me!"

Some Chinatown Juveniles.

Susy broke in on her like a whirlwind. "Nancy!" stamping her foot very hard, "why don't you answer me when I speak? You're a stupid, cross little girl, and I don't like you one bit."

Ah! Nancy's heart stood still in the presence of her great opportunity. There could be no doubt about it this time; the chance was surely hers. Slowly she drew herself erect. Aunt Jane had done that. But she had no shawl to fold about her shoulders. She wished very much she had thought to ask just what should be said and done to show pride, just how one should fire up. She had only her own intuition to follow, and that was confused. Moreover, Susy was turning away, her brow clearing a little. That must never be allowed. Quick, Nancy! The moment flies.

"Susy," she mounted a footstool to show her ignored erectness the better. She folded her arms across her breast in default of the shawl. Her tone was conscientious and mild. "Susy, I am going to be angry with you. I am not going to play with you any more. You have insulted me, I think. I am going away now. Good-bye."

She swept splendidly out of the room, her head well thrown back.

It was rather fun, that magnificent exit. Nancy paused in the outer room, wondering if she could go back and do it over again. But her sense of the fitness of things restrained her. She and Susy were enemies now, they must not speak to each other. So she wandered out, feeling a little forlorn in the midst of what should surely have been but a satisfied sense of accomplishment, and took her way up the hill.

It was a beautiful summer's day. The hillside lay steeped in a golden sunlight, with flocks of white butterflies dancing in it, and an indigo bird high against the sky on the tiptop twig of a tree. The brook came dancing. "Ha, Nancy!" it said. "Take off your shoes and stockings." The mountains sat grandly all round about, blue misty mountains with violent shadows. It was good to be out of doors. Nancy took off her shoes and stockings, in obedience to the brook, and sat on the bank splashing happily.

"What is the matter?" she thought to herself suddenly after awhile. Oh, yes, I remember; I'm mad at Susy!"

She knit her brows then with renewed energy and stared fiercely into the water. But a fish swam by at that moment and wriggled his tail so humorously that she had to laugh aloud. She broke off some bits of a twig by and by and raced them down the stream. It was very exciting. She tumbled and scrambled over the logs and rocks.

"I wish Susy were here to help me," she thought involuntarily."

Then she caught her breath and blushed with shame. What a faint-hearted respecter of self! What a very weakling in pride!

She lay on her back in the shade of a tree and looked up into the rustling greenness above her. The brook slid by near at hand. Her thoughts slid off with it gradually and sang little tunes of their own. She was happy, happy, so safe and free there on the open hillside. The sky was blue through the chinks of the tree. How sweetly the song-sparrow sang! If she were a fairy now!—Yes, if!—With that elastic conjunction to start her, she leaped out into the unknown and was lost to time and space.

"Nancy! Nancy!"

It was Susy's voice.

Nancy sat up and rubbed her eyes. She was bewildered, quite at a loss. For one thing, her dreams had been suddenly broken. For another thing, she knew there was something, there in the background, behind the fairies, having to do with Susy; and she could not remember what it was.

"Must be I had something nice to tell her," she decided, springing to her feet. "I'll think of it by the time I meet her." And she hurried down the hill.

"Susy," she cried, standing on a rock a little above her friend, "I've something awfully nice to tell you. I know, 'cause I feel it there in my mind. But I can't think what it is. I'll know in a minute. Wait. Oh, dear me!"

Nancy sat suddenly down on the rock and hid her face in her hands, as her failure rolled over her crushingly—her complete and entire failure. After such strenuous efforts, such care! What would Aunt Jane say?

"Well, now what's the matter?" Susy was tried beyond endurance by Nancy's mysterious conduct to-day.

But Nancy shook her head sadly at her. "It's no use," she said. "I shan't do it again. You needn't try to make me. I don't know how to be proud at all. And I am so ashamed!"

Aunt Jane looked at her closely that night when she was putting her to bed. "A penny for your thoughts," she re-

"Well, I was just wondering"—Nancy raised her troubled eyes from her brown shoes—"if there wasn't somebody in the world for me to respect instead of myself."

"Humph!" Aunt Jane answered shortly.

"There's God, Aunt Jane," suggested Nancy, tentative and humble.—The Congregationalist.

The Little Christian.

He trembled in the morning,
At noon he was afraid,
And heavy on his heart at night
The hand of fear was laid.

A presence walked beside him
Of horror and of fright—
A shadow in the sunshine,
A menace in the night.

And this that dragged his childhood,
This thing of scourge and rod,
They gave him as a priceless gift
And bade him call it God.

They made for him a fear that killed
The child-joy in his breast;
They made for him a shape of dread
And bade him love it best.

Oh Mild, Oh Just, Oh Merciful!
What then shall be their shame,
These souls who teach a little child
To shudder at thy name?

A Forgivin' Party.

"All them 'at 's mad at me an' ready to furgiv, come to the apple tree at 5.

"Allan."

It was chalked on a board in big letters, so that Philip could easily spell it out. And Philip was mad at Allan because Allan had hit his dog with a stone, so that the dog was limping all day. To be sure. Allan said he had not seen the dog. but then Allan was always doing things and sayings he didn't mean to.

Nancy Oaks came along just then and read it carefully. "I ain't a-goin'," she burst out. "He broke my Ruby Pearl, so 'at she'll never go to sleep again. He run over her with an express wagon, he did! I won't go to his old party."

Patsy heard her and laughed. "Well, you'll see me there," he said. "An' I'll squirt with his hose all I want to. You see if I don't!"

Meanwhile Allan had various troubles of his own. All this had come about by his learning the text. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath." His mother explained it to him. "There's a whole lot that 's mad at me," he said sorrowfully to his mother.

"See if you can not find a way to make up with them," his mother replied.

But Allan had gone to the barn to look at the colts, when the idea of a make-up party came to him. "If mother 'd let me have some cookies an' popcorn, I could get 'em together before the sun goes down, then mebby I 'd get forguv."

So the next thing was to ask mamma, and she said there were plenty of cookies for a party, and Jane should set the table for him under the apple-tree. But now, when it was three in the afternoon, Allan's heart misgave him. He was afraid nobody would come. "About all I play with are mad, and it 'd be lonesome if nobody came," he thought.

Jane set the table under the apple-tree. There were cookies and honey and gingerbread and popcorn and pink lemonade, but Allan could not feel as if this was a picnic. It was a very subdued little boy who awaited Patsy as he came forward with a cheery, "Hello, there!" He was followed by the twins, Bee and Boo, who lived in the large house around the other side of the hill. They were mad because Allan wouldn't let them ride in his automobile. But the automobile was on hand now, and they raced down the hill, after one longing look at the honey quivering in the sunlight. And so, one after another, they came, even Nancy Oaks, and made up until there wasn't one who had not forgiven him when the sun went down.—E. D. R., in Gospel Messenger.

The City That Fronted the Orient.

It seems difficult to believe that a city of over four hundred thousand inhabitants could be almost completely destroyed in forty-eight hours. San Francisco has been not only almost unique in the calamity that has come to it, but in other ways as well. An obscure little Spanish village, Yerba Buena, of 1835, became the great metropolis of the west, eighth in size among the cities of the nation, in a little over two generations. When, in 1848, the discovery of gold was made, there were probably not five hundred people where ten months later nearly forty thousand people landed. It may be news to many people that earthquakes are of common occurrence in California, some years there being an average of as many as fifteen or sixteen perceptible shocks, and the city which has just suffered such a horrible calamity has almost been destroyed by fire on five separate occasions.

Newcomers hear in California and in San Francisco much of the missions, and see some of them—that chain of landmarks along the king's highway of Mexico, and from New Orleans across Texas, New Mexico and Arizona, through California to San Francisco and beyond. They mark the pathway of the padres who founded in the wilderness of that age, at intervals of a day's journey, buildings for worship marked by the cross of Christ. The story of it all—of Father Junipero Serra and his associates—is attractive history. So is the story of the Argonauts following the gold discovery in January, 1848. So is the story of this thriving city built here by men who came for gold. That story is a wild one, and worked out order and stable commercial prosperity through chapters that treat of feverish gold-crazed mobs, of rapine grappled by the vigilance committee, of the anti-Chinese movement, of insurrection crushed by military force. These stories of history are a backward look, but there has been a living present on the Pacific shores and no city in the country was more wide-awake than San Francisco. In its harbor the ships of war of all the nations of the world might float and be scarcely within hailing distance of one another.

The state of which San Francisco was the metropolis occupies a strip of land upon the coast of the Pacific averaging two hundred miles in width and nearly eight hundred miles in length, with a coast line of over twelve hundred miles. Its vastness may be comprehended when it is said that all of New York, Ohio and Illinois could be blocked off of California's area, with about three thousand square miles to spare. In the great San Joaquin valley, which extends north and south through the interior of the state, there is room to place Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and a large portion of the state of Maine. The tracing of the parallels is of special interest since it shows that the state lies in latitudes corresponding with the Mediterranean region of Europe, and the Holy Land of Bible times. It is of interest, too, to note that the characteristics of climate, soil and flora, as well as the products of agriculture and horticulture, are similar to that little corner of earth where was once the promised land. San Francisco was the centering point of all of California's richness. The city was twenty-six miles long and six miles wide, and was built upon the west shore of San Francisco Bay—a land-locked harbor that has been the pride and the marvel of navigators ever since Juan de Ayala, in 1775, sailed into the harbor through the Golden Gate and told the world of its wonders. The accredited discoverer of the Bay of San Francisco is Gaspar de Portala; the date Nov. 7, 1769. With his little party he was traveling northward searching for the mission of El Carmelo, near Monterey, but had lost his bearings and traveled many miles out of his way. A year later came the founding of the mission of San Francisco, the mission Dolores, which was one of the first of the prominent landmarks to be destroyed in the present conflagration.

The Passing of the Spare Chamber.

We have no spare chamber. I have been troubled about it for a long while. Yesterday it occurred to me that the Browns have no spare chamber either, nor the Robinsons, nor the Stuyvesants, and I am more troubled than ever.

The decadence of the spare chamber strikes deep. It is the concrete difference between past and present. The spare chamber meant a room in the house set apart from common life, dedicated to the higher nature. The family might have only three chambers—one of these was sacred. The feather bed rose plump and impregnable in its recesses. The green paper shades shut out all but a chink of light, the cane-seat chairs stood stiff against the wall, and clean straw rustled under the taut "store carpet." The stimulus to the imagination alone was worth three times the amount of cubic space the spare chamber occupied. You tiptoed in. Mother's best bonnet lay on the middle of the bed. Sometimes a huge loaf of fruit cake sat elegantly in one of the chairs.

There was always something reserved in the days of the spare chamber—fruitcake and bonnets. People had best clothes. They wore them on spare days. Sunday was a spare day. You knew that it was Sunday. Grandfather shaved. (When grandfathers shave every day, what is left for the seventh?) There was a hush about the house. As the day wore on it deepened; the whole farm lay under its warm, sleepy spell—all but the irrepressible hen. The cheerful cackle lingers still, the most irreverent thing in memory. She worked seven days in the week and talked about it. The very silence waited to hear and condemn. Amid trolley cars and bicycle bells and children playing and the Salvation Army drum, the cackle dies away into a harmless whisper.

There was spare time then. People made visits—not anxious, crowded, hurried calls, but good, old-fashioned visits. The carryall was washed and oiled. Old Flora was carefully combed and brushed by grandfather, and then grandfather was brushed and combed by grandmother. Aunt Clara packed luncheon in a big basket. There was always a spare cricket to fit in front for small folks, with a good view of Flora's haunches going uphill, and the wide sweep of country going down. The journey was leisurely, but full of wild excitements. There were the dangerous railroad crossings, where grandfather always got out rods ahead and walked cautiously across, looking two ways at once. The rest of us rode boldly over, with a fine feeling of risk. Grandfather used to crack the whip in defiance of danger. There were the covered bridges, too. Old Flora's hoofs echoed on them, and repeated the trampling of armies. The loose boards rattling underneath held the child on the cricket breathless. Times have changed. Now we speed swiftly over gaudy open bridges and the legend, "No faster than a walk," looks grimly down from either end.

We had a spare chamber at first. When the baby came we turned it into a nursery. We cleared out a storeroom for the nurse, and used the little back room for a drying room. Grandmother, when her first baby came, took it into her own bed. When another baby came to crowd it out, there was the trundle-bed that stood under the big bed all day, and rolled out at night with a sleepy rumble. And when more babies still came to crowd the trundle-bed, the first baby, a big boy, six years old now, had a bed made for him at the head of the back stairs, or up garret under the sloping eaves. The rain lulled him to sleep, and the snow drifted in sometimes. In the spare chamber the big bed loomed untouched. It hovered in his dreams, a presence not to be put by. The snow, the rain, the stars, and the spare chamber made a poet out of him. We have no poets now.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

There is a very close relationship between the offering for home missions and the triumphal celebration of our first centennial at Pittsurg in 1909. Brother Slayter's article very clearly reveals this. Had Christ's personal ministry been in the United States, primitive Christians would have taken no rest until every commonwealth and every peculiar class of people in each had been thoroughly evangelized and a church of Christ established on every green hill.

In addition to Americans mentioned by Brother Slayter we make an appeal for the thousands of Scandinavians peopling Iowa, the Dakotas, Wisconsin and Minnesota. What splendid Christians these descendents of old Norse heroes will make under the culture of the simple Gospel! Now, for home missions and a great Centennial!

The Centennial and Our Plea.

BY JOHN G. SLAYTER.

Centennial celebrations have in them great power for good. Note the advantage we derived as a nation from the series of celebrations we have observed beginning with 1876. These celebrations did two things, at least, that were very desirable: first, they gave to the world a very much better idea of America than it had ever possessed before; second, they gave to the American a very much better knowledge of his own land.

As a religious communion we stand in need of these two revelations. We need to have others know us better and we need to know ourselves better. The Christian character of thousands of our religious neighbors is true enough that their loyalty to what we stand for will be secured when we once get them to understand what we really stand for. Our centennial will attract the attention of the religious world and will give us the desired long opportunity to get the ear of the nation. If all sections of our land where churches of Christ are content to be Christian churches only, will but co-operate in this movement it will enable the Christians of Texas and Tennessee to discover that the Christians of Pennsylvania and Ohio are at heart striving to attain the same ends as themselves. Our national celebrations brought northerner and southerner, easterner and westerner, together, enabled all to see that all were alike Americans. General co-operation in this great forward movement will enable all to see that we are all Christians and Christians only.

It is very necessary that America have its attention drawn to "our plea." Anglo-Saxons are to-day dominating the world as do no other race. But America and England, as they are now, are not worthy to dominate the world. The Anglo-Saxons need a nearer conformity to the Christ ideal before they should completely dominate the race. The old historic faiths are losing their hold on America. "Our plea" is indigenous to America and above every other plea will win Americans to Christ. If then America is to go forth on her world-wide mission with thoroughly Christian ideals the Disciples of Christ must give to America the Gospel of Jesus. These historic faiths have been, under God, great powers and it is not becoming to slander the bridge that carries one over. But the fact is that if America is to not only remain but to become increasingly Christian then a more successful proclamation of the Gospel must be made. Our rise and progress and present day success mark us as the people whom God has called to evangelize America in order that the world may have a Christian and not a material influence dominate it.

But if we are ever to do this, home missions must receive a larger place in our midst than it has thus far. When the world turns its eyes upon us at the time of our celebration it will not be honorable to us for them to learn that whole states are entirely without our plea. That New York City has only three congregations. That we are doing next to nothing for the ten million blacks in our midst and less for the Indian. That among the fifteen million foreigners in our land we are shockingly derelict in duty. To correct these and many other neglected fields among us the $200,000 the Home Society asks should be gladly given. Next year the $200,000 should grow to $350,000, and the year of the centennial not a penny less than half a million should be given. Our offerings must be large enough to win favorable comment when the hour of inspection comes. May God open our eyes to the position of our home missionary work to this great centennial movement that will occupy so large a place in our hearts for the next three years.

The Olympic Games.

It was a picturesque and admirable idea, conceived twelve or fifteen years ago, to revive the old Olympic games, so far as a modern revival was possible. The purpose was to inaugurate, under the old name and with as much as possible of the old glamour, a series of periodical international athletic contests. The first meet was held in Athens in the old Stadium, which was handsomely restored, through the generosity of a wealthy Greek, and now forms perhaps the most extensive and magnificent arena in the world for athletic contests. This year another series of Olympic games has been held in Athens, and a company of American athletes have been participating in them. Hitherto the American contestants have been notably successful in these events. This is all very excellent and interesting, but after all it has nothing in common with the old Olympic games except the name and the place. The spirit of the thing is of necessity wholly different. That was religion taking the form of bodily exercise. It was backed by a view of man and a theory of life which made it possible for such a performance to be quite serious and sincere. But since the world has lost its youth, we have lost also the faculty of taking the lighter things of life in such sweet simplicity and seriousness. We can not interpret religion in terms of physical beauty and bodily joy. And so the dwellers upon Olympus have nothing to do with modern Olympics. They are just for sport.

Eating Victuals.

To one of the April magazines a physician contributes an article in justification of bread, meat, potatoes, coffee and the other plain and solid victuals which were the staples of our fathers. The writer of this article—the tone of which suggests one of James Whitcomb Riley's poems turned into prose and applied to the subject of diet—is a foe to all new-fangled notions of dietetics. He hoots at patent cereals and points the finger of withering scorn at all the numerous tribe of proprietary predigested breakfast foods. He calls us back to the good old days, when everybody who felt like it ate three square meals every day without any uncomfortable sense of being considered a glutton by his friends and family. All this is very well. We believe quite firmly in the propriety of eating victuals as a means of sustaining life, and a plea for a return to the good old times always has a pleasant flavor of sentiment whether the theme be politics, religion, social customs or diet. But, after all, people do continue to learn something, even about so commonplace a matter as eating. The cry for a return to the good old method of following animal instinct in eating has a sensible sound, but there is a fallacy in it. It will do very well for men who live a simple, active, out-of-door life, with plenty of physical exercise. Their senses are keen, their instincts normal, and their appetites and their needs fairly correspond with each other. But as man becomes more civilized, he becomes less automatic. The weakening of instinct is the price of education. Savage man may safely trust his appetite; civilized man must rely more on his reason. It is so in the matter of foods. We have played so many tricks on our appetites that our appetites now play tricks on us. They call for things we do not need and scorn the things we do need. Of course a great many patent foods, like most patent medicines, are gotten up for revenue only. But for all that we are ready to listen to a wise word from men who have made a scientific study of foods, and we refuse to believe that in civilized man the abused and perverted appetite is an infallible guide in the choice of either foods or medicines.

The Proper Place for Liquor.

There is a place for everything, even for a thing which is as easily misused as liquor. The following paragraph from one of the newspaper accounts of the days following the disaster in San Francisco, illustrates the point: "The perfect order is undoubtedly due to the presence of the regular troops and the splendid work they have done under General Funston. One of the first orders from headquarters was for the wrecking of all saloons. The liquor was poured into the gutters. This one thing has saved inestimable disorder. It has prevented drunkenness." Quite so. One must concede, of course, that this was a violent invasion of property rights and a great abridgement of the personal liberty of the people who wanted liquor. But under martial law these things can be done without process. There were doubtless many persons who, if they could have gotten these stimulants, would have made what is termed a rational use of them. They would have known when they had enough and would have stopped short of the foolish or dangerous point. But there were others whose self-control could not be trusted. They would have injured themselves by drink and, what is more to the point, they would have been a menace to the community. So the liquor was poured into the gutter to save the community from this added nuisance. That was the wise thing to do. But in what essential particular, so far as this matter is concerned, does the situation in ruined San Francisco differ from that in every other city every day? Men are always getting drunk and beating their wives or blowing the brains out of innocent bystanders, or otherwise disturbing the peace of the community. The police and the courts can punish some of these offences, but they can not prevent them. The forces for preserving order were of course vastly diminished in San Francisco, but they are always inadequate, not to say impotent, in every large city. It would solve not only the liquor problem, but a good many other problems as well, if by some legally constituted authority, "the liquor was poured into the gutters" in those cities which have not been visited by earthquake and fire. That is the best and safest place for it.

The Muck-Rake.

We are reminded by very high contemporary authority in a recent and most excellent speech that men are apt to lose sight of many beautiful and uplifting things by dealing too much with ugly and evil things. This general principle is applied to public men and newspapers which have a penchant for unearthing scandals and exploiting the hitherto hidden iniquities of prominent men, and John Bunyan's incident of the man who was so busy with his muck-rake that he did not see the angel holding the golden crown over his head, is cited by way of illustration. This is so obviously true that it scarcely needs further enforcement. As applied to the type of journalism which deals in such revelations only for their sensational journalistic value and without reference to the correction of the evils, nothing could be truer or more just. But there is another side to the muck-rake question. The muck-rake is a very useful implement, and the man who wields it well deserves gratitude. When there is muck that needs to be raked, no quantity of golden crowns can fill the bill as satisfactorily as one rake. In the past two years we have had much more than the average amount of corruption in high places discovered and exposed. It has been ugly reading, and the aroma from the agitated mass of uncleanliness has not been savory. But since it was there, it needed to be stirred. A good deal of the muck has been raked away. Folk has raked some of it, and so have Jerome and Hadley and Hanley. In another way, Steffens and Lawson have wielded the rake effectively, and Hapgood has stirred one corner of the mass quite thoroughly. It is dirty work that these men have been doing, but the more thanks do they deserve for doing it for us. The good thing about a dead rat is that you always know he is there. The uncleannesses of the body politic are not so promptly self-disclosing. They need to be hunted for and dragged into the light. If this is done with a view to remedy, it is a beneficent use of the muck-rake.

The earthquake and fire have compelled federation in San Francisco. Many denominations had to worship in common in the churches still standing.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

IV. The Protestant Era.

3. The Period of Reunion.

With the dawning of the nineteenth century there began to appear evidences of a reaction against the spirit of division, and of the incoming of a period of reunion in the Protestant era. It was within the first decade of that century that, for the first time in the history of the world, there was a distinct, organized movement, having for its aim the unity of the church. Prophetic voices had, indeed, been heard here and there, for centuries, decrying the evils of division, and sounding some true note of catholicity, but these were drowned in the discord of contending factions. Such a voice was that of Rupertus Meldenius, who, during the fierce dogmatic controversies and the horrors of the Thirty Years' War, "whispered to future generations the watchword of Christian peacemakers, which was unheard in a century of intolerance, forgotten in a century of indifference, but resounds with increased force in a century of revival and reunion: 'In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity.'"* The tract containing this remarkable statement is believed to have appeared in the year 1627 or 1628. Fifty years later, Richard Baxter quotes it from another author in the preface to his work on "The True and Only Way of Concord of all the Christian Churches."

"Here, then, is an admirable illustration of the indestructible vitality of an important truth, which not only persists in living through centuries of opposition and neglect, but which manifests increased power over each succeeding generation. How few there were to recognize in this statement the germ of a great religious reformation, when it was first formulated and uttered by Meldenius! In Baxter's day it attracted more attention as offering relief from the interminable strifes and divisions with which all pious, truth-loving souls were weary. But it was not until more than a century later that it gained practical recognition in an organized movement having for its end the unity and peace of the church.

"Indeed, it is quite certain that neither Meldenius nor Baxter perceived all that was involved in this memorable motto. What they did see, evidently, was an utter lack of discrimination, in the popular mind, between the things which are vital and those which are incidental, and the consequent effort to enforce uniformity at the expense of unity. As a remedy for this state of things they proposed the foregoing statement which had in it the seed of a reformation yet to be. But the seed must wait for genial soil and favorable surroundings. If either of the men named, or any of the theologians of that period who accepted this motto, had been asked to state more specifically what were the 'things essential,' and what the 'things non-essential,' their answer, doubtless, would have borne the marks and the limitations of the religious thought of their times. It was for another age to develop, more clearly than was possible at that time, the right application of this principle to the religious problems upon which Christendom had divided into hostile camps."*

Early in the beginning of the last century there were heard at different places in the United States, voices crying in the wilderness of our denominationalism, protesting against the evils of divisions, and calling upon the church to close up its divided ranks in harmony with the prayer of our Lord. One of these was Barton W. Stone, who, in a great revival at Cane Ridge, Ky., in the year 1803, raised the cry for Christian union by forsaking all creeds and party names, discarding all ecclesiastical authority, and taking the Bible, and the Bible alone, as the only rule of faith and practice. The movement spread with great rapidity throughout that state, and in some of the western states. Mr. Stone was a man of commanding ability, of profound piety, and of deep moral earnestness. Under the influence of a great spiritual revival in which all hearts flowed together it seemed utterly inconsistent to perpetuate party names, or to acknowledge the authority of human creeds, and these partition walls went down with a crash before the invincible earnestness of these men of God who had been awakened to a new consciousness of unity and of fellowship in Christ. In a "Last Will and Testament," which Stone and his colaborers made out and formally signed, they bequeathed their party names, their creeds, and their ecclesiastical associations to those who valued such trifles, and, disencumbered, they set out in quest of that long lost unity for which many earnest souls had been yearning.

In the year 1809 there was issued a "Declaration and Address" by Thomas and Alexander Campbell, father and son, in western Pennsylvania, whither they had but recently migrated from North Ireland, in which they set forth the evils of a divided church, and pointed out the way to union through a return to the simplicity and catholicity of New Testament Christianity. Looking upon the same evils which Meldenius, Baxter, and others had seen and deplored, Thomas Campbell uttered a not less remarkable saying in the memorable words which he made the battle cry of reform: "Where the Scriptures speak we speak, and where the Scriptures are silent we are silent." The clear import of this striking motto was, What is enjoined upon men by divine authority we shall insist upon being observed; and where the Word of God has left men free, we shall not bind them. The phrase, "things essential," had now been interpreted to mean the things required by the Scriptures, and the "things non-essential" were those where the silence of the Scriptures left men free to follow their best judgment. In both these mottoes there is a clear recognition of divine authority and an equally distinct rejection of human authority in matters of religious faith and practice. In each of them there is a solemn emphasis of loyalty to God, on the one hand, and of freedom from the tyranny of opinion, on the other."*

Like the movement of Stone, that of the Campbells discarded the authority of human creeds, abandoned the use of all party or denominational names, and urged a return to the faith and practice of the apostolic church, as approved by the New Testament. It went further than the movement of Stone in the re-discovery of what was the creed of the apostolic church, namely, the Messiahship and divinity of Jesus of Nazareth, upon which Christ declared he would build his church. To believe on Christ as the Son of God, and the world's Redeemer, and to obey him as the supreme authority in all matters religious—that, it asserted, is the way to unity. It is not strange that after the lapse of a few years these two movements—that of Stone and the Campbells—met and coalesced, forming a Christian union movement that has mightily affected the religious thought of our times.

The Indianapolis Congress.

"It was the best one we have ever held." This was the very general remark concerning the congress of the Disciples of Christ held in Indianapolis last week. However that may be, the universal verdict of those who were able to take it all in is that it was among the very best, and was in itself a fresh vindication of the value of these annual gatherings. Any convocation whose free platform and fraternal spirit make Disciples glad that they are associated with such a body is greatly worth while. This is invariably the effect of each meeting of our congress. It was notably so in the Indianapolis congress.

There was a good program. That is essential to any profitable meeting of this kind. There was a sufficient variety of topics, and the speakers selected to treat these topics were capable of handling them profitably, and they gave careful, painstaking preparation to their papers. The themes, too, were vitally related to our present thought and life. They were: Devotional, "Methods of Promoting Christian Union," "Relation of Baptists and Disciples," "Educational Needs of the Disciples," "Modern Psychology in Its Relation to Religion and Religious Training" and "Evangelism." Upon these themes was concentrated the best thought of some of the ablest men of the brotherhood. The discussions were, with a few exceptions, marked by that courtesy and mental equipoise characteristic of educated Christian men.

The prominence given to the devotional feature of the congress, occupying as it did one whole session, was unusual, and met with general approval. The atmosphere of religious devotion created by this session was naturally very different from that which had been generated by the discussion which has been carried on in some of our newspapers during the past several weeks, and the two papers which followed in the afternoon on "Practical Methods of Promoting Christian Union," were written under the impressions made by this discussion and with reference to religious needs suggested by the character of the discussion. Naturally enough, too, they both dealt very largely with the question of federation, taking substantially the same view of the subject. This gave the opportunity to opponents of federation to "protest" against what they called a one-sided discussion. It was explained by the chairman of the committee that when the topic which these papers discussed was assigned, federation was not the burning question that it became afterward, and that it was not known what, if any, attitude would be taken by these writers toward the subject of federation. Those who complained that the characterization of certain tendencies among us (there were no personalities) was too severe, did not remember, apparently, the character of the newspaper discussion which no doubt determined in a large measure the character of these papers. No doubt, as one of the speakers explained, had his paper been written in the atmosphere which he found in the devotional session of the congress it would have been different from what it was, but he had felt compelled to deal with certain conditions which he found in the way of promoting Christian union. Besides the two papers there was very little discussion of the subject on its merits. We would not like to hold the opponents of federation responsible for the wild remark of one of the speakers in opposition, that he did not regard Pedobaptist churches as churches of Christ any more than Free Masons and Odd Fellows. Such statements reply to themselves, and need no other refutation. Aside from this little flurry, which lasted only a few minutes, everything in the congress was good-natured and parliamentary.

*Philip Schaff, Ecclesiastical History, Vol. vi., p. 650.

*Introduction by J. H. Garrison to "Origin of the Disciples of Christ," by G. W. Longan. p. 6.

*Introduction by J. H. Garrison to "Origin of the Disciples of Christ," by G. W. Longan. p. 7.

Perhaps the most absorbingly interesting feature of the congress was the comparison of views with the Baptists, first on the "New Testament Teaching of the Relation of Baptism to Remission of Sins and the New Birth," and second on the "Obstacles in the Way of Union Between Baptists and Disciples." On the first theme President E. Y. Mullins, of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, led in an able and comprehensive paper on the subject, and was reviewed in an equally clear and logical paper by Bro. I. J. Spencer, pastor of the Central Christian Church, of Lexington, Ky. The spirit of courtesy which characterized these two papers is just what might have been expected from the character of the men. We hope to be able to lay both these papers before our readers in our next issue. Bro. J. J. Haley, of Richmond, Va., led in the discussion of the union of the two bodies in a paper marked by his characteristic vigor of style and catholicity of spirit. The paper reviewing this, by Dr. Henry F. Colby, of the First Baptist Church, Dayton, O., was read by Dr. E. Y. Mullins in the absence of its author. This paper, too, was admirable in its brotherly spirit, though in exegesis and in its breadth of view it was not regarded as the equal of the paper by Dr. Mullins. A discussion on this last topic was participated in by a number of brethren and was most admirable in its tone. Dr. Mullins closed the discussion in an address which won the hearts of all the brethren. True to the essential Baptistic faith, Dr. Mullins is irenic in spirit, and really desires to see brought about as early as practicable a union between Baptists and Disciples. He urged that a number of representative brethren among the two peoples get together in an informal way, without anybody's authority, compare notes and issue a general address to the two bodies for educational purposes, showing in what respects they are essentially one, and what the differences are that are keeping them apart. In harmony with this suggestion ten of our well-known leaders were selected and will be invited to meet with the same number of brethren from the Baptists, who will also be invited rather than appointed, to engage in this conference looking to a better mutual understanding of each other. That great good will come out of this fraternal comparison of views we can not doubt.

The sessions out at Butler College, Irvington, were devoted to the subject of education, and resulted, among other things, in the reorganization of the American Education Society and putting it on a basis where, it is hoped, more effective service to our colleges can be rendered. The afternoon session in Atheneum Hall was enlivened by the announcement just received of a gift from Mr. Carnegie of $25,000 to the Butler College endowment fund, conditioned on the completion of the effort to raise $250,000 additional endowment. The trustees are determined to complete this at once, and "the campaign is now on." The enforced absence of President Garrison from these exercises was greatly regretted. The sentiment marking all the discussions on the educational problems was that the greatest task now confronting the Disciples of Christ is the endowment and equipment of their institutions of learning.

The discussion of modern psychology in its relation to conversion and early religious training, in two able papers, left little time for volunteer discussion, though such discussion might have been profitable in bringing out a few points that were in need of further elaboration.

The closing session was to have been devoted wholly to "The Essential Elements of a True Evangelism." In the absence of two of the speakers, however, Brother Warren, of Pittsburg, was pressed into service and gave the closing address on "Our Centennial Preparation." An admirable paper by the president of our Foreign Christian Missionary Society covered the ground of evangelism so completely that it left little to be desired in the way of addition, and nothing, so far as we remember, in the way of subtraction. It was an excellent treatment of a very vital subject, and this, with the stirring address of Brother Warren, made a fitting climax to a great congress. After a few fitting remarks by Bro. A. B. Philputt, our host, and also by the general chairman, "Coronation" was sung with a will, and Bro. W. T. Moore offered the closing prayer and benediction.

Congress Notes.

Never did the skies brood more tenderly and the soft winds blow more caressingly over any congress. It was as if the clerk of the weather had been in a conspiracy with the promoters of the congress to make it a great success, and to leave the best impressions of the fair city of Indianapolis. We think all present would have voted unanimously for April congresses, hereafter, if the matter had come to a vote.

The next congress goes to Cincinnati in accordance with the promise made to the brethren in that city when it was decided to change, for special reasons, the present congress from that city to Indianapolis. This matter, however, is left in the hands of the committee appointed for the next congress, of which A. B. Philputt is chairman.

The hospitality of the Indianapolis people was ample and most cordial, and the meals served by the ladies of the Central Church were highly satisfactory and were a great accommodation to the visitors.

It might not be a very safe thing for our Baptist brethren to allow Dr. Mullins to visit very many congresses of the Disciples of Christ, lest he be captured nolens volens. They think they know a good thing when they see it, and Dr. Mullins, though differing perhaps a little in his theology from us, is the type of man they appreciate and love. Dr. Prestridge, editor of "The Baptist Argus," was not present, whether from fear of being captured, or from other causes, we were not informed, but we infer that it was not fear of any kind that kept him away.

Bro. W. T. Moore's love story, told in the discussion of federation, came in very timely in the way of clarifying the atmosphere and producing a feeling of good humor.

The best story told in the congress was by President Mullins, illustrating how, if Baptists and Disciples would cultivate a spirit of union, the actual basis of union in the future would take care of itself. A bashful young man had been courting his sweetheart for a long time, but could not "pop the question." When he would get to the crucial point he did not know what to say. In his perplexity he applied to "Uncle Mose," a colored savant, to whom the young people were accustomed to go with their problems. On hearing the statement of the case by the anxious young man, closing with the question as to what he should do, Uncle Mose replied: "Dot's easy enuff. You go and set down by her, purty clos,' tak' hol' of her han' and look her straight in de eyes; and den it'll come to you what you ought to say!" This, of course, brought down the house. We give it here for the benefit of all bashful lovers, as well as for the edification of those who are seeking to promote Christian union. The story is especially commended to brethren who want the basis of union all agreed upon before they get to the hand-holding stage of religious courtship.

The general impression of those who heard the discussions on the relation of Baptists and Disciples is that neither religious body is a "closed circle" but that the two, with a little judicious assimilation, could be blended into one very harmonious family, though, of course, the process would require time and patience, and then would be a gradual, and not an instantaneous, consummation.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Editor's Easy Chair during the past week has shared in the intellectual strenuosity of a religious congress. A congress among the Disciples of Christ is not a place where one would go to seek mental repose. One who attends such a gathering of his brethren with the view of taking it all in may make up his mind beforehand that his mental task is by no means an easy one. But, after all, what is more intellectually stimulating and helpful than to have one's thoughts directed into unfamiliar channels, and to be prodded up to follow a vigorous thinker through all the discursive flights of imagination and the far-fetched conclusions of his logic? No book or address is very helpful as a means of mental expansion that does not require some distinct effort at continuity of thought in order to understand it. It is cause for congratulation that we have men on our congress programs each year whose wide reading, painstaking research, careful analysis and synthesis make it worth while to listen to them. Not less is it a matter of congratulation that we can differ on many subjects, as men must differ who think for themselves, and still be brethren. No religious body can be said to have passed its childhood state until it has attained to this divine art.

It is a strange fact, the significance of which is worthy of study, that we have attained to this art of differing in matters of opinion in our national and state gatherings, while some sort of an infirmity, whether mental or moral we affirm not, disables some of our religious newspapers from doing the same thing as between themselves. This is the more discouraging since our religious journals are issued weekly, while our congress and conventions come annually. Let us hope that another generation of evolution will bring us to a point where it is possible for our religious journals to conduct a parliamentary discussion, with a view of eliciting truth, without the remotest suspicion attaching to them of trying to injure a rival. That degree of attainment on the part of all our religious journals would mean more for the genuine progress of our cause along all the lines of legitimate development than any other one reform that we can now think of. That there is a way to bring this reform to a speedy realization we do not doubt. Let an enlightened and an awakened public sentiment express itself unmistakably against every such eruption of bad temper, misrepresentation, and narrow partisanship as have recently marred the peace of the brotherhood and brought our holy cause into a disrepute from which it will take years to recover. If the saying be true that every religious movement gets the kind of religious journalism that it deserves, it is only because public sentiment in such movement asserts itself in such a way as to realize its ideals. It is even said of some of our writers that, while they are courteous and kind in their personal conversation, even with those who differ from them, when they come to write they seem to dip their pens in gall instead of ink. Who is able to explain the psychology of this fact?

No more magnificent triumph of the spirit of genuine unselfishness and altruistic energy has found record in the annals of the world than that in connection with the disaster in San Francisco and neighboring towns. "We are overwhelmed by the magnitude of the generosity of the country," says General Funston, who has asked that there be a cessation of food supplies, doctors and nurses. Such an unprecedented outpouring of the people's gifts to meet an unprecedented calamity ought to stop the mouths of pessimists who prate about the total depravity of man, and bemoan the utter degeneracy of the times. It is worth while, in the economy of God, to have such a demonstration of the nobleness of human nature beneath its outer crust of sin and weakness, even if it requires so great a calamity to bring it out. Whose heart has not been touched and whose eyes have not been moistened with tears as the wires have flashed the news from city to city of the outpouring of the people's gifts in a steady and unceasing stream to supply the needs of these stricken cities on our western shore. San Francisco will be rebuilt, and the scars made along the western coast by fire and earthquake will soon be removed, but to the latest generation men will recount how the whole nation rose to the sublime height of its great opportunity and of the obligation of human brotherhood in ministering to the homeless and impoverished people of the coast. This is the rich compensation that has come to the nation and to the world, that we know better than we possibly could have known without such disaster, how far the spirit of Christ has diffused itself through human society and lifted it out of its old-time cruelty and selfishness.

Do we not have here an explanation of the underlying philosophy of life, with all its tragedies, sorrows, temptations and defeats? We wonder sometimes how it is that a beneficent Providence should place mankind in a world where earthquake, tornado, flood and flame, disease and death carry forward their devastating work. In our shortsightedness we think it would be better for us if we lived in a world from which all these destructive agencies were eliminated, but even in the face of these disasters men are prone enough to forget God and the life beyond, and to run into all excesses and vices, which, after all, do more to destroy men than all external forces. How much worse would it be if we were not continually reminded by these calamities, and by our personal pains and sorrows, of the brevity and incompleteness of human life! If the life of the spirit be the supreme thing, and our life here in the body be but a prelude, a preparation for the life unseen, it is not difficult to see how all these destructive agencies may be God's angels of mercy to wean us from an undue attachment to the life that is transient and incomplete and to help to fit us for the fuller and nobler life of the spirit. Is not this the meaning of Paul, when he says, "For these light afflictions which are but for a season, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory"? The afflictions are termed "light" only because of the greatness of the glory which they help to work out in us. When we look back upon this mortal life from the serene heights of the life eternal we shall see that many of the things which in our ignorance we called calamities were but blessings in disguise, and that this world is best adapted by a wise and loving God for the moral education and development of his earthly creatures.

The May Offering as a Test.

No offering of the year makes a stronger appeal to our loyalty to the cause we represent than the May offering for home missions. It has to do directly with the ongoing of our missionary propaganda in the home land. As the May offering increases, there are increasing activities in planting churches and winning converts in this great ripe home field, because more evangelists are supported and more new fields are entered. The waning of this offering would mean decreased activity and increased discouragement among the workers. Why any church, rich or poor, housed or houseless, shepherded or unshepherded, in town, city, or country, should fail to make an offering, according to its ability, to this holy work, is a mystery to us. Let us have no laggards, much less any shirkers, in this campaign for $200,000 this year. See "The Last Call" from the secretaries elsewhere. In the absence of any minister let the church officials take the lead in this matter. More churches contributing, and larger contributions, should be our aim in every county and state in the Union.

CHAPTER III.

BROTHER S. M. A. REVIEWED.

Brother Lawyer now sat down in the swivel chair and waited while Brother S. M. A. went to the well, drew a bucket of water, and drank feverishly. Having refreshed himself the young man took the place just vacated by Brother Lawyer, and eyed his interlocutor nervously. The official reviewer's face wore that look of severity and compassion, mingled, which offenders against the law have since learned to know so well.

"I am going to surprise some of you," he said, "You expect me to say that Brother S. M. A. gave up the fight too soon. It was not soon enough. No man who is capable of making that kind of surrender, for such reasons, can possibly do it too soon. His fatal mistake was when he enlisted, not when he laid down his arms."

"Dar, now!" exclaimed the janitor.

Brother S. M. A. went back to the well and took one more long, deep draught from the old oaken bucket; Brother Lawyer waited patiently until he returned.

"I gather from the narrative of the witness that, in his opinion, he is several kinds of a victim: victim of the selfishness, unfairness, and unreasonableness of the church board at Kinderville; victim of the college which, in raking the field with a fine-toothed comb for places for its students, raked him loose from his job; victim of the enterprising young orator who entered into disastrous competition with him by lowering prices.

"Doubtless he did suffer from these things; and doubtless there were some ingredients of injustice to him in all of them. But in giving us a list of those who wronged him he has forgotten to write down the name of the chief offender, to wit, himself.

"His calling, considered merely as a calling—merely as a means followed by certain men for a livelihood—has this in common with other callings: it has in it no absolute guaranty against things disagreebale. The preacher, like the lawyer and the doctor, must expect to suffer from the caprices, the vanities, the erroneous standards of excellence, and the wrong standards of right among the people he serves. Also, like the lawyer and the doctor, he must suffer sometimes from unfair competition of others; from the maladjustment of the machinery which is supposed to regulate the relations of the members of the profession with one another.

"But surely this is something better than a mere occupation whereby a man may earn a living. The man who enters the ministry merely to find bread and meat there, has not only made a mistake, but he has committed a sin of no small magnitude. I do not agree with that Frenchman who declares that there are circumstances where a blunder is worse than a crime; but I do believe there are blunders which are of the nature of crimes; he commits that blunder who becomes a preacher of the Gospel merely to earn a living. If a man undertakes this work from a high sense of duty, feeling that he stands 'forever in his great Taskmaster's eye,' fit or unfit, his motive will plead like angels, trumpet tongued, in extenuation of the weakness of his effort and the imperfection of what he achieves; but alas for him who enters the ministry believing that his relation to his task is merely the relation of the hired man to his job!

"That seems to have been the trouble—one trouble at least—with the witness. He became the hired man of the Kinderville congregation. He was, he tells us, most anxious to do the work they wanted; therefore he became a sort of hot-foot-Willie who made haste to do the bidding of the church board."

"Anyhow," muttered the witness, "I did not read the Sunday papers."

"As a commercial proposition," resumed the reviewer, "anxiety and willingness to please employers is all right; yes, as a moral proposition it is all right—would have been right enough in this case if the witness had taken the trouble to ascertain who his employer really was. It is by no means certain that what the Lord requires in any given church, is what the elders want. Kinderville did not need a hired man, it needed a boss; needed a wise, gentle, loving, firm, strategic boss who could bring them to higher standards of church life and truer conceptions of what the Master's work required.

"He says he preached good sermons when he had the time to prepare them. The average preacher is able to preach good sermons only when he has taken time for preparation. The purely extemporaneous preacher is not a rare bird, but the man who can preach well extemporaneously fifty-two Sundays in the year, is rare enough to put on exhibition, and he will surely get his name in the papers. But what right had this witness to allow that board to relieve him of the burden of sermon work? I know there are people who say, and perhaps believe, that the modern church needs peddling rather than preaching, but it is not so. Everywhere the cry is for an educated ministry; and surely it does not need a highly educated man for a perpetual, all-'round-Robin-Hood's-barn, up-one-street-and-down-the-other, house-to-house tramp, ten hours a day, and six days in a week, in villages where every family knows what every other family had for dinner yesterday.

"No pastor worthy of the name ever questions, as far as I know, the value of the reasonably frequent visitation. The shepherd must know his flock. If he is by nature pleasant, genial, sociable, so much the better for him—he has cause to be thankful; if he is not naturally genial and sociable let him cultivate those qualities in himself with all diligence; for without them he must fail, though he is able to speak with the tongues of men and of angels."

"Amen!" said Brother Blacksmith.

"Yes, Lawd!" said the janitor.

"Kinderville," continued the critic, "was a great opportunity for the witness. It is a small place where not only the church members but the people generally are known to each other; call each other by first names. There is very little poverty, no absolute destitution, no slum territory, and very little sickness from one year to another. The demands on the time of the preacher for what is called pastoral work—visitation especially—ought not to be very heavy. Brother S. M. A. says he visited them all twice in one month. He ought to be ashamed of that exploit. There was no reason why he could not give at least six hours in the day to his desk. It was an opportunity for study and preparation which he might not have had in a larger field. He ought to have entered his pulpit well prepared every Sunday; and his work there should have shown improvement from month to month. But instead of coming to the end of his pastorate enriched by the accumulated results of honest mental work, he came out bankrupt—or rather he came out because he was bankrupt; long on shoe-leather, short on gray matter. Speaking of shoe-leather, reminds me of that ten-mile tramp, at the instance of a deacon, to console the owner of a sick colt. What was really needed at that farm was a horse-doctor and not a doctor of divinity; and our brother should have reminded the benevolent deacon of that fact.

"Now, as to young folks. Surely I would not, if I could, undervalue the work done by and for the young people in the churches. We need not enter here into all or, indeed, any of the reasons why no congregation can afford to ignore its boys and girls. In so far as the witness succeeded in winning the confidence and love of the young men and women of Kinderville, I congratulate him with all my heart. Yet I think he overlooked, and, worse still, allowed the older people to overlook, the fact that young people need to be instructed as well as 'influenced,' and that they will not be influenced long or to any good purpose by the preacher who can not instruct them. The preacher who proceeds on the theory that he fulfills the whole duty of man when he makes the young people like him will soon end by making them tired of him. In these days of high schools and high school graduates it may easily occur that the critics a man has most reason to dread, as to the literary character of his pulpit work, will be these same boys and girls. Admiration is always a large ingredient in the enthusiasms of youth for public men. Young people in the church like to be proud of their pastor; certainly they do not like to be ashamed of him. Given an opportunity to reach their hearts by this road, the man who refuses to follow it will make a most disastrous mistake. If the witness had taken his orders from the Master rather than from the church board, he might not have allowed himself and his congregation to forget that 'influence' in church work is merely the handmaiden of instruction.

"The witness appears to think he has been the victim of the 'cut rate' as in-

FEDERATION — A Symposium

Some Questions on Federation.

The following questions were sent out by the Editors to a number of brethren, and we continue in this issue the publication of their replies.

1. Defining church federation as an agreed-upon method of co-operation in those things which the co-operating churches hold in common, and in which each co-operating Christian body has full freedom to be true to its convictions of truth and duty, are we not, as advocates of Christian union, logically committed to the federation movement as the next practicable step in the direction of the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples, and as a practical manifestation of the degree of unity which already exists?

2. Do you approve of the Basis of Federation submitted to the evangelical churches of America for their approval, by the late Inter-Church Conference in New York City, as presenting a practicable plan for such co-operation?

By O. D. Maple.

Having had some experience in new fields, I feel that I am prepared to say that no preacher can succeed in a new field among a mixed class of people unless he federates more or less.

"Do unto others as you would have them to do unto you," is the golden rule that would settle the matter of federation. Some day I will report a church of Christ, as per the apostolic plan, instituted upon the federation plan. All we need to do is to study conditions and the needs of the world and the burden will be so great that we will gladly throw away some of the little things and accept the greater ones. God help us as a great, grand, good people, to rise above the little things, out of date 25 years, and set our eyes on the higher ones.

Let us get on the mountain peak, and then can we breathe the pure air. We have remained in the valley too long already.

Marion, O.

By R. Moffett.

To both of the questions submitted by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST I make answer in the affirmative. I was counted as a delegate to the New York Conference. I think I have lived long enough to know when my environment is filled with the Spirit of Christ. That was a meeting of Christian men and women, and the main theme was along lines so familiar that I felt perfectly at home. The contention of one of our papers, whose editor was not there, that because the majority who were present, represented their respective denominations, made me particeps criminis in sanctioning denominationalism, seems to me to be puerile. No advocacy or emphasis was given to denominations in that conference. In fact, nearly all the facts and transactions which long ago made denominationalism possible, have passed into "innocuous desuetude." There is nothing left but the grooves in which these several religious bodies are resting or moving. The spirit of the New York Conference indicated the necessity of union in order to do the best work of the church of Christ in evangelizing and uplifting the world. The Disciples ought to be in the van of such a movement. When the soldiers of the late war were suffering and dying in southern and northern prisons, Lincoln did not think it a sin to treat on equal terms with the Confederacy. Union and the power to bring the world to Christ, as a necessary result, is too great a question to stand on mere technicalities. Besides, federation is a long step toward the unity for which Jesus prayed. Opposition is only a "tempest in a teapot."

By J. A. Shoptaugh.

Yes, to both questions. But the question is: Did all who attended the New York Conference see in it what you saw? I am sure that Bishop Warren did not. He delivered an address here and the entire time was taken up in showing the "unity which already exists." It was an apology, from beginning to end, for the divided state of affairs. I am sure the bishop has never caught the vision of a united church. Many others did not see in it what you saw. Why was this, and which is right?

Pueblo, Col.

[Certainly not; we heard one or two pleas for denominationalism. But all did see in the movement a glorious opportunity for uniting our forces much more closely than they are now united, and for cultivating that good understanding of each other which is absolutely essential to any closer union. If Disciples see in federation more than others, that is no argument against federation. Perhaps none of us sees what God sees in it. It is enough that he has opened this door of service. Let us enter, and be led of Him.—EDITOR.]

By "An Old Preacher."

The federation of Christian bodies as defined by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST can not be consistently opposed by those who say: "We are Christians only, not the only Christians."

This is a concession that the body of Christ is composed of sections. "We" are one section and Christians, plus something else in other "Christian bodies," are other sections. Then "we" are a "sect," protesting against being separated from other "sects" by their divisive names, teachings and practices. "We" plead for union under Christ, the head of the body, and to this end ask other "sects" to lay aside these divisive names, creeds and practices as we have done for the sake of union. How can such a union be effected? Not by debating differences. This alienates and perpetuates divisions. Not by conference on union as an initial step, while we are occupying different view points. Both have been tried with some good results, but the prayer of Christ is not yet answered so that the world may believe on Christ.

These other Christians have changed their attitude toward the union problem because of a growing union sentiment in their several bodies. These "sects" have so far felt the force of our pleadings that they feel the weakness of divisions in the face of unbelievers and they come proposing federation as a step toward ultimate union of Christians.

This plan begins by uniting in Christian work on the basis of common agreements for the common aim to promote the advance of the kingdom of God among men without any compromise of truth or interference with the fullest freedom of action, but with the right to exercise wisdom in working together for the proposed end.

The plan submitted is objectionable in some phrases, but we could not expect to have it all in our own phrasing.

Opposition to such a plan of co-operation is to put us in the attitude of a sectarian in a movement looking to Christian union and thus to surrender our rightful place as leaders of or potent factors in the union forces. We must beware of proclaiming ourselves as the only not Christians among these "Christian bodies."

Being united in work for Christ, diffences will vanish as we come to them, or be solved the more readily because of our nearness to each other in our point of view. This is the next step in the solution of the question of a united Christendom.

By W. P. Keeler.

As THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S invitation for an expression of views on the "Federation" proposition includes laymen, let me reply to your question No. 1, "yes," and to No. 2, "yes, in the main." The action taken by the New York Inter-Church Conference would seem to augur more potency as to results than any measure yet adopted, looking to the answering of the Savior's prayer for the unity of his followers.

It was recently my pleasure to sit—as an Englewood Christian Church delegate—in a conference held in the First M. E. Church, to arrange for the coming to Chicago of Torrey and Alexander to conduct a three months' evangelistic campaign, beginning in November. As an instance of how city-wide the influence and after-results of a meeting like this, Bishop Fallows, representing one of the smallest evangelical bodies (Reformed Episcopal) cited the notable Moody meeting of 30 years ago, held in Chicago in a great central tabernacle, and continuing 90 days. The bishop stated that his own congregation—well toward the suburbs—gained 100 converts as a direct result of that meeting. Why should not our brethren "federate" with the denominations in a union meeting of such promise for arousing all the churches of a city to a supreme effort for reaching the multitudes with the Gospel and preparing the masses to receive it? Admitting that a full Gospel is not thus preached, yet, a mighty stirring of the popular conscience is accomplished, and following such arousement of interest comes "our" opportunity in whatever parts of the city our churches may be to present to these awakened souls the New Testament terms of pardon. Great is the pity that the Disciples of Chicago have made so slow headway in reaching its citizens, that a Scoville, after making this his home, must needs turn from it and go to the smaller cities for God's demonstration, through him, to a more adequate degree, of the Gospel's mighty power unto salvation. By all means let us do our part, whether by federation or whatever expedient, to bring about conditions in our large cities that will lead greatly increased numbers to "the obedience of the Gospel" as we preach it, and as we are convinced the Christ would have all believers preach it.

Along with the words (some of them heated) which have passed since this "federation" movement has come to the front, b-a-p-t-i-s-m may not have been mentioned many times, but that one word—as to essentials—I am constrained to feel accounts for the whole contention among us. The talk of concession, stultification, compromise, etc., it may safely be said is because of the keen solicitude lest the divinely fixed ordinance of immersion shall continue to be slighted and in the proposed federation, possibly be treated as of minor importance.

[It ought not to be necessary to say that federation has nothing whatever to do with the question of baptism. No well informed person makes this claim. Zeal for immersion, therefore, can not account for "the whole contention among us."—EDITOR.]

Out of Bondage

By S. B. Lindsay

Many years ago I was a constant reader of "The Leader," "Gospel Advocate" and other ultra conservative papers. And, like A. Campbell, "I was so straight that I leaned a little the other way." Through the kindness of an old and highly esteemed Disciple, I secured the "Millennial Harbingers" from the widow of J. C. Walden, Cynthiana, Ky. And later I secured a hundred volumes from the library of J. B. Ludwig. I have thus been a constant reader of Campbell, and Errett, and Richardson, and Pendleton, and Milligan, and found myself gradually growing out of the narrow logic of Rowe, and Franklin, and Lard, and others, whose writings I find side by side in my library with the others mentioned. The trouble with our narrow men, all the way through, is that they are not broad enough to grasp the plea for Christian union—and they constantly misrepresent the men who, like Campbell and Errett, occupy in their thought and relations to other Christians, a broad, noble, catholic position.

"The Standard" is just now engaged in misrepresenting the position of two good men—A. Campbell and J. H. Garrison. In its issue of April 7 it prints the stereotyped quotation from the pen of Brother Garrison, in which he states his opinion that the Presbyterian, Episcopalian and United Brethren churches are far more loyal to Christ's teaching and spirit as a whole, than many churches calling themselves "Churches of Christ." There is nothing wrong with that sentiment. Campbell and Errett both expressed the same repeatedly on occasions similar to the present. But the editor of "The Christian Standard" immediately proceeds to misrepresent Brother Garrison and make an appeal to prejudice in one sentence: "It will be seen from the quotation that The Christian-Evangelist seeks fellowship with these Pedobaptist churches rather than with churches of Christ that have no creed but Christ," etc. That great "majority of both society and anti-society brethren who rejected and repudiated the Sand Creek movement," are appealed to now to repudiate the new departure proposed by The Christian-Evangelist. To the man who has spent some years in an honest endeavor to adjust himself to the truth—to all truth—and who is fortunate enough to be a constant reader of The Christian-Evangelist, the defection of Brother Garrison and his "surrender of the plea," is considerable of a joke. But those who have not thought themselves through the narrow logic of our legally inclined brethren, and who have never so much as seen a copy of the "Millennial Harbinger," and who have always been prejudiced against The Christian-Evangelist through such references as I have quoted—they believe that Brother Garrison has actually gone over to the sects, surrendered the plea, and everything else, and that is where the damage is done.

But let me make another quotation from the same editorial: "Recent utterances of some of these men indicate that they are ready to create a division in our ranks, and lead a party in the direction of denominationalism." This has been the cry of "The Leader," and other papers for years. Years ago I read that same sentiment and believed it. And I am sure that thousands will believe it now.

If "The Christian Standard" will furnish proof of this statement I will frankly confess my indebtedness to it and will forever forsake Brother Garrison and the others, whoever they may be, and if it fails to prove it I will be equally frank with it. I desire to make a proposition equally positive, viz: That "The Standard" is leading a retrograde movement, away from the spirit and genius of the plea as originally proclaimed by Campbell, Errett, et al., and those who follow its lead will become a disappearing brotherhood of pious Pharisees. Let me now submit my proof, and incidentally show that Brother Garrison is not the only one that "surrendered the plea" by exhibiting a catholic spirit with reference to other Christian bodies. When A. Campbell was censured by an "Independent Baptist" for remaining among the Baptists, and admonished that he might as consistently have fellowship with Pedobaptist sects, it gave him occasion to develop his feelings and sentiments on this question of union. [Quoted last week.]

Hear Isaac Errett, in his essay on "What is Sectarianism?"

"The word sect is rapidly descending into unpopularity. Sectarianism is coming under the ban of public sentiment, as antagonistical to the genuine spirit of Christianity, and ruinous to the interests of the church of God. The mildest philosophical view now taken of it is that it is a grievous misfortune, inherited from the honest, but imperfect, struggles of the last three centuries to shake off the oppressions and corruptions of the great apostasy. Under the paralyzing power of that appalling spiritual tyranny there had been an apparent unity of faith, but it was only the compulsory absence of strife—the imbecile quiet of despair—the hopeless silence of souls long in bonds—the stillness of death—the peace of the grave. The glorious emancipation from the bondage of human authority wrought by the Protestant reformation had a two fold result. First, Freedom rushed into lawlessness and played fantastic tricks. The necessary reaction from blind submission to papal dominion was a reckless extravagance of liberty, engendering almost every variety of theological fantasy and absurdity. Second, The dregs of Popish intolerance still retained in the hearts of Protestant champions, led to a reassertion of human authority—the creation of lesser and rival popes and councils. The sequel has shown the alternate succession of tyranny and revolt—the birth of new sects, escaping from one tyranny to establish another, which in turn compelled a new protest and a new party; and so on, if not ad infinitum, certainly ad nauseam. . . .

"As yet, however, there is a vagueness in the use of the term sectarianism. Precisely what is meant by it is not easily determined. It is an ungainly and terrible, but somewhat shadowy, specter, that comes to us from the graves of the past—appearing in councils as a withered and wrinkled hag, muttering imprecations against the light and progress of the nineteenth century; beatifying the darkness of medieval times, translating the dreary clank of inquisitorial chains and the groans from the prisoner's dungeon into ravishing music; and, unterrified by signs from heaven, amid the protest of crashing thunders and rocking tempests, crowning an imbecile old man with the infallibility of Godhood. In altered phase it glides into Protestant assemblies and convocations, looking like a lamb, but speaking with the voice of a dragon. In sheep's clothing it enters the pulpit 'to scatter, tear and slay,' and its wolfish howl drowns the tender voice of love and grieves away the Spirit of holiness. It stands behind the editor's chair, and, when his soul kindles with holy ambition to do brave work for God and man, and he is about to dash off glorious paragraphs, aglow with the inspiration of truth and love, that would ring in ten thousand enslaved hearts with the sweet music of spiritual emancipation, throws its hateful spell over him, binds anew on his neck the collar of the sect, and compels him to dip his pen in gall and write poisoned sentences of bitterness and hate. [Even the successor of Isaac Errett is not immune.] It creeps, like a slimy demon, into the hearts of God's too careless children, and poisons

JUST FOOD

Nature's Cure.

One of the most important discoveries of late is the application of the right kind of food to rebuild the lost substances of the body, thrown off by the active, nervous work of Americans.

Careful investigation by experts in food and diatetics, has brought out the fact that albumen, which is contained in various foods, is acted upon by phosphate of potash, not such as obtained in drug stores, but such as is found in certain parts of the field grains in most minute particles, arranged in Nature's laboratory, not man's.

The part of the grains containing phosphate of potash is used in the manufacture of Grape-Nuts food, therefore the active, nervous, pushing brain-worker can feed the body with food that goes directly to the rebuilding of the broken-down gray matter in the brain, solar plexus and nerve centres all over the body, with the result that the individual who refreshes and rebuilds the body with proper material of this sort, obtains a definite result, which he can feel and know of and which is apparent to his friends.

A vigorous brain and nervous system is of the greatest importance to any business man or brain worker.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Such sunrises and sunsets as we have seen on the Mediterranean! Our last look upon Malta was one in the midst of a gorgeous going down of the orb of day, with such reds and yellows and blues as Nature only can paint for us, the beautiful city, the harbor and its shipping, the massive fortifications, all bathed in fiery splendor. The next morning as we swept the Ionian sea the same great light lifted itself from the waters with the same glory. These are pictures which surpass Murillo and Raphael and Turner, and they belong to every humblest soul in whatever clime. The richest gifts after all, air and water and light and warmth and beauty, are the common ones. Here is music. We hear great organs, as in the cathedral at Malta or Seville, or men pay their thousands to listen to voices like that of Patti or Lind; but what can compare with birds that carol day and night in many a thicket, beside many a cottage, and sing their sweetest songs without money and without price?

Sailors have ways of amusing themselves that are very interesting to us. I have greatly enjoyed hearing our crew sing in the evening as they gathered aft. One will play the banjo, then one strong voice leads the song and all come in on the chorus with a hearty swing. Sea songs are of two kinds, the "chanty," or working song, which is sung as an aid to labor, and the sea ballad, or sailor folk song. Chanty is pronounced "shanty." It is applied to the songs and choruses to which the sailor works and hauls. They sing them when heaving around the capstan, weighing anchor, hoisting heavy yards, or pumping. One sings a solo part, which he invents as he goes along, usually. The music is sweet, but the words are nonsense. The chanty man leads, "They call me Hanging Johnny," and the sailors sing, "Away-i-oh." Then the first repeats, and the sailors sing, "So hang, boys, hang." Then the chanty man begins: "First I hung my mother," and the sailors repeat, "Away-i-oh," and so on ad infinitum. "Whiskey Johnny" is another of these chanties, and "Blow, Bullies, Blow," "Haul the Bowl In" and "A-Roving." Among the songs is "Spanish Ladies" and "Fare You Well, Australian Maidens" and "My Mary." These are all English seamen, as the Arabic is an English liner, and most of their songs are English folk songs about the sea. Five bells sounded. The lookout in the crow's nest cried, "Five bells and all's well!" and I turned in; and as I stepped on deck the next morning the sun was lifting his splendid orb above the purple heights of Hymettus, the rosy-fingered morn had scattered a thousand tints over sky and sea and mountain, and before me in the distance loomed up the Acropolis. "O thou, our Athens, violet-wreathed, brilliant, most enviable city!"

Now, what shall I say of the mother of arts and eloquence, and how shall I say it in the space of a single letter? The Egean, the Saronic Gulf, Sunium, the shores of Salamis, where the 300 ships of Greece scattered Persia's host of 1,000 war vessels, Eleusis, the city of the mysteries—all move us; but yonder is Hymettus, haunted of the bees and the muses, and a little farther away Pentelicon, whose white spots amid the green are the marble quarries, and there in sight is Lycabettus, and northeast of Pentelicon is Marathon, the fennel field, where the 10,000 Greeks "breasted, beat barbarians, stemmed Persia, rolling on, did the deed and saved the world." Our first point was the Acropolis, the center of all settlements in the Attic plain, a plateau of limestone rising 500 feet above the sea. Here gathered the glory of ancient Athens.

First cames the Propylea, "the brilliant jewel set on the rocky coronet of the Acropolis." Here is the center of Athenian art, literature, statecraft, history and philosophy. There is a central gateway and two wings. There are stately ruins of the great building erected 2,300 years ago. Many of the great Doric columns are left, and the ruin is a fitting portal to the Parthenon. On the right is the beautiful little temple of Athena, built to commemorate Marathon, Platea and Salamis. Much of the beauty of this temple of Victory remains. Passing up the slope amid the debris of fallen columns and carved bits of stone, we get our first view of the Parthenon. Here at the left was the colossal statue of Athena Promachus, by Phidias, which stood 66 feet in height, in full armor, her lance head a landmark to the sailor; and then the Erechtheum, with its famous porch of the maidens of the Caryatides. This is a purely Ionic shrine, the home of Athena Polias, the guardian of the city. It is much shattered, and the six figures of the women of Carye are very greatly injured, and one stolen by Lord Elgin, which is replaced by a terra cotta figure. These Caryatides have an elevated and vigorous beauty, full of vitality and grace, set off by simple draperies. Powerful and well built, they support the entablature with ease. On the center of the plateau stands the Parthenon, the most impressive object of ancient art. The Pan-Athenian procession passed through the Propylea, along the axis of the Acropolis, to the north, and entered by the east door. When dedicated, 438 B. C., this must have been splendid beyond description, with its 50 life-size statues, its 100 Doric columns, its 92 metopes and 524 feet of frieze. Pericles planned this crowning glory and Phidias executed it. In the inner sanctuary was the famous Athena Parthenos, the virgin goddess. In the fifth century the great structure became a Christian church, and one can still see the traces of paintings; then the Turks turned it into a mosque, and then in 1687 the Venetians hurled their shells at it, blew up a magazine and dismantled it. Yet, how majestic it is! What columns and pediments! How towering and imposing and soul-stirring beside ordinary things! What beauty and dignity, even in the remnants of the work of the great master of plastic art! One lingers with the greatest delight about these majestic monuments of a great past.

We passed down through the ruins to the lower hill, the Areopagus, or Hill of Mars, rugged and seemingly in a state of nature now, save for a few steps cut in the face of the rock. On the top were once some ancient altars, and in the middle ages a church to Dionysius, the Areopagite. Nothing is here to-day but the rough surface on which some Greek children were playing. It is a good place to read the seventeenth of Acts. J. W. McGarvey tells us he ascended it with the intention of repeating here Paul's great address, but was overcome and wept. The top of the hill is flat, and on three sides it descends gradually to the plain, while on one side it is precipitous. The ancient court sat here, consisting of venerable and eminent Athenian citizens, exercising supreme jurisdiction in all cases of life and death. It is said Mars was tried here for murder, hence the name, and the shrine of the Furies, the Eumenides, was just below, and it is the scene of Eschylus' tragedy of that name.

FOUND OUT

A Trained Nurse Discovered Its Effect.

No one is in better position to know the value of food and drink than a trained nurse.

Speaking of coffee a nurse of Wilkes Barre, Pa., writes: "I used to drink strong coffee myself and suffered greatly from headaches and indigestion. While on a visit to my brothers I had a good chance to try Postum Food Coffee, for they drank it altogether in place of ordinary coffee. In two weeks, after using Postum, I found I was much benefited and finally my headaches disappeared and also the indigestion.

"Naturally I have since used Postum among my patients, and have noticed a marked benefit where coffee has been left off and Postum used.

"I observe a curious fact about Postum used among mothers. It greatly helps the flow of milk in cases where coffee is inclined to dry it up, and where tea causes nervousness.

"I find trouble in getting servants to make Postum properly. They most always serve it before it has been boiled long enough. It should be boiled 15 or 20 minutes and served with cream, when it is certainly a delicious beverage."

"There's a reason" for Postum.

The Eighth Congress of Disciples

For the second time the congress of the Disciples of Christ has met at Indianapolis. Royal was the entertainment given by the members from various churches in that city to the visitors who gathered at our annual congress last week. Large were the audiences at every session in the finely appointed Central Christian Church, of which A. B. Philputt is pastor. The congress at Columbia last year having discussed such things as the Bible in the light of archeology, our congregationalism, religious journalism, etc., there was this year a reversion to the theme of Christian union, which was a subject prominent at the gathering held in Chicago two years ago. And as a step toward the ultimate goal—the subject of federation preceded the coming together of the representatives of the Baptists and Disciples of Christ.

"An egg before an eagle, a thought before a thing"—

J. H. Garrison presided at the opening session which was of a very helpful devotional character. After a responsive reading of the sixty-third Psalm, Charles Newnan, of Indianapolis, offered a prayer, making a special petition "in behalf of our brothers and sisters of the far west." Earle M. Todd, of North Tonawanda, N. Y., struck a high keynote for the congress in his Bible study, the theme of which was "Strength for Service," with the concluding words of the one hundred and thirty-ninth Psalm as his text. It was a plea for the pure heart and the cultivation of vision. I know that Brother Todd spoke out of his own experience, and his message was just such an one as would lead us to see that it is not learning, personal magnetism, or social qualities that are the desideratum for a minister of Christ, but the delivery from self love.

"The Secret of Power" was the subject presented by J. H. Garrison, which continued the thought of the congress in the line of the spiritual life. The kingdom of grace, he pointed out, no less than the kingdom of God, is under law. The highest of all knowledge, he said, is the knowledge of God, and to know him is the secret of greatest power, and the way to know is to walk with Christ in the valley of humiliation and suffering. After the committees had been announced by the chairman, and the congress had been briefly welcomed by A. B. Philputt, pastor of the Central Christian Church, L. L. Carpenter, "fresh from Jerusalem," pronounced the benediction.

To Promote Union.

The afternoon session was given up to discussion of the theme, "Practical Measures for the Disciples in the Promotion of Christian Union To-day." S. M. Cooper, president of the American Christian Missionary Society, was in the chair, and Levi Marshall, of Hannibal, Mo., led in prayer. The first speaker was William Bayard Craig, of Denver, Col., and he was followed by George A. Campbell, of Austin, Ill. It is not at all surprising that the question of federation was much to the front in the discussion. Brother Craig did not use the term, however, to any considerable extent, his paper dealing more with the underlying principles of the union movement. As it is hoped to print his remarks at some length in The Christian-Evangelist, I shall dwell but briefly on his paper. He pointed out that there is a logical, relentless unfolding of the inner life of a religious movement, and while folly and bigotry can hinder the progress of truth, they can not long obstruct its onward march. The things that have caused a division in the past and are the chief hindrances in the way of Christian union to-day, are, he said, formalism, phariseeism and arrogance. Church federation is, he contended, a right step in the direction of Christian union. Federation seeks to express in some formal way the fraternity and interdenominational comity that we already have. Brother Craig's paper seemed to me to be a very truthful statement of the situation. In view of the fact that there is in some quarters considerable opposition to the federation idea, it might, perhaps, have been well if he had guarded a little more carefully some of the expressions he used, but on the whole, his statement of the case will stand, despite the criticisms that were subsequently made upon it and Mr. Campbell's speech, which followed.

George A. Campbell, of Austin, Ill., in the course of a lengthy paper, said that the effort to federate all the churches into a far reaching co-operative organization is a natural expression of the spirit of the times; for certainly the most far reaching and revolutionary thought that is to-day stirring the minds and hearts of men is the thought of unity. Every department of human activity has made its contribution to this dominant idea of the times. The Disciples are asked to be a part of this inter-church movement. Can they, without compromising truth as they conceive it, contribute of their growing power and numbers to such a forward step? Our central and ever controlling motive has been that of unity, and now when other denominations are moving for a united church we must be quick to grasp their hands and promise them our heartiest support and fellowship. Three fundamental principles are shot through and through the minds of Disciples—first, that of unity; second, loyalty; third, liberty. We want the union of all Christians; we want unswerving loyalty to Christ; and we want freedom. Tenaciously holding these principles as we do, will we be able to federate with other religious bodies? The following reasons lead us to an affirmative answer. Our ministers and churches during our entire history have been quick to cooperate wherever there was common work and common agreement. Second, the true understanding of other Christian bodies entering into federation will certainly have the effect of freeing us from any hesitation as to joining them in this large cooperative movement. The teachings of Christ in the New Testament are variously interpreted by people equally intelligent and equally loyal to Christ. This being true, co-operation, federation or union itself can not be postponed until all see alike or all reach the same interpretations of Scripture but ought to begin as soon as the determination to be loyal to Christ exists in the representatives of the bodies interested in the union movements. Third, the state of our own churches ought to urge us to federation. With almost every one of our churches there is associated in some way representatives of these bodies who have the right spirit though the wrong form of baptism; while others are enrolled who have the right form of baptism but not the Christian zeal. To refuse to federate because we can not see alike with reference to the form of baptism would be to set up our body as an ecclesiastical dictator. Fourth, the probable attitude of Jesus to the subject of federation. The ultimate question is not what definite thing Jesus did or taught; but is, what would he have us do in present day circumstances? There were no denominations in New Testament times, as we have them to-day. Christ placed emphasis not upon correct opinion, but upon character. The only class of people Jesus was intolerant of was the bigoted sectarians. Surely Christ would not banish from his full and free fellowship those that are ever anxious to exalt his name and to extend his kingdom. Fifth, the condition of the world demands a federated church. Federated evils can only be opposed by federated churches. The Roman Catholic Church can teach us the effectiveness of united effort. The National Free Church council of England has demonstrated that the needs of the world can be very much better met by a federated movement than by independent action on the part of denominations. We must federate with all who love and are sincerely trying to serve our Lord. And we shall keep on working and praying for the consummation of the full unity for which the Master prayed.

A Discussion.

J. B. Briney was on his feet almost before the reader of the last paper had taken his seat. His voice was one of protest, not of discussion. He characterized the session as a "farce," seeing that all the time had been devoted to the advocacy of one side. There is another side, he contended, but he criticised the management that there was no scope for the presentation of it. He disclaimed being a newspaper bishop, but took occasion to announce that he was connected with two newspapers, and he urged those present who wanted to see some "salting" done, to take his monthly. On the whole, I think Brother Briney ought to be glad that the second paper was not in opposition to the first. It gave him a fine opportunity to advertise what he is doing. But personally, I wish the anti-federation cause could have been presented by the strongest possible representative. It should be remembered, as Brother Garrison pointed out, that this program was arranged and the speakers appointed long before the question of federation came so prominently before our brotherhood. The question of federation was not the subject assigned the speakers. That they should discuss it was perfectly natural, in view of the prominence it has been given by the objectors to it. Unfortunately both the papers were of so lengthy a character that any considerable after discussion was not feasible. One brother present made a speech that was not remarkable for its breadth of vision, and I will leave it at that. D. R. Lucas, who was desirous of getting information, confessed that the papers had had a peculiar effect on his mind. The advocacy they made, he thought, was not presented in the way it ought to have been presented. He objected to any talk about phariseeism. Brother Lucas would have made a much deeper impression on those who believe in federation if he had pointed his criticsm at some other scribes than those who wrote the two papers for the congress. The use of such terms as "phariseeism" and "formalists" may possibly be unwise, and might certainly be unjust if hurled at certain brethren, but there have been some other phrases and terms used in this controversy with a very direct application for which the chief anti-federation writers have not yet apologized. Calling hard names is not controversy, but I think the federationists are not the chief sinners in this matter. But Brother Lucas' desire was to throw oil on the troubled waters, and his speech was a well meaning one. He really confessed that he believed federation would be an accomplished fact, and he himself was rather inclined to join in it, yet he pleaded that every man must be free to do as he believed right, which, of course, all federationists believe in. Carey Morgan said that he and Brother Lucas would be brethren whether the latter went in for federation or not. He deprecated any harsh spirit, and said the thing we need to do is to go out some night and just look up at the stars and be calm. "I was at the federation meeting, and I never said a word all the time," said W. T. Moore. Then he added naively, "That is the most remarkable thing in my life. Why?" he asked. "I saw that the boys were saying it better than I could." Dr. Moore got the whole audience in a good humor and at the same time made an effective plea for federation when he told about his courtship. It is not a man's theories about love or marriage, or about any subject, he said, that win a woman. So realistic was the correct way he pictured to us that it was not difficult for us to see that we can accomplish more by the right kind of courtship of the denominations than by the driving method, whether we use the whip or are obedient to the goad in the hands of others. A working basis was what Dr. Moore contended for, and if a courtship on this basis, he said, was not what he expected it to be he would withdraw from the wedding part. Both Brother Campbell and Brother Craig disclaimed any intention to attack opponents. Brother Craig pointed out that he showed that phariseeism had destroyed mercy and love and the Jewish church, and his paper assumed that the disease we are trying to combat is in all religious people and that in trying to find a remedy for the divisions of Christendom we must take some of the medicine ourselves. He pointed to his own work and record as a proof of his loyalty to our plea.

Baptist v. Disciple.

The singing of "The Church's One Foundation" and a responsive reading on the same theme, very fittingly preceded the addresses and discussion in which President Edgar Y. Mullins, of the Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., and I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., were the principal representatives of the Baptists and the Disciples of Christ on the subject, "The New Testament Teaching of the Relation of Baptism to the Remission of Sins and the New Birth."

W. F. Richardson, who had been originally chosen to review Dr. Mullins' paper, was in the chair, and he expressed his personal gratitude to Brother Spencer for agreeing at short notice to undertake the duty when Brother Richardson found that his visit to Jamaica in the interests of the C. W. B. M. work would perhaps prevent his attendance at the congress, and certainly only allow him to get there on the very eve of its assembly. Dr. Mullins said he rejoiced to be present on this occasion and brought with him the greetings of many Baptist brethren and congratulations that there was to be a free discussion. He rejoiced at the growing spirit of Christian union and was glad to take part in any gathering that would have in view the lessening of the divisions. He apologized for using manuscript and also to Brother Spencer for delay in sending it to him. He amused his auditors by confiding to them that he had no doubt they would say the time given to Brother Spencer was ample. As this paper, with Brother Spencer's reply, will appear in full in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST my outline of it here will be brief. At the outset President Mullins laid down some rules of interpretation, and approached the problem at once by examining some of the significant passages of Scripture. He found two groups in the New Testament bearing upon the subject. The first group, he said, represents baptism as a condition of entrance into the kingdom of God, or as a condition of remission of sins, and in some instances apparently as a condition of regeneration. The second group of passages teaches that entrance into the kingdom of God is conditioned on faith, regeneration conditioned on faith, and remission on faith and repentance. He characterized each of these groups of Scriptures as "closed circles of teachings." The problem is to harmonize these passages, one referring to the ceremony of baptism and the other omitting it from the conditions of remission and regeneration. The problem involves the whole relation of the ceremonial to the spiritual in Christianity. Seeking to find a principle of interpretation broad enough to include all the Scripture teaching upon the subject in hand, Dr. Mullins announced his conclusion and then proceeded to establish it. It was that in one closed circle of teachings—the ceremonial—we find a distinct ceremonial principle in Christianity; that in the other closed circle of passages we find a distinct spiritual principle in Christianity, and that there is no union or amalgamation of these two principles on the one hand, and that there is no conflict between them on the other. Dr. Mullins' conclusion was that baptism is symbolic cause of which symbolic remission and symbolic regeneration are the effects. It is the external, invariable symbol of the internal spiritual reality which precedes. We enter the kingdom of God ceremonially through baptism, not really. The whole spirit of Dr. Mullins' paper was admirable, and his argument as strong, perhaps, and certainly as lucid, as could be made by any one occupying his standpoint, but it was by no means impervious to the shafts of criticism that could be directed against it by the Disciples of Christ. His exegesis of some passages of Scripture would not be accepted by our most thoughtful Bible scholars, and indeed, it developed on the following day that the two Baptist representatives at the congress differed themselves on some points of exegesis.

I. J. Spencer explained that he had been unable to complete his reply or to condense it for lack of time. He referred to the admirable spirit and comprehensive conclusion of Dr. Mullins' paper, pointed out the points of agreement between Baptists and Disciples, spoke of the helpfulness of such conferences, and after accepting the tests mentioned by Dr. Mullins, gave a resume of his argument. He answered seven objections raised by Dr. Mullins to the view that two principles unite in salvation so that faith and baptism are the conditions of remission. He contended that there is no purely ceremonial thing in the whole Christian economy, for the spiritual burns within the ceremonial. He disclaimed putting baptism on an exact par with faith or repentance, and he would not concede that there are any "closed circles" of teaching in the New Testament that may not be opened to, and interpreted by, other portions of Scripture. In conclusion, he noticed briefly a few of the illustrations used by Dr. Mullins to show the difference between the actual and the ceremonial, and finally pleaded for a "thus saith the Lord" as the great need in answering these vital questions. "If," he concluded, "we shall be left free to tell men what to do to be saved according to the very terms of the commission, then I would offer the hand of fellowship to President Mullins, both spiritually and symbolically, for, after all, we agree as to what salvation is, as to its imperative and infinite importance, and as to the very terms that secure it instrumentally and their order in obtaining it in the full and complete New Testament sense."

While some might have added to the strength of Brother Spencer's statement of the position of Disciples of Christ it was felt that no discussion of the two papers would be in order. J. B. Briney offered a motion, and W. T. Moore seconded, for adjournment, but opportunity was given to Dr. Mullins to reply, and he expressed his appreciation of Brother Spencer's paper, and his agreement with much of it. He explained that he had not made an effort to place one set of Scriptures against another, or run a line of division between the Jews and Samaritans, or even to practice any restricted communion, but merely to show the place of baptism as an ordinance. He rather thought that Brother Spencer had come over to his side in his admission that he understood it as a spiritual interpretation. After a helpful word from D. R. Lucas and W. F. Richardson, J. H. Garrison explained how he had suggested this discussion which had been promptly seconded by Dr. Prestridge, of "The Baptist Argus," who had nominated the Baptist representatives, and he said that Dr. Mullins had abundantly justified the wisdom of his brethren in choosing him. After a vote of thanks, proposed by Z. T. Sweeney, and the singing of "Forward be Our Watchword," Leonidas E. Brown, of Lebanon, Ind., closed a very delightful session with prayer and benediction.

What, If Any, Obstacles in the Way of Union?

Prof. E. B. Wakefield, of Hiram College, was chairman of the session in which the obstacles, if any, that exist in the way of union between Baptists and Disciples of Christ, were discussed. The Bible study was given by Ernest M. Wiles, of Muncie, Ind., after a responsive reading on "The Reign of Peace," and prayer by Prof. W. M. Forrest. Brother Wiles' subject was "The Song of Deborah," treated a la Prof. Moulton. The chairman pointed out that the discussion was not intended to be in the spirit of controversy, but as a comparison of notes. "We baptists do, in a remarkable degree, agree," he said, "but we have been working apart." Showing that if we look far enough back we have common association, he said that, although his father was a strong follower of the reformation, his grandmother was a good Baptist, and used to sing:

> "He who fixed and formed the earth,
> Fixed and formed my second birth."

J. J. Haley, of the Seventh Street Christian Church, Richmond, Va., was the reader of the first paper. He explained that the Christian union movement has advanced with such strides that his paper already needed revision, seeing that it had been written some months ago. Present differences, he claimed, no longer justify separation of the Baptists and Disciples. Theological issues, which were veritable tweedledums and tweedledees, about which men violently contended 75 years ago, have passed into innocuous desuetude. He referred to the Disciples at Jeffersonville, Ind., writing to L. L. Pinkerton, who was preaching in Kentucky, "The Baptists here are preaching that a man may believe before he repents. Come over and set them right." Brother Pinkerton wrote back: "Dear Brethren—If those Baptists can repent before they believe, let 'em pitch in." Two issues, said Brother Haley, that have survived, will not survive much longer—the design of baptism, and the communion question. There is now a tacit assumption that differences may be left to individual interpretation. He held that the only serious practical difficulty to the unification is the congregationalism that prevails in both bodies. Union must come, he said, not by legislation, but by process of growth and assimilation. The Baptists of to-day do not believe in human creeds, and are as sound as ourselves. When united, the two bodies will make the greatest Protestant church in the world.

We regretted that Dr. Colby, who was to have reviewed Brother Haley's paper, was unable to be present; but he had sent his address, which was read by President Mullins, who was loudly applauded, and put the congress into a fine receptive spirit by his happy introduction. Dr. Colby thought that the old points of contention have been softened, if not entirely removed, and he rejoiced that the day of rancorous conflict has passed; that we can to-day talk together in Christian love, causing the line of cleavage to grow ever less observable by means of our candor and our deeper spirituality. But he felt compelled to examine more critically as to whether there are serious obstacles in the way; and first, as to name. He wondered whether Disciples will be willing "to be called Baptists as they were originally," and admitted that his own brethren, if their convictions were not thereby understood to be compromised, might consent to a change of name themselves. The name, he thought, will settle itself when other questions are practically overcome. The creed question was his second consideration. Baptists do not like the expression, "The Bible is our creed." Brother Haley, he contended, had just stated what his creed was. Would Disciples object to the publication of a statement of belief which would be formulated as representative of what both bodies would accept? His third inquiry was, Is there now sufficient agreement between the two bodies as to the meaning of certain important words necessarily used in the discussion? He thought that clearness in agreement upon these points, as well as upon other cardinal ones of evangelical belief, is necessary to harmony and co-operation. Again, is there any obstacle in our respective views as to the relation of baptism to regeneration? He wanted to know whether Disciples of the present day have materially modified their views upon the statement contained in the address of the Disciples to the Baptists of Ohio in 1871, which seemed to him to be a plain declaration that a man is not a Christian before baptism, or will they accept Mr. Haley's statement that Disciples believe, and always have believed, that regeneration, as Baptists and evangelical Christians generally use the term, precedes baptism? If so, one supposed barrier to union seems to have melted away. The same query, he said, arises as to the relation of baptism to remission of sins. Again, he would ask as to whether there is any obstacle in our views of the personality in the work of the Holy Spirit, before an intelligent and strong basis for a real union can be established. This, he said, will affect methods of personal and church work. He felt that union must come by evolution, not by legislation, and that it can only be accomplished gradually and spiritually; meanwhile, he rejoiced that we have so much of truth and purpose in common.

Modern Psychology and the Religious Life.

The morning and afternoon of the last day of the congress were devoted to addresses and discussion of what might be called the educational side of religious life. Prof. Jabez Hall presided at the first session when two papers were read on the subject, "Religious Life in the Light of Modern Psychology." Perry J. Rice, of South Bend, led the devotional service, and Charles R. Hudson, the successor of George Darsie at Frankfort, Ky., gave a delightful Bible study—"A Pen Picture of the Christ." The first paper was by Prof. Edward S. Ames, of the University of Chicago, but I give an outline first of the paper by Prof. Charles E. Cory, of Hiram College:

Modern psychology through its insistence upon the teleological nature of experience suggests that the test of its truth or reality is not to be found in any external or formal standard, but in its ability to more fully express the real and inner purposes of life—and hence that the criterion of religion lies not so much back in theories of origin as forward in the developing forces of history and the way in which it becomes the end and ideal of society. All externalism and authority based on such gives place to an immanent purposiveness which unfolds with the unfolding experience of man. Truth, therefore, means a grade of value in this unfolding process. The apologetic for Christianity must therefore not lie in the past, but in its value to the life of the age to which it comes.

With such an apologetic Christianity fares well, for it is literally saving the world and so long as it quickens the lives of men no uncertainty regarding its origin can ever remove it from the forces of life. Religion thus viewed is essentially practical and a matter of the will, but our analysis finds that it also involves cognition and that it is therefore vitally related to theoretical ideals of the individual and of the race. All effort to relieve it from the fallibility of man's judgment is both futile and unpsychological. If it is to enter man's experience it must submit itself to the weakness and limitations of that experience and grow and develop with the life of the race; and this development, we believe, points steadily onward in the direction of an idealistic union, in which and only in which can be found a permanent habitation for the spirit of man. All forms of pluralism will ever find themselves broken to pieces upon the facts of the religious consciousness.

The paper by Professor Ames was on the particular subject of "The Rise of Religion in the Individual," and the following is an outline of it:

The period of adolescence is the point at which the individual becomes religious in the sense of awakening to the values and interests which belong to the religious institutions and ideas about him. This is the time at which the Catholic, Episcopal and Lutheran churches receive their youth by confirmation; and it is the period at which the revivals of the Methodists, Baptists and Disciples exert their influence. It is the age at which all religions among civilized and primitive peoples receive their neophytes. The experience of the individual in coming to participate in this religious life varies according to early training, environment and temperament. It may be gradual, or violent, emotional or intellectual, or practical. Gradual growth and spontaneous awakening are the normal processes, while extreme forms of conversion are abnormal. Only certain people are susceptible to conversion. The methods of modern revivals often reach this class chiefly. But the influence of personal, direct methods of instruction, of good example and of wholesome religious life would reach all classes. Young people who are rightly trained might thus be saved the unnecessary distress and tension of an emotional "experience." The Disciples would do well to study again at the present time the didactic preaching which they once employed in a conscious and deliberate reaction against the emotionalism and irrationality of a crude evangelism.

"The Reorganization of Religious Education"

was the theme of the second session, over which Dr. James M. Philputt, of St. Louis, presided. Mitchell E. Chatley, of Ravenna, Ohio, led the devotions.

Alva W. Taylor had the first paper on the subject of the afternoon. It was a very thoughtful presentation, which may be summed up as follows:

The child is born non-religious, just as he is born non-rational. His religious faculties are germinal, as are all his faculties. He is born a citizen in society and in the kingdom of God, just as he is born a citizen in the state. He is to be developed, grown up naturally, into his place and responsibilities. He is a social being, and his very individuality is socialized—is determined in social terms. He is to grow up in the kingdom of God as he grows up in the nation, and accept his responsibilities as he is able to assume them. Subjectively, religion is vital in life. It is neither handed down nor grafted in. (The non-religious race was never found; it was a hypothetical deduction of materialistic evolution.) Religious education is the development of the religious elements of life. The Scriptures are the text-book for the means of religious education, and the lessons are to be selected and adapted to the stage of development in which the child is found at any given time. Objectively, religion is relationship. It is social of being and design, and the kingdom of God is its divine consummation, and the kingdom of God is the ideal consummation of human society. The interests and the nature of the child are social and the process must be one of socialization. The method used by Jesus in imparting religious instruction may be termed the "case method." He took the concrete problems that proposed themselves in ordinary daily experience, and, applying eternal principles, solved them. So should religious instruction be imparted to the child. From earliest instruction the moral authority of Jesus should be impressed until it becomes a habit in thinking. The interests of the child are the line of least resistance. Doctrines are formulations of belief and experience, the results of induction. Each individual has a right to formulate his own or to choose whose he will adopt. To impose them upon the untrained mind is to bias reason and fix prejudices that may be fancied to be convictions. Conduct is the end, and the means, of religious education.

George A. Miller, of Covington, Ky., who had the second paper, explained that there had been no consultation between the writers of the papers, and that therefore they might at times run along parallel lines. He said that if we put religious education on the right basis methods would take care of themselves. Right education is based on the fundamental proposition that the individual is one composite whole. Religion is something within to be enlarged and developed. Teaching, he said, should begin in the home and then there would come a spontaneous religious life at adolescence. Not what the child learns, but what it becomes, is the important consideration. He made a plea for the teaching of religious conceptions and ideas in our day schools and institutions of higher learning, and laid special emphasis upon the work in colleges for the training of ministers. In these, he urged, there should be a thorough course in pedagogy, if even some time should have to be taken from homiletics and hermeneutics. The standard of entrance ought to be made higher, and he suggested that there should be what he called "preacher clinics." I wish I had space to give some account of the discussion upon these papers, and of those of the preceding session.

The closing session is referred to on the editorial pages.

Business.

There was not much business transacted at the congress. An account of the session held in the interest of our colleges, and especially of Butler College, during which the very welcome announcement was made that Mr. Andrew Carnegie had agreed to give the last twenty-five thousand dollars to complete the endowment of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars which the college is trying to raise, I must postpone until next week. Suffice it to say that steps were taken toward the reorganization of the Religious Education Society. At a meeting of the National Christian Bible School Association a resolution was passed appointing T. J. Legg, Robert Hopkins and C. M. Fillmore a committee to present to the board a request that it employ a national superintendent to promote Bible study in the Sunday-schools and churches. As an outcome of a suggestion of W. T. Moore, which was taken up and elaborated by Dr. Mullins, a committee of ten representative men was nominated by a special committee chosen for this purpose, of which D. R. Lucas was chairman. The following names were accepted by the congress: I. J. Spencer (chairman), W. T. Moore, J. J. Haley, W. F. Richardson, J. B. Briney, A. B. Philputt, H. L. Willett, E. B. Wakefield, J. H. Garrison and Charles S. Medbury. These are to meet a similar committee from the Baptists to see if some common agreement can be reached.

Cincinnati will be the place of assembly, next year and the committee elected was: A. B. Philputt, president; R. E. Hieronymus, G. A. Miller and T. E. Cramblet.

Our Budget

—Let the churches take an offering for home missions next Lord's day.

—Let the offering be the greatest we have ever taken.

—If you wish to contribute to the help of our brethren in San Francisco and the Pacific coast send the money to the American Christian Missionary Society, marking it for this special purpose.

—A telegram announces the dedication of a fine new church at Jacksonville, Ill., free of debt, $25,000 being raised, with 1,600 pupils in the Sunday-school.

—We have only space now to mention the fact that E. V. Zollars has resigned as president of Texas Christian University.

—Butler College will get $25,000 from Mr. Carnegie for its endowment fund when $225,000 shall have been raised by friends of the college. Prof. T. C. Howe is now in the field to raise this money.

—Christian College, Columbia, Mo., has been promised $25,000 by Mr. Carnegie for its new academic hall, on condition that the friends of the college raise $25,000 endowment.

—The new building of the Hamilton Avenue Christian Church, St. Louis, Mo., will be dedicated next Lord's day. This has been made possible by the generosity of R. H. Stockton.

—We hear reports of many of our churches taking collections for the general fund to assist the San Francisco sufferers. A number of churches have also taken up special funds for our own brethren and our church work in the city. It will be seen there is a call for this fellowship just now. The matter was brought to the attention of the congress by W. M. White, who was chairman of the committee of our San Francisco convention. Brother White reported that the First Church, San Francisco, was entirely destroyed, and that most of its members, living in the fire zone, must have lost all their property. A great deal of damage was also done to the West End Church, our finest building, though this may be repaired so as to make the building soon serviceable again, but its membership has also been heavily crippled by the general disaster. We have two other churches within the city limits from which, at this writing, we have not heard. These churches, however, were both, in a sense, mission points assisted by the two stronger churches already mentioned.

—San Jose, Palo Alto and Santa Rosa suffered severely. The First Church in the first named city is in ruins, but not one of the six hundred members was seriously hurt. That church and the Central will unite, Bro. J. V. Coombs writes us. Charles L. Beal, minister at Palo Alto, writes that our new brick church there was destroyed by the earthquake. The American Christian Missionary Society is opening a special fund for the help of the churches that have been destroyed or damaged, and the membership to whom this misfortune has come. We hope to give fuller details later. Something like two million dollars worth of damage was done to church buildings.

—S. W. Jackson, of Douglas, Ariz., is holding a meeting.

—A helpful district convention has just been held at Bloomfield, Mo.

—H. H. Moore, of Greenville, N. C., goes to Vanceburg, Ky., June 11.

—J. S. Raum will spend three months during the year in the evangelistic field.

—Homer M. Perryman, of Greenville, Texas, is in a meeting with Will J. Slater at Stilwell, I. T.

—Carl C. Davis will continue as pastor at Brighton, Ia., at the close of the meeting he is now holding.

—The Foreign Society has received another gift on the annuity plan from a friend in California.

—Thomas Martin, evangelist, will supply the pulpit at California, Pa., until a man can be located to take the work there.

—George L. Snively, of the Christian Publishing Company, will preach the baccalaureate sermon at Paragould, Ark., May 13.

—It was C. O. Titus, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of El Paso, Texas, not D. B. Titus, who was recently at Bizbee, Ariz., with Dan Trundle.

—The south Kentucky convention will be held May 21-24, at Murray, where G. H. C. Stoney has recently entered upon his third year's work.

—The ministerial institute of Oklahoma will be held at Blackwell May 15-17, when President Zollars, of Texas Christian University, will be the principal lecturer.

—E. L. Ely is very much pleased with the people and the outlook at the Northside Church, Kansas City, from which C. P. Smith recently went to Mason City, Iowa.

—A. E. Cory, after a successful meeting in New York, in association with Brethren Willis and Hackleman, has gone to Osceola, Ia., where letters will reach him.

—W. H. Waggoner has just held a missionary institute at Springfield, Ill., and during May will hold other institutes at Mechanicsburg, Barry, Chapin and Chambersburg.

—W. W. Clark reports that O. F. McHargue is doing excellent work at Billings, Mont., where it is hoped that the present building will be outgrown in a short time.

—Work on the new building for the church at Los Angeles, of which Walter L. Martin is pastor, has progressed so far that it is hoped the dedication will take place about May 20.

—The Kansas eighth district convention of the Christian Church will be held in La Crosse May 9-11. A cordial invitation is extended to all delegates and visitors.—O. H. Truman.

—Mrs. Dr. E. I. Osgood, of Chu Cheo, China, has just returned to the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. G. Hertzog, Hiram, O., for her vacation. Dr. Osgood will return later.

—Claire Waite, of Chicago, who has been filling on Sundays the pulpit of our church in Milwaukee, which has been without a pastor since Oct. 30, has accepted a call there to begin May 1.

—P. A. Davey and wife, missionaries of the Foreign Society, sailed from San Francisco on the S. S. Mongolia for Japan, April 25. Mr. Davey has just completed his regular furlough.

—Dr. A. Holck, long a missionary of the Foreign Society at Copenhagen, Denmark, is spending some time in Germany hoping to improve his health. The grand old warrior is almost worn out.

—Bro. B. B. Tyler and wife are safely located in New York City, where he preached last Lord's day, and where he is to preach the following Lord's day before going on to Denver.

—The Foreign Society has decided to appropriate about $15,000 for buildings in Manila, P. I. This is a much needed step. B. L. Kershner and wife, late of Pennsylvania, are the missionaries.

—The new church at Dublin, Tex., has just been dedicated. A. L. Clinkenbeard is doing a fine work there. H. A. Northcutt is now holding a good meeting for them. He goes next to Palestine, Texas.

—O. M. Thomason has been able to leave the sanitarium at Dallas, Tex., where he has been sick for more than six weeks. He had resigned at Davis, I. T., and hoped to be at Davenport, Wash., early in May.

—The eighth district convention, Nebraska, meets at Bartley May 15-17, when some of the best talent of the state will be present. R. W. Mills, late of Genesee, Idaho, has just taken the work at Bartley.

—A newspaper telegram from Bloomington, Ill., announces that Mrs. Anna Short, widely known as an evangelist and home missionary in Illinois, was found dead in her bed. She was sixty years of age.

—At the April meeting of the executive committee of the Foreign Society G. B. Baird, of Indianapolis, Ind., was appointed a missionary to China, and Raymond A. McCorkle and wife, of Cambridge, O., to Japan.

—Granville Snell and the First Christian Church at Abilene, Tex., are looking forward to a great meeting this month with H. A. Northcutt. Brother Snell and family recently were "severely pounded" by this appreciative flock.

Baby's Food

can always be uniform if you use Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. The original. Especially prepared as an infant food. Send for Baby's Diary, a valuable booklet for mothers, 108 Hudson Street, New York.

—John S. Zeran and H. A. Northcutt are in a meeting with L. D. Anderson, pastor of the church at Palestine, Texas. The brethren there have just moved into a handsome new edifice which seats 1,200 people.

—S. W. Crutcher is in a meeting at Polo, Mo., where we have neither church nor meeting house. The Baptist brethren, he reports, were good enough to federate with us to the extent of lending their building and baptistry.

—The debt on the building at Gas, Kan., is being reduced, while the brethren at La Harpe have just purchased the lot upon which their tabernacle stands, and hope to build this autumn. Clyde Sharp has charge at both places.

—The church at Middletown, Mo., to which Simpson Ely gives half his time, has recently raised its apportionment for church extension, doubled its foreign missionary apportionment, trebled that for home missions, and sent an offering to the Benevolent Association.

—A western mayor, in introducing Admiral Dewey, is reported to have said: "He seen his duty and done it noble." Would that this eulogy, phrased perhaps in better English, might be truly applied to every church among us after May 6, in reference to the May offering for home missions.

—H. A. Collins has just given a second $500 on the annuity plan to the National Benevolent Association. It is interesting to know that Mr. Collins is a member of the Methodist Church. Secretary J. H. Mohorter will give particulars to all inquirers concerning this plan, and he may be addressed at 903 Aubert avenue, St. Louis.

—The brethren at Antioch, Morgan county, Illinois, have just improved the parsonage which will add much to the comfort of Bro. Henry Genders. He is about to begin a series of sermons on "First Principles." His church recently made an offering of nearly $84 for foreign work, which is very liberal considering the size of the congregation.

—Bethany College announces a summer term from June 19 to July 28, when two lines of work will be offered, one embracing subjects required for teachers' certificates, the other covering a large portion of the regular college work for which college credit will be given. The entire cost will be $25. Prof. F. M. Longanecker, Bethany, W. Va., has the matter in charge.

—At this writing three of the churches which took part in the New York campaign have closed their meetings: East Orange, Plainfield and One Hundred Sixty-ninth Street Church; Plainfield four, East Orange, 30, and One Hundred Sixty-ninth Street 44 additions. Scoville and Smith are still at work and have had 110 to date. The Brooklyn meetings are progressing nicely.

—William Lowen, of Wilmore, Ky., has been reading the Editor's book on the Holy Spirit, and says it fills a long felt want. "We have been accused," he writes, "of not believing in the Holy Spirit. * * * The author has not run wild with his theme, but in a calm, dispassionate way leads the reader into a clearer understanding of the subject. * * * I am thankful for the timely appearance of this book."

—The Christian Publishing Company is about to bring out a new work from the pen of our thoughtful and scholarly brother, J. W. Monser, of Kansas City, entitled, "The Literature of the Disciples." It is a vigorous and timely discussion of our literature and is, in our judgment, the most incisive and discriminating treatment of the subject which has appeared. Further announcements will be made soon.

HOME DEPARTMENT
—AND—
CRADLE ROLL SUPPLIES
Buttons, Cards, Booklets, and everything else that is helpful in a Sunday-school.
Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo

—A. Robert Miller, who has for nearly four years ministered to the church at Savannah, Ga., resigned on Easter Sunday. He desires a change, as he has had poor health ever since living in Savannah. The church house, during his ministry, has been remodeled, nearly one hundred and fifty additions have been reported, all but four of these coming in regular services. Brother Miller will leave every branch of the work in good condition.

—G. P. Rutledge, pastor of the Third Church, Philadelphia, Pa., writes as follows: "Permit me to add my approval of your course regarding federation. I think all this agitation is a 'tempest in a teapot.' From my view point it is surprising that our entire brotherhood does not join in a shout of praise for this signboard, which undoubtedly points to the union for which we have prayed and labored. And I am a conservative, too!"

—The official board of the church at Paris, Ill., has decided to enlarge the building this summer at an expense of from $10,00 to $20,000, thereby giving better opportunities for a larger work. Fred F. Hagin, the first living link of the church, will be retained in Japan, while the Sunday-school has unanimously voted that another living link shall be supported this year, and the C. W. B. M. has planned for the support of one the coming year. Brother Idleman is at the head of a great church.

—J. R. Blunt, writing about the success in the March offering at his churches, says that the secret was that "we got the literature into their homes before the offering, and preached a rousing sermon on missions." The church at Stoutland gave almost twice as much as last year, that at Crocker almost three times as much, while the brethren at Richland increased their offering, though not in proportion to the others. Here, however, $200 was paid on the parsonage debt, and the money has hardly been missed.

—Although the church at Magnolia avenue, Los Angeles, Cal., is only two years old, the brethren there had the joy of dedicating a mission chapel costing $3,000 on Easter afternoon. There is a fine Bible school of one hundred members there, and Brother McKnight is conducting a meeting at the chapel, looking to the organization of a church, if possible. The collection taken by the Magnolia Avenue Church for the relief of our churches in Santa Fe was about $600. All the churches of southern California will send offerings at once.

—A note from Dr. E. B. Sanford, general secretary of the National Federation of Churches and Christian Workers, says that the proceedings of the recent Inter-Church Conference, embodying the great addresses delivered, is to be sent out at once. It is to be published by Revell and Company, but orders can be filed on the office of the secretary, 81 Bible House, Fourth avenue and Ninth street, New York City. The price of the book is $2, and just now it ought to be in the hands of every minister and layman interested in Christian union.

—The program of the Southern Illinois Ministerial Institute, to be held at Albion, Edwards county, May 8 to 10, appears on another page. The brethren down in Egypt have prepared a strong, up-to-date program, and they are expecting a large attendance. Among the brethren from outside the district who will speak are William Oeschger, Vincennes, Ind.; L. H. Stine, Tipton, Ind.; President R. E. Hieronymus, Eureka, Ill.; Superintendent Marion Stevenson, Bloomington, Ill.; President A. McLean, Cincinnati, O., and J. H. Garrison, St. Louis, Mo.

Loss of Appetite
Is common when the blood needs purifying and enriching, for then the blood fails to give the digestive organs the stimulus necessary for the proper performance of their functions.
Hood's Sarsaparilla is pre-eminently the medicine to take. It makes the blood pure and rich, and strengthens all the digestive organs.
"I was all run down and had no appetite. After taking one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla I could eat anything I wished." Mrs. Amanda Fenner, Oneco, Conn.

—F. Ellsworth Day has just closed his pastorate at Knoxville, Ia., where, during his eighteen months' work, one hundred and eight have been added to the church. He leaves this in splendid condition and goes forth to his new field at Nelson, Neb., with the best wishes of the membership and his ministerial brethren of other churches, who gave up their own services for a union farewell service in the M. E. church. At the close of the sermon resolutions of appreciation were read referring to Brother Day's generous disposition, his broad sympathy, and his eminent worth in the ministry.

—R. H. Lampkin, who has just held a good meeting at Dexter, Mo., with the help of John S. Zeran and wife, singing evangelists, commends this couple most highly. He says that they find it necessary to give up work in the field for something settled, on account of their children. Brother Zeran lately gave up a good business and was ordained to the ministry, and now wants an opportunity to study under some strong man and further prepare himself for his life's work. Both he and his wife are accomplished musicians, and ought to render excellent service for some church.

—C. C. Morrison has resigned the pastorate of the First Christian Church, Springfield, Ill., and the resignation will, we understand, be accepted. It will not go into effect until the expiration of ninety days. The resignation comes as a surprise to a great many people. We understand that Brother Morrison has tendered it in view of the fact that there are a few among his members who are not satisfied with some of his views and he did not wish to stand in the way of absolute harmony in the church. He has occupied this pastorate for four years, having formerly had charge of the Monroe Christian Church in Chicago, after completing his studies at the university there. He is everywhere recognized as one of our brightest young men. He is a believer in practical religion.

—We are requested to give publication to the following announcement about a young boy who disappeared from home November 8, 1905: Paul Webb, 13 years old, light hair, blue eyes, rather heavy build; a little stooped; small scar inch above right eye; small uncolored mole on chin; slight dimples; scar on left side back near waist line; hands, feet and ears rather large; has "cowlick" on right side of forehead; free talker; well read; fond of country life and hunting. If found, please take care of him and wire or phone at my expense.—George W. Webb, 423 South Main street, Independence, Mo.

—In the Editor's absence from the office, and the extreme pressure upon his time, he failed to hear of the death of his old friend, Dr. J. M. Allen, until he read a few days ago in the columns of The Christian-Evangelist of April 19, the beautiful and worthy tribute by his brother, J. W. Allen, of Spokane. Dr. Allen was widely known in Illinois, where he was a preacher of the Gospel for many years, and at one time president of Eureka College. He was a minister and educator of high character and ability, and a most consecrated Christian man. Out in this western city of Washington, where he has labored as minister for many years, he fell asleep, and we doubt not that many who knew and loved him will drop a tear of sympathy on reading the notice of his departure. Heaven grows richer as such men pass on into it. Our sympathy is extended to the remaining brother and other bereaved ones.

—The New York "Observer" contains reports from several ministers and one business man of Dr. Chapman's meeting in Dallas, Tex., which commend it in highest terms. Charles L. Dealey, a prominent man of Dallas, says: "The coming to Dallas of Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, with his corps of evangelists, and the way in which, with the hearty co-operation of the various churches and ministers of the city, the simple yet powerful story of the Gospel, the 'King's message,' has been proclaimed, means more to this city, and especially, I think, to the business men, than any series of meetings ever held here. From my heart I am free to say I think the Old Story has never been delivered more simply, directly, concisely, powerfully or with more love and tenderness than in these series of great meetings now about to close. As the meetings are reviewed, I fancy thus the Gospel was preached in the days of the apostles. As never before, the claims of God have been brought home to thoughtful men. I speak especially of this movement, as it has appealed to men and from the success experienced here in reaching men, and am convinced not only do they need, but they really want a Gospel, a salvation, a God, a Christ, and those elements of strength and power which the Gospel of Jesus Christ brings and holds up to them. I thank God for the meetings in Dallas and for Dr. Chapman and his band of noble workers, and pray God to more and more grant them victory for the Master." Bro. H. O. Breeden was one of the corps of workers, and Bro. Herbert Yeuell followed with a short but very successful meeting at the Central Christian Church.

Not a Tax, But An Opportunity.

Our confidence that the centennial aims will be reached before 1909 is based upon a common sense application of the law of averages to the Gospel's power. Half of the sinners in the average community can be induced to hear the Word; half of those who hear can be won to the Christ; and nine-tenths of those who come out on the Lord's side will loyally support the proclamation of the Gospel, locally, generally (in all America) or universally. But at every step the opportunity must be given. We all insist on having the invitation given at the close of every service—even for the possibility of one confession. Let us show like faith and sense in taking the missionary offerings, through which this same blessed invitation is to be extended in the places where it is now unheard. No one has to give—we are under a law of liberty—but in every church some will be found who will give. And no one can tell beforehand who they are. Every one must decide for himself. So all should be given a chance. Nothing else is needed now to secure the $200,000 for home missions May 6.

And let us be done with the fallacy that what is given for home missions is taken from the preacher's salary, the building fund or private benevolence. We are under the law of love. When we accepted the invitation and gave our hearts to Christ we did not diminish but greatly increased and transfigured our love of family and friends and native land. We ceased to love only things that were evil and sordid. What home missions secures is taken not from any Christian service but from all miserable selfishness. By all means swell the total to $200,000 in this year of grace, 1906, and break the way for $500,000 in 1909. W. R. Warren,
Centennial Sec.

Missouri State Convention.

Beautiful for situation is Hannibal. Nature seems to have placed her richest robes on this city and its environs, and yet the smokestack of the factory is not absent, for her varied industries reach all the way from dynamite to cement. In this busy city, standing like a sentinel on the Mississippi watching the state of Illinois, the Missouri Christian Missionary Society will hold its annual convention June 15-20, 1906. According to the rules of the convention lodging and breakfast will be furnished every delegate free. Send your name to S. F. Schultz, chairman of the entertainment committee, at once. The Hannibal church extends a hearty invitation to come. —Levi Marshall.

Broaden the Base.

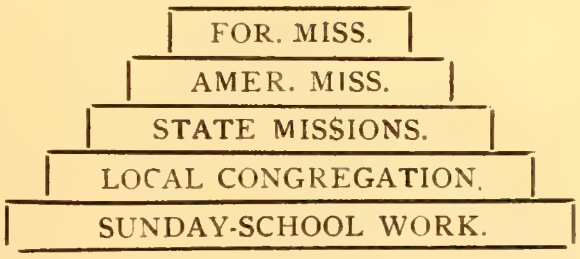
BY J. H. BRYAN.



A. McLean says the foreign work depends upon the success of American missions.

B. L. Smith says the American work depends upon the success of state missions.

B. S. Denny says the state work depends upon the success of the local congregation.

Superintendent of Evangelism W. J. Wright says the chief evangelistic agency of the church is the Sunday-school.

Centennial Secretary W. R. Warren says if we are to double our church membership by 1909 we must first double our schools.

Missions, evangelism, education and benevolences find their base of supplies in the Sunday-school.'

Broaden the base!

The Day set for the offering for Home Missions is May 6th. If every preacher who reads this paper will give the members of his congregation an opportunity to contribute on that Day, we are confident that more than $200,000 will be received this year. But it all lies with the preachers. We have no criticisms to make, no grievances to air, no complaints to utter. We rejoice in every good work under whatever auspices. But if we are to do the work expected of us we must have $200,000 this year—not a dollar less. The people will give that amount as soon as they see the necessity. We cannot reach all the people. The preachers are our sole dependence. We believe in our preachers. We are sure they will do their best to answer every appeal. Our brothers in America cry for the Gospel. We, as your agents, are doing our best to answer their cries. New fields invite us. We want to enter at once. Anything short of $200,000 will cripple our work. We appeal to the consciences of our ministers. We confidently expect an adequate answer.

For California Churches.

The awful calamity which has befallen the people of San Francisco and many of the neighboring towns and cities stirs the Christian sympathy of the whole world. Positive information has reached us regarding the utter destruction of a number of our houses of worship and the homes of a great many of our people. A large number of our brethren are left without even the commonest necessities of life. Moreover a number of our churches are absolutely lost to us unless a special fund is provided with which to support the preachers while the people shall engage in rebuilding their own homes and houses of worship. Everything points to the American Christian Missionary Society as the proper one to raise and administer a relief fund for our brethren in California.

We therefore appeal to every congregation in the brotherhood and to every individual among us to send us the largest possible free will offering which we are to administer as a special fund in such a way as to sustain our preachers and see that the good work of the past is not lost.

Mark all such offerings "Special relief fund for California," and it will be administered for that purpose and none other.

Forty-four Pledges.

The dear old CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, amid the raging of the federation storm, does not forget to be practically helpful to our great mission interests. I do not believe that I am looking at this with distorted vision when I say that the permanent fund, of which you had recently a notice, is the one great thing before our Missouri people to-day.

We have stricken the word "fail" out of our vocabulary. We dare not, must not fail. Let me here give you a letter that has just come, that I believe will touch many as deeply as it has me:

"Dear Brother Abbott: Please find note for $100, payable one day after date, so that I can pay it as soon as I desire. I intend to pay it all by Dec. 31, 1907, perhaps before. Please consider this little gift to the Master as much from my wife as from myself; really she bears the most sacrifice."

That is a part of a letter from a working man. We have a thousand people in Missouri more able to do this than is he. Brethren, the honor roll awaits your name. I have started out to get one hundred $100 pledges. I have 56. Who will be the next? Don't wait for me to write you. Act quickly. We must have good pledges for $15,000 by July 1, or forfeit all claim to Brother Long's $5,000.

The Last Call.

This is the last possible message to you before May 6, the day of the offering for home missions.

The last word is, that our needs were never so great as at the present time. There are literally hundreds of appeals for aid before us, not one of which can be answered favorably unless there is a great increase in the offerings this year. That means scattered Disciples, still worse than scattered—disappointed, despairing and lost to our plea. It means that our work is set back in some communities for many years. Five hundred thousand dollars could be wisely used by this society this year. It has borrowed $25,000 to pay its workers.

The calamity which has befallen our churches on the Pacific coast will make it out of the question to expect offerings from many congregations there, and of necessity brings a special plea before the churches for the support of the work in California.

Let every congregation aim at improveing the condition of some mission so as to make their conditions and surroundings as favorable as your own. Work and preach and pray for this great cause as never before. Enlist a thousand churches which last year did not take the offering and this year let us do something worthy of ourselves, of our needy brethren and of our Lord.

Oklahoma's Bible School Superintendents.

Brother and Sister H. S. Gilliam, of Hastings, Neb., have been selected as superintendents of Bible school work of Oklahoma Territory. They will be ready to enter upon active work June 1, 1906. They wish to arrange a complete program for institute work prior to coming to the territory. This necessarily must be done by correspondence. Brother Gilliam resigns the same position in Nebraska to accept the work in Oklahoma. He is recognized as one of our best Sunday-school workers. Mrs. Gilliam has been state president of the C. W. B. M. of Nebraska and will give her entire time to the Sunday-school work of the territory. Sunday-school superintendents who desire the services of Brother and Sister Gilliam should write them at Hastings, Neb. Let all workers rally to their support.

Is It a "New Issue"?

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In view of the fact that an effort is being made to create the impression that your recent utterances concerning the Christian character of the Protestant bodies, consitute a new issue, permit me to quote from your Des Moines address, delivered at our congress two years ago, which I have just read, a statement which your now leading critics heard and to which they made no objection:

"Another principle involved in church federation is the recognition, on the part of each of the religious bodies co-operating, of the Christian character, aim and work of the others. It is not necessary, of course, that each one shall approve of all the doctrines and practices of the other, for this is impossible, and would render all co-operation impossible. It is enough, if the churches entering into such federation recognize each other as bodies of Christian people, doing more or less perfectly God's work, and receiving tokens of the divine blessing. We have in all our churches members who represent different types of Christian character; some are very weak in their faith and in their grasp of Christian truth, attending the services very irregularly, with barely enough life to keep their names on the church roster as members in good standing. From this class up, through varying degrees of faith and of life, we rise to the highest type of consecrated manhood and womanhood. And yet, we include them all in the bonds of our fellowship, and are glad to do what we can for the weaker ones to enable them to have a more abundant life. As God looks down upon the various groups of Christians, which we call denominations or distinct religious movements, he sees, no doubt, very much the same thing. Some of them have a purer and simpler faith, a more Scriptural practice, and a greater fullness of life than others; but they are all members of his family and of his church, if so be they believe in, love and obey, to the best of their knowledge, his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, and bring forth the fruits of Christian living. The real question, then, is, Does our common Father wish all these groups of his children to recognize each other as his children in spite of their errors and imperfections, and seek to be mutually helpful to each other in coming to a full knowledge of the truth, while co-operating for the furtherance of his kingdom? So far as the present writer is able to interpret God's will, this is just what he would like to have them do." (Pp. 13 and 14, "Church Federation.")

Is not that exactly the same "issue" which you made recently and which is being interpreted as a "surrender of our plea"? Why this misunderstanding of your position? LAWRENCE GEORGE.

[The "issue" is exactly the same, of course, and is as old as the reformation we plead. Our correspondent is exceedingly charitable in referring to recent misrepresentations of this position as a "misunderstanding"; but charitableness is a good thing and is much needed just now. —EDITOR.]

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Bowling Green, Ky.

We have just closed one of the most successful meetings here that the Tenth Street congregation has ever enjoyed. Brothers Wilson and Lintt, evangelist and singer, had 22 days of hard work, with 65 additions. About three-fourths of these came by obedience, others by commendation and from the Baptists. There might have been twice or three times this number had the weather been favorable and our seating capacity larger. As soon as Brother Wilson saw that we could seat only 650 or 700, he said, "I can hold you a good meeting, but not a great meeting." We feel satisfied with the results. It was a larger ingathering than at any time before, reaching farther in influence in the city and county.—W. T. Wells.

A Good Work at Elmira, N. Y.

I helped in a two weeks' meeting with the church in Elmira, N. Y., recently. C. C. Crawford has been the pastor of this church for nearly ten years. He will be remembered as one of "The Christian-Evangelist Special" family on the Pacific coast trip of last summer by those who were so fortunate as to be numbered with that happy family.

After a heroic struggle for about ten years the little band of 150 Disciples have completed a beautiful and modern house of worship at a cost of $23,000. They had worshiped for years in an old hall which had been condemned as unsafe. The pastor decided that if the cause which is so dear to us all was ever to be firmly established in this beautiful and prosperous city of 40,000 inhabitants, a suitable building must be erected without further delay. It was a tremendous undertaking, for there is not a wealthy person among their number. Brother Crawford is not only a faithful pastor and strong preacher, but is a man who has had a thorough business training as well, therefore he was especially fitted for this difficult undertaking. They will have to carry a heavy mortgage for a time, but I believe they will successfully meet their obligations. I do not believe there is a church in the restoration movement which gives more liberally in proportion to income than does the church in Elmira. There is a larger per cent of "tithers" in this church than any church known to me. If there are those who would like to help in this important enterprise a few hundred dollars could be well invested. The new auditorium was opened March 11, and there were 20 additions to the church that day. I went to assist in the work by preaching two weeks, and 25 others were added, making a total of 45 for the first two weeks in the new home. On Sunday evening, March 18, a near-by Presbyterian church adjourned their service and the pastor and entire congregation attended the evening service at the church of Christ. Brother Crawford enjoys the friendship of the preachers of the city, yet there is not a more loyal preacher to the New Testament teaching among us. He is a man of strong conviction, permeated by the love of Christ, which has won the respect and confidence of the Christian people of the entire city. I shall long remember these days of sweet fellowship.—G. B. Townsend, Troy, N. Y.

The Zanesville Meeting.

The 18 days' evangelistic services at the First Church of Christ, Zanesville, O., under the leadership of the pastor, Asa McDaniel, assisted by Harvard S. Saxton and wife, came to a triumphant close. Twenty-eight souls came by confession, letter and statement. Following the meeting a reception was given for the new members. The meeting gave the church a prestige in the life of the city, and we were never more widely and favorably known. We are now ready to work for, and expect larger and better things in, the Master's service. Two months before the meeting began it furnished the topic of conversation in our homes; the subject of our prayers at the mid-week meetings, and was announced at all the regular services of the church. The membership was organized into committees and rallied in a commendable way to the support of the work. A large chorus choir, with splendid music re-enforced the Gospel truths brought out in the sermons. The song evangelists, Mr. and Mrs. Harvard S. Saxton, are musicians of rare talent, and delightfully entertained the audience at every service. Mrs. Saxton, as a violinist, was a favorite throughout the meeting. It is not my purpose to unduly praise our pastor, but he merits all that can be said of him. He is in the fourth year of his ministry here, and has held three other meetings, with good results.—Charles Somers.

Maryland.

I recently had a conference with the preachers in Baltimore, through an exchange of pulpits with the pastor of the Twenty-fifth Street Church.——The work at Harlem Avenue has taken on a new life of activity and enterprise. The Sunday-school work has been largely increased, improvements are being provided for, also for the men's league and reading room, at an expense of $6,000. The scholarly pastor, B. A. Abbott, is having accessions at nearly every service. Twelve additions to the church since Jan. 1.——The Christian Temple is like a hive of bees. They have recently become a living link church. Forty-seven accessions have been gained to the temple since Jan 1. On the first Lord's day in April, E. B. Bagby, of Washington, D. C., assisted Peter Ainslie in a series of meetings.——H. Randall Lookabill, of the Fulton Avenue Church, reports 11 accessions since Jan. 1. The Sunday-school work is growing. They are altogether hopeful.——The report of the Calhoun Street Church comes from their pastor, A. F. Reiter, as follows: Sunday, March 25, unusual day; 120 in Sunday-chool; 1 confession at night; 1 three weeks ago; 5 baptisms and 25 by letter since Jan. 1; 73 since Oct. 1; membership doubled. Brother Reiter is at present conducting a series of cottage meetings. This church, which has been a mission, will become self-sustaining at the beginning of our new missionary year.——The Twenty-fifth Street Church has a consecrated membership, which insures its success. C. M. Kreidler is the cultured pastor. He has had 51 accessions since Oct. 1 and was planning to begin a series of meetings. The city having raised the grade 5 feet in the rear of the chapel makes it absolutely necessary to remove and raise the building, which they hope to enlarge, at an expenditure of $6,000. If you wish to help a worthy cause send remittances to H. H. Cross, 532 East Twenty-second street, Baltimore, Md.——A lawyer of Baltimore City, and deacon of the Christian Temple, John N. Pickering, is preaching most acceptably for the Randall Street Mission. There were 5 accessions in February and 1 confession recently; audiences are good; Sunday-school largely increased and collections sufficient to pay necessary expenses. This mission will be a success.——Thomas P. Wood, who recently came to us from the Baptists, is located with the church at Lansdowne, Md. He has been having encouraging success; 7 confessions recently.

All the workers in our district, Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia, have been paid in full to date. We must, however, provide for the future. Send remittances to J. Irvin Bitner, Hagerstown, Md. A grateful smile is on the face of your corresponding secretary.—W. S. Hoye, Beaver Creek, Md.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. ### Conditions in West Virginia.

The preparation for the simultaneous revival has done much to improve conditions in this state. All the churches are looking forward to great ingatherings, and they feel that they have to develop the spiritual life in order to take care of results. For a number of years the anti-missionary sentiment dominated in this mountain state. But the revival of the foreign and home missionary spirit has brought our congregation out of legalism and indifference and we have men and women uniting with the church for service. The age of controversy has given way to a dignified investigation of truth and righteousness and those things that help to build up Christian principles. The time has come when the Christian church must stand for more than doctrine. It has to stand for a life of service to the great Head of the church. People are beginning to look at how a man lives, as well as at the doctrine he adheres to. There is a relation between doctrine and life, but the masses judge a tree by its fruits, and a good and Scriptural doctrine has to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit. The missionary sentiment is growing throughout our entire state. The foreign missionary offering in March was larger than ever before in the history of West Virginia, and this year West Virginia will witness the largest offering ever taken for home missions. Brother Wright is pushing home missions to the front, and the pastors, evangelists and Christian workers will be in line on May 6. I am glad to see the active interest taken in missions by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.—A. Linkletter, Cor. Sec.

Western Slope Notes.

John T. Stivers recently closed a great meeting at Rifle, with 88 additions—38 from denominations, the remainder by confession and baptism. The pastor's salary was increased and the church will have preaching all the time instead of half time. The Methodist Episcopal preacher challenged Brother Stivers for a debate on baptism, which was accepted. This debate is to take place this month. As a result of the meeting at Rifle a Methodist Episcopal mission point is to be turned over to the Christian church. Brother Bailey is the efficient minister at Rifle.——A church is being organized at Delta. This is a town of about 2,000 inhabitants, located in a rich valley watered by the Gunnison river. Brother Stivers was called there to hold a meeting. I visited the brethren there a few nights during the revival. The town and community are stirred. Already 51 have come out to take their stand for Christ.——Delta and Paonia will probably call Brother Haston, formerly of Galveston, Tex., to labor with them.——Carbondale is planning for a meeting in the near future. Carbondale and Meeker are in need of a minister.——Grand Junction is steadily growing; 42 have been added to the church since December. The different departments are in good working order. We are planning for an evangelistic campaign to begin the first Lord's day in November, with Brother Stivers as evangelist.——There are opportunities for organizing several new churches on the western slope.—Frederic Grimes, Grand Junction, Col.

What They Are Doing.

Disciples who contribute their money to missions have a right to know what results are coming from it. I give a list of items wrought out by my humble efforts under the Home Board in the southland for the two years, April 1, 1904, to April 1, 1906:

Places visited with preaching, 58; meetings of a week or more held, 27; sermons and Bible addresses, 1,119; baptisms, 301; other additions, 221; total accessions, 522; churches organized, 4; Sunday-schools organized, 3; raised for local work, $5,290; raised for home missions, $10,000; received on the field, $1,742.58; total raised on field, $17,032.58; expenses for two years, $304.40; supplement from A. C. M. S., $1,761.82.

Note: 1. Five hundred and twenty-two additions cost the Home Board $1,761.82, an average of $3.37 each, in this conservative territory.

2. Raised, directly and personally, $17,032.58 at a cost to the Home board of $1,761.82, which is about 10 per cent. As a cold business proposition, therefore, to say nothing of other good, this is a paying work to put money into.

3. Total expenses for two years, $304.40! Does that look as if all our workers want is to get their heads into the home mission crib?

I am by no means ashamed of this report, if one knows the field, its hindrances and obstacles. Others of the Home Board's nearly 400 evangelists and workers can perhaps far excel this report, but even if this is an average it seems to me that those who are able, and we are all able to the extent of our ability, by which I mean we are all able, should go down and lift at least $200,000 for home missions next Lord's day. As I am not longer connected with the board, I can urge a great offering for American missions.—O. P. Spiegel, Box 66, Birmingham, Ala.

Twenty-one Sermons and Addresses in the Author's best vein

HEAR WHAT A FEW SAY:

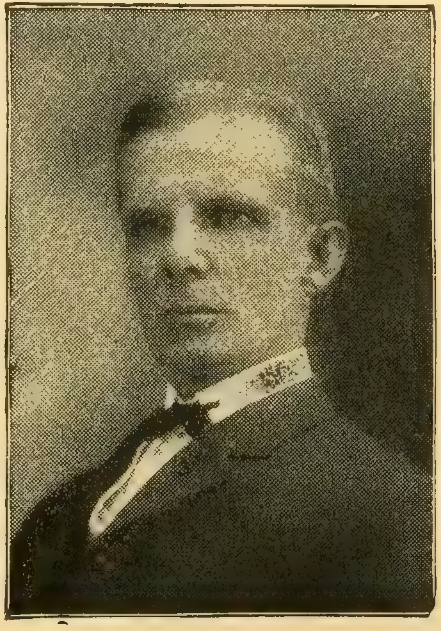
Dean W. J. Lhamon, of the Bible College of Missouri, Columbia, Mo., says: "This volume is of such a high order, so vigorous and inspiring and Christological, that it may well be studied as a homiletical masterpiece, and as indicative of the trend of best pulpit work among the Disciples of Christ."

The Christian Observer says: "Mr. Powell is pastor of the First Christian Church of Louisville, Ky., and in the 20 sermons in this volume he gives valuable and attractive food for religious thought. While in some places he presents the peculiar views of his denomination, he deals, for the most part, with the Gospel in its gracious truth and adaptation to the needs of human hearts."

F. M. Green, Akron, O., says: "All of the sermons bear the marks of thought, and all of them are felicitous in expression. They are strong enough to give pleasure to study, simple enough to be easily understood and palatable enough for the most of religious appetites. Such sermons can not fail to do good to the real lover of earnest, honest and faithful teaching."



E. L. POWELL,
Author of Victory of Faith.

The Louisville Courier-Journal says: "'The Victory of Faith' has 20 sermons and addresses, covering almost every phase of religious thought and life, each treated in Dr. Powell's own inimitable way."

The Louisville Evening Post says: "These sermons and addresses are those of an active thinker and worker and, together, form a real help to the practice of Christian doctrine. Many are printed as delivered, and have, therefore, the style and manner of the author as he speaks from his pulpit. The dominant note is that of triumphant Christianity making its way through the doubt and darkness of the world and of the individual. The volume is well named—the whole subject is the victory of Christian faith."

Another says: "These are masterly addresses by one of our most gifted and successful preachers who is held in high esteem throughout the brotherhood."

Our New Church at Jacksonville, Ill.

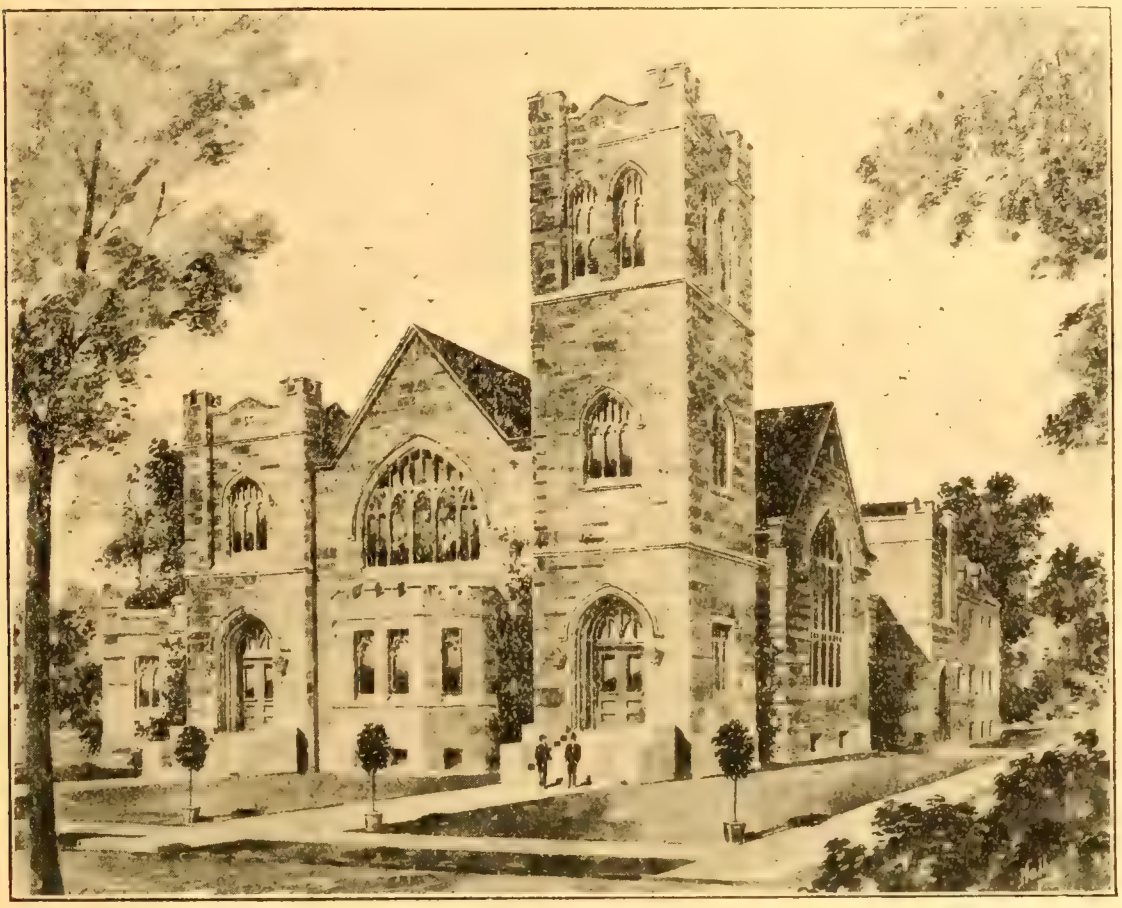
The Christian church at Jacksonville, Ill., was organized in October, 1832, with 72 charter members. Previous to the organization there had been preaching by several of our pioneers. The organization took place in the old court house in the square, where meetings had been held.

The first church owned by the congregation was built on North Main street. For some time the pulpit was supplied by volunteer preachers. The first regular pastor was Elder Trimble—then Josephus Hewett, Jeremiah P. Lancaster, Dr. Horatio P. Gatchell, A. J. Kane, Jonathan Atkinson, Bryson Pyatt, Walter Scott Russell, Dr. J. W. Cox, Enos Campbell, John W. Allen, J. M. Williams, L. W. Welsh, Alfred N. Gilbert, S. B. Moore, Geo. L. Snively, and the present pastor, Russell F. Thrapp.



Central Christian Church, Jacksonville, Illinois.

Among the most notable and effective preachers and evangelists who have occupied the pulpit are Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, John T. Jones, D. Pat Henderson, W. W. Happy, Walter P. Bowles, Dr. John Ross, Dr. Robert Foster, Samuel and John I. Rodgers, Jacob Creath, Sr. and Jr., Alexander Procter, John O'Kane, Samuel S. Church, William M. Brown, Benj. H. Smith, Benjamin Franklin, O. A. Burgess, Dr. S. E. Pearie, Dr. B. F. Perkey, Patrick H. Murphy, Dr. B. F. Hall, Harrison W. Osborne, William M. Davenport, John Lindsay and other pioneers of the earlier days of the church's history, and later Knowles Shaw, D. R. Lucas, Isaac Errett, John S. and Zack Sweeney, Dr. James M. and Buford Allen, J. L. Taylor, B. B. and J. Z. Tyler, S. M. Conner, B. W. Johnson, Virgil and E. G. Rice, Dr. N. S. Bastian, Dr. W. F. Black. S. M. Martin, J. H. Gilliland and Chas. Reign Scoville.

Some time after Enos Campbell became pastor the North Main street house was sold and the edifice lately occupied was erected, which was dedicated Sunday, July 4, 1869. In 1887, during the pastorate of A. N. Gilbert, the building was enlarged and improved.

With increasing membership, a more commodious and better equipped church home has been imperative for a long time. At a large meeting of the membership held in the church in the spring of 1904, by a vote that was unanimous, the congregation decided to sell the old property on East State street and erect a commodious building on the corner of College avenue and Church street. The lot was purchased and subscriptions taken during the summer to the amount of thirty thousand dollars. Mr. S. R. Badgely, of Cleveland, Ohio, was selected as architect, and the contract was let in January, 1905, to Arbogast & Ballard, of Normal, for $40,050. The work of building began about the first of March; the corner stone was laid May 25, in the presence of a large concourse of people. This magnificent structure is modern in all of its appointments, and with its better facilities will afford an opportunity to do the work naturally expected of the Jacksonville church, which simply could not be done in our old quarters. The location is one of the most beautiful in the city, and is in the center of the church membership. One of the causes which led to the new church was the overflowing Bible school. Everything in this line was absolutely inadequate. The last Sunday the attendance was 780 and the collection over $90. The average attendance during the last eight Sundays was 499, and the average collection $58.58, with a total of $468.68. This is excluding the big day, last Sunday. C. L. DePew is the superintendent, and he is assisted by 33 teachers and an able corps of assistants. The other inside organizations of the church are the Men's League, the Pulpit Circle, the Y. P. S. C. E., a large Junior Endeavor and three aid societies.

The church supports H. P. Shaw and wife in China, a south side mission, and a colored church. Its affairs are looked after by a board of officers, composed of seven elders and twenty deacons, and of this J. B. Wharton is the chairman. Guy Williamson is the assistant pastor, Charles L. Hayden, clerk, and Geo. W. Brady, treasurer, with John R. Loar chairman of the building committee. The ather members of the building committee are A. G. Burr, secretary and treasurer; Russell Thrapp, D. Reese Browning, Geo. W. Brady, C. Riggs Taylor, C. L. DePew, R. A. Mutch and Wm. L. Fay. Herbert J. Henderson is chairman of deacons, and Charles L. Mathis, chairman of the finance comittee.

Tallula, Ill., is the birthplace of the present pastor, Russell F. Thrapp. He is a great general and marshaller of forces, and the new edifice just dedicated is due largely to his indomitable will and energy. He has held pastorates at Aalanta, Gibson City and Pittsfield, is a graduate of Eureka College and popular in the church. During the last month in the old church between 50 and 60 have been added to the church.

The Dedication.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

It is done. Rains and Thrapp did it. They did it right. April 29 will ever be a memorable day to the Disciples at Jacksonville, for on that day this great church dedicated free from debt its magnificent sanctuary. There were four great services. First, the Bible school at 8:45; great attendance; almost 1,700; collection, $261.71, making a total during April of $551.51. Bro. F. M. Rains had to stop the flood of donations at the morning service in order to close in season. The afternoon session was a communion and fellowship service, presided over by Samuel B. Moore, of St. Louis, and Evangelist W. W. Wharton. It, too, was a great service. At its close a large number were baptized in the beautiful new baptistry. The evening service was given over to dedication rites and was enthusiastic in every respect. At its close about 20 received baptism. C. A. Burton presided during part of this service. During the day $25,000 were raised and the church was dedicated free from debt. There was some outside assistance. The great membership did it. Brother Rains certainly was here, Brother Thrapp did always the right thing at the right place, but it is primarily and pre-eminently a victory of the simple Gospel and the growing power of the carpenter's Son, who rebuilt the temple in three days.

The waiting days are over and the working hours have come. We now have the largest and finest structure in the city. There were many pleasant features of the day. Suffice it to say that it was a great day.

Three Wonderful Books!

I announce to all preachers and scholars that I have ready for delivery three of the most remarkable books of modern times. The first is called "The Blue and The Gray," written in argumentative verse, to give the true cause of the war, to show the negro is under a curse, and that giving him the franchise was an infringement of the Bible. The other two books are "Sermons" written to show that original Christianity is the only true religion. To trace God's church from Jerusalem to the present day. To explain and identify all the "beasts" and "harlots" of the Rev. of John. To show that life is the result of organism and begins with a birth in nature and in grace. Many other difficult subjects explained. These books are called: "Diamonds of truth from beginning to end." The author is aware they will do a world of good and is selling the three for $1. No preacher, no scholar, in fact no one, should fail to send for these three books. Address J. A. Cunningham, Tupelo, Miss. References to churches given when wanted.

A FIERCE DEMONIAC HEALED.—Mark 5:1-20.

Memory verse, 15.

Golden Text.—Go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee.—Mark 5:19.

The cases of demoniac possession recorded in the New Testament and the accounts of the cures wrought upon those so afflicted have afforded ground for much discussion. It appears that the phenomena which are classed under the head of demoniacal possession were of frequent occurrence in New Testament times. One was likely at any time to encounter a person "possessed of a demon," and often there were many of them in one small town. But in all the records of our Lord's healing ministry we never hear of his healing an insane person nor is any case of insanity mentioned. This circumstance, together with the fact that persons whose malady is described as demoniacal possession acted very much like insane persons, and in view of the tendency of that age to ascribe all uncanny and unaccountable phenomena to the agency of demons or angels, has suggested that the persons who were said to be possessed by demons were simply insane or in some cases epileptic. Whatever may have been the cause of the affliction it was no part of the business of the writers of the Gospels to undertake a scientific diagnosis or to overthrow the popular opinion as to the cause of it. They used the terms which their contemporaries would understand, and in so doing they doubtless expressed their own view of the nature of the disease.

The record of this incident contains several details which may serve as suggestive texts for spiritual teaching.

"What have I to do with thee?" cried the evil spirit. Every spirit of evil is in hostility to Jesus and his followers. There is no relation between them except of hostility, and when the power of evil is getting the worst of the battle it generally raises the point that religion has no right to molest it. The saloon considers the church a meddler when it opposes its business. Every attempt to make the teaching of Jesus effective in social, political or business life disturbs some vested interest which straightway cries, "What have I to do with thee?"

"Clothed and in his right mind," was the condition of this dangerous maniac after the Master had dismissed his troubling demons. He had returned to his normal condition. Jesus himself was most eminently sane and normal, and his influence has ever been in the direction of bringing men to their proper and normal selves. Religion is not an excrescence upon life or a departure from the natural course of life; it is a return to the sane and natural and complete view of life.

"They began to beseech him to depart." Here spoke the vested interests again. The owners of the hogs and, by sympathy, the other property owners and men of substance considered Jesus a menace to the community. Any one who values men above things and makes that valuation the basis for fearless action always comes into collision with that cold and bloodless selfishness, that spirit of mammon and greed, which often entrenches itself behind a pretense of great respectability. But it remains true that a man is of more value than a sheep, and that one who can free men of their evil obsessions even at the cost of some of their possessions has done the world a great service.

But the man who had been cured "besought him [Jesus] that he might be with him." No wonder he wished to be with him. Perhaps he feared the return of the devils. The way to resist evil is to stay within the reach of good influences. And, besides, what greater joy could there be, for one who had known the torments of that racking mania, than to abide in the presence of one from whom flowed health and peace and sweet sanity like a river?

But Jesus told him to "go to thy house and to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee." A great missionary text. No one can be a missionary who has not experienced the Lord's mercy and does not feel that he has a great message to his own friends concerning the great things that the Lord hath done for him. And one who does feel so can not fail to be a missionary, whether at home or abroad.

WHY I LOVE THE BIBLE.—Ps. 119:97.

"How precious is the Book Divine,
By inspiration given!
Bright as a lamp its precepts shine,
To guide our souls to heaven.

"It sweetly cheers our drooping hearts
In this dark vale of tears;
Life, light and joy it still imparts,
And quells our rising fears.

"This lamp through all the tedious night
Of life shall guide our way,
Till we behold the clearer light
Of an eternal day."

The Bible: Gives the best account of world building (Gen. 1; 2:1-3); tells of original innocency (Gen. 2:4-24); contains the fundamental laws of civilization (Ex. 20:1-17); foretells the Savior (Is. 53); has the beginnings of church history (Acts 2:1-41); gives a vision of the home immortal (Rev. 7:11-17).

It is natural to love the Bible because of its sacred associations. It was our fathers' counsel, our mothers drank joy from its pages, the first thrilling stories of our childhood related to its heroes and angels, the man of God drew consolation from its wells when our loved ones were taken, in it prophets and apostles speak, and Jesus lives and loves. Surely it is loved by all who have appreciation of these sanctities of life and death.

All the equity there is in law and all the justice found in its administration, the sanctity that makes oaths effective in discovering truth in controversy and restraining tyrannous propensities in rulers, the inspiration legislators have to protect the natural rights of the lowly, and that comes to governors to be true shepherds to their people rather than spoilers, may be fairly attributed to the Bible. It is entitled to our love for the civic righteousness it inculcates, and the protection it is to our homes and firesides.

The Bible is a lamp to our feet and a light to our pathway. The platitudes of Confucius, the glimmerings of Indian Vedas or the soulless philosophy of the Areopagus would be the world's brightest lights had not this great sun of literature been kindled. To what extent they can illumine the moral universe may be determined by contemplating the civilizations of China, India and the Orient in comparison with those obtaining in Bible lands. Let us love the Bible, then, for the light it gives to the world.

It might be well to ask ourselves in all seriousness whether we really do love the Bible. There are touchstones by which we may definitely determine whether our love is real or only an illusion. Among them are the queries—Do I read it with pleasure and frequency? Do I obey its precepts? Do I seek to interest others in its sacred lore? Is it continually in my thoughts as something beloved? Am I preparing myself for life in an endless world where its principles are the only law and its heaven our inheritance forever?

One ought to have respect, at least, for the bridge that bears him across the chasm separating him from home. The Bible has bridged full many a precipice for us nothing else could have spanned. It brought us over the chaos from abandoned Eden to Moses; and above all the apostasies from Sinai to the cross; and bears us now from our own acceptance of Jesus safely to heaven's gate, if we will but walk in its good way. Let us permit no skepticism or philosophy falsely so called to undermine its pillars or impair in any way its structure, lest we or loved ones coming after us by the precipice of the grave be separated from the home of the soul as the twilight is deepening into night, and with no means of crossing over.

Most of the value of Christ's miracles of healing is lost unless from them we learn of his willingness to help us overthrow all of satan's tyranny over us.

Bible miracles were performed regardless of the station of their subjects. Naaman wished to be regarded as a great man who happened to be a leper, but the prophet healed him as a leper who happened to be a great man.

Leprosy was the ancient type of sin. It separated its victim from home, as sin does us from heaven: it was, like sin, incurable by all save the Great Physician. The joy of those Jesus restored to their families and the temple should only typify the delight we experience when delivered from the bondage of sin.

Jesus' coming was not premature. The spirit of evil was so ascendent that demons actually ventured from the underworld and found sanctuary within the souls of men. We need no other commentary on the awful apostasy of even Israel. His deliverance of these victims shows that he can certainly save to the uttermost all of us who will put our trust in him. Let us pray that the hand of omnipotent love may keep back these demoniacal invaders who would fain despoil us as well as those of old.

How profound the gratitude of those whose eyes Jesus opened to visions of sea and sky, of earth and astronomy, of sacred temple and the holier love light glowing in a mother's face. Could any devotion to him by those thus blessed be called extravaganza! But to us he grants spiritual vision of the way of escape from our sins, of the highway to heaven, of the discipline unto exalted privileges in the church militant and triumphant, and of the glory of the Father shining in the face of Christ Jesus. Surely normal souls can account no sacrifice to him too great, no devotion too complete, no consecration too entire.

There were some to whose hearing Jesus applied healing touch who, perhaps, for the first time heard the voice of priest and parent, the prattle of their own children and the chanted psalm. How their hearts must have thrilled with gratitude and joy as they looked upon him. We cannot think they would have permitted blasphemy of his name to go unchallenged, or listened to overtures unto rebellion against him. Should not even greater loyalty to him characterize us who have been permitted to hear his gracious words of life, the assurance of forgiveness and acceptance by the Father, and the promises of all the powers of an endless life?

It must at least have sounded hyperbolic to the witnesses of the marvelous miracles of Jesus, when he said, "And greater works than these shall ye do." Read in the light of its fulfillment the prediction meant his disciples should perform greater numbers of such works. In Christian hospitals all around the world modern surgery is winning victories over ophthalmic and auricular foes of man's happiness such as made the Savior's progresses along the avenues of human suffering so sensational in days agone. These benevolent triumphs also should redound to the glory of God, for only where his Son is preached are they celebrated.

DISFIGURED FOR LIFE

Is the Despairing Cry of Thousands Afflicted with Unsightly Skin Humors.

Do you realize what this disfiguration means to sensitive people? It means isolation, seclusion. It is a bar to social and business success. Do you wonder that despair seizes upon these sufferers when doctors fail, standard remedies fail, and nostrums prove worse than useless? Blood and skin humors are most obstinate to cure or even relieve. It is an easy matter to claim to cure them, but quite another to do so. The Cuticura Remedies (consisting of Cuticura Soap to cleanse the skin, and Cuticura Ointment to heal the skin, and Cuticura Resolvent Pills to purify the blood) have earned the right to be called Skin Cures, because for years they have met with most remarkable success.

The "Current Agitation."

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I can not longer resist the desire to tell you how much I admire the "safe and sane" policy of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST relative to the "current agitation" now affecting certain of the brethren.

I trust that the brotherhood will not be buried beneath the ashes belched forth from the hill now in a state of volcanic eruption. These disturbances are periodical, but not regular. Latest reports indicate no cessation of the flow of lava. Contrary winds are still carrying the sulphurous gas in all directions. St. Louis is in great danger of asphyxiation!

I have talked with a number of our ministers in this part of the state, and I have yet to find the first endorsement of the opposition policy. They are all for federation.

Your work on the Holy Spirit has been much help to me; in fact it is the most helpful work I have read. I read it once; studied it carefully once; then re-read it.

Ravenna, O. M. E. CHATLEY.

Who Are for Federation?

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I, with a few thousand other honest men who are trying to be used of God for the salvation of souls and the edification of the saints, refuse to be enrolled under any of these several heads as set forth so unkindly and uncharitably by one of your contemporaries. This is not the spirit of Christ or federation.

Paul was a federationist and neither does he come under any of these heads; and yet he did that which few modern federationists would do (Acts 16, first five verses); and yet he did not hesitate to plant Christian churches in the very shadow of the Roman temple and Jewish synagogue. I notice also that down at Ephesus Aquila and Priscilla took a Baptist preacher into their home and worked with him in a true Christian spirit, and after getting better acquainted good came of it, and Apollos became just a plain Christian preacher. They had learned of the great apostle Paul, who said: "I am made all things to all men that I might by all means save some" (1 Cor. 9:19-23).

It has been said you can stop the invasion of an army, but not the invasion of an idea. I firmly believe that this federation movement is of God, and can not be overthrown, and after the fog and smoke of contention has cleared away and we see clearly while it is yet in the morning of the twentieth century, we will behold the children of God have made the greatest and most noble move ever made toward the answer of the prayer of the Son of God for the union of his followers.

Seymour, Wis. M. L. COTTRELL.

Another Shorter Catechism.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

1. Would federation prevent us from building churches in towns where we have none, if there were strong denominational churches already established? If so, should we co-operate with them?

2. Would the churches thus federated be empowered to meet by representation and pass resolutions (for they would be in the majority) to be observed by the verious churches? If so, what would our people do if resolutions were passed which we consider contrary to the New Testament plea? Would we be obliged to abide by the majority, or withdraw, in the objective, to resume our present independency?

3. Would the churches ever be brought together in a general conference to freely and brotherly discuss the peculiarities of the different pleas?

I believe a plain answer to these questions will open up much misunderstanding of the object of church federation. May the public look for an answer from your highly esteemed journal?

Fredonia, Kan. H. H. AMBROSE.

[1. No, not unless the reasons presented for not doing so should be such as to convince us that the step would be unwise. In that event efforts would be directed to another and more needy and promising field. Neither churches nor individuals are asked to do anything which they can not conscientiously do.

2. Why should we assume that we would be in a minority and that all the other churches would be combined against us? We do not believe there is any ground for that idea. It would not be in the province of any local federation, as it is not in the province of the national council, to pass any resolution concerning any doctrine or practice in the church, and so they would not interfere with our "New Testament Plea." Federation looks to practical work along the lines upon which all agree.

3. This could be done if the churches desired so to do, but it would be incidental and generally informal, but it would be none the less effective for this reason. As a rule, it is better to discuss the things upon which we agree rather than things on which we differ. The things emphasized in the New York Conference were the Lordship of Christ, the power of the Gospel, the need of unity, and the great things which a united church could accomplish. These are themes that make us realize our oneness in spite of our differences, and at the same time help to lessen these differences. We doubt not, however, that when we all come to know and love each other, we will often sit down together to ask how we can remove our differences and so come into still closer union. This is the sort of atmosphere in which to settle differences.—EDITOR.]

As Seen From the Dome.

Here in 54 came the little hump-backed, near-sighted Jew, with his "Andres Athenaioi kata panta 'os deisiddaimonesterous humas theorow." The view from this rock is the most impressive I ever saw.

Not far from Paul's pulpit is the Bema of Demosthenes. The Hill of the Pnyx is a great terrace or platform and is supposed to be the place where the Athenians held their assemblies, and here the great orators and spellbinders swayed the people; and not far from this are some ancient doorways leading to rock-cut chambers, known as "the prison of Socrates." Many of these things are purely mythical.

The Stadium is a place of great interest. A wealthy Greek gave the city $1,000,000 to build it. It is of pure white marble and seats 60,000. Such a racecourse is found nowhere else on earth. Here they are seeking to revive the Olympic games, and our Americans did their country honor here in recent time. The old theater of Bacchus, which accommodated 30,000, is an interesting ruin at the base of the Acropolis. The temple of Jupiter has 16 remaining columns. It originally possessed more than 100, arranged in double rows of 20 each on the north and south sides, and triple rows of eight each at the ends. Its dimensions, 353x134 feet, are exceeded only by the temple of Diana at Ephesus. Aristotle called this "a work of despotic grandeur." The massive and lofty pillars that are left are wonderful in themselves. Altogether, the temple of Theseus is the best preserved of these old fanes. The massive solidity of construction, vigorous vitality of sculptures, golden yellow of its weather-stained Pentelic marble, which has withstood 2,000 years of storms and suns, fill you with admiration.

One of the most interesting places we visited was an old Athenian cemetery outside the Dipylon. It is like the burying places outside of Rome and Pompeii. This street of tombs is the only one in Greece, and the monuments' inscriptions are very remarkable and beautiful. They are easily discernible. There are family groups and domestic scenes. Similar ones we saw in the museum, which is rich beyond measure in its collections, many of them being the discoveries of Dr. Schliemann.

But all of Athens is not its past. Modern Athens is a splendid city of 180,000, and including its suburbs, 250,000. It was a miserable fishing village 50 years ago, and in 1870 had but 45,000 people. It is now a thriving city, and one sees improvements going forward on every hand. It has a great university, with four faculties and 2,853 students. In this little kingdom of 25,000 square miles, 4,000 less than Scotland and 1,000 more than West Virginia, there are 2,000 elementary schools for boys and 300 for girls. In proportion to its wealth Greece exceeds the United States in liberality toward education. Athens is a notable resort for writers, artists, sculptors, architects and archeologists, and one sees more evidences of culture and fewer beggars than in any city we have visited. We called on Dr. Kalapothakes, pastor of the Greek Evangelical church. He has been here 50 years, and they have five churches. During that time they have distributed 250,000 copies of the Scriptures which the people have purchased. The national church is the Greek, which is inimical to Protestant missions. There is no other Protestant work except an English church, attended by the embassy, which also conducts a school. King George is a Lutheran, son of Christian of Denmark, and his wife, a Russian princess, but the king does not work at his Protestantism. The queen is a benevolent woman. We saw in the streets as we were leaving a funeral procession. The undertaker walked in front, holding the top of the coffin before him, then followed a cross bearer, and then a priest, and then the body of a woman, the face and form exposed to view, borne by five body-bearers, and then the men and women walking, and behind these the empty carriages. All uncovered as they passed.

Elderburg Association.

flicted by the impecunious college student. Buster Brown—to quote once more from the comic section—is of the opinion that we generally get what is coming to us. The case of this witness seems to illustrate the truth of the saying. The bargain-counter habit is bad, in business and in religion. The article you get at the bargain-counter, however small the price, is seldom worth the money. A congregation that goes to the ten-cent store for a pastor travels there by the road that leads to spiritual impoverishment; the preacher who places himself on the bargain-counter, making his cheapness a chief inducement in his call, wrongs himself, the cause and the church which calls him; and the transaction, as to both parties, sinks to the level of a dicker. Here and there, undoubtedly, a preacher is to be found who is rapacious, demanding too much for his services. Such a man may hurt the cause by the too manifest commercialism of his attitude toward his work, but he can never be quite so fatal as the man who secures a pastorate by appealing to the niggardliness of the people. The average congregation does not pay too much but too little; and unfortunately the average congregation is rather too willing to make that little less; the man who helps it to economize by offering to do poorer work for less money is not its friend but its enemy. The too high-priced man has usually some valuable commodity to market; has some wit or worth, action or utterance or power of words to stir men's hearts to some good purpose. Not so with the cheap-John-the bargain-counter specimen of Gospel sharp. When Bro. S. M. A. went to Kinderville the people paid him less than they paid his predecessor. They were not, I think, less able to pay; but they were willing to accept inferior work if they could get it for less money. The witness consented to do the inferior work and accepted the reduced salary. When they finally discovered that they could economize still further by taking a non-resident pastor, Bro. S. M. A. got what was coming to him.

"As to student preachers. If there is anybody who has a warm corner in my heart it is the poor young man who is trying to educate himself. If that same young man wishes to serve the Master by preaching the Gospel my regard for him is increased. Long may it be possible for him to do good work for the Lord as a student preacher. There are always churches that can not have resident pastors, and I can discover no reason why a bright young student may not fill their pulpits quite as well as the average man available for that kind of work. What I have said about the bargain-counter will apply to the student as well as to any one else. If he is unfit for a given place he ought not to have it at all; the college faculty should see to that, for his sake and their own. If he is fit let him not cheapen himself and the cause by 'cutting prices to get a job.' A self-respecting student will not do that, and a self-respecting college faculty will not allow that sort of thing in a student who does not respect himself.

"In the case of this witness I am bound to say that while the sewing-machine business has undoubtedly acquired a good salesman, I do not think the churches have lost a great preacher."

Out of Bondage.

the very fountains of life—palsying their faith in the Word of God, withering their Christian sympathies, and arraying them in delirious strife against each other. It is, too, a fearfully stubborn demon. Mighty men of God, before whom all other demons fled, have sought in vain to exorcise it, and have come back with despairing hearts, crying, 'Master, why could not we cast him out?' Even when the glorious Lord undertakes the tremendous task, the possessed is thrown into terrible convulsions, and many would rather propitiate the demon than endure the agonies of the exorcism."

Passing over his definition of a sect, as taught in the Scriptures, he passes to the discussion of Protestant parties, and inquires: "Are these sects in the Scriptural sense of that term? Unquestionably, they are sects, viewed in the Romeward bearing and connection of their history; for they came out from Rome, and separated themselves, or were separated, from that communion. To the Roman Catholic church, then, they are sects; and such of them as have come away from other Protestant bodies, are sects as they stand related to those from whom they came out. But are they sects in the Christward bearings of their history? It will be well for many, who are constantly denouncing 'the sects' as the daughters of the 'mother of harlots,' to pause and consider this question. They acknowledge themselves to be, in a certain sense, sects; but that there is a very marked and fundamental distinction between the sects denounced in the Scriptures and these Protestant parties, must be conceded by every intelligent reader of history. Those broke away from the Church of Christ—these from the Church of Rome; those went away from the truth—these are coming back to it; those turned their backs to the authority of Christ, and set their faces to falsehood and delusion—these have turned their backs to the pope, and set their faces to the Word of God and the cross of Christ; the leaders of those were men of corrupt and ambitious minds, with whom gain and power were godliness—the leaders of these were men that 'feared God, and wrought righteousness,' and 'counted all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus.' How is it possible to place the latter in the same category with the former, unless apostasy and reformation mean the same thing? To our mind there is grave injustice in this estimate of the great Protestant parties. Granting that Rome is the 'mother of harlots,' by what peculiar logic is it made to appear that these are her offspring? Is it because they came out from her? Then were the ancient sects the children of the church of God, and this divine institution must be recognized as the mother of sects! . . . Was literal Babylon the mother of the Jews that returned to Jerusalem? No more is spiritual Babylon the mother of the Protestant communities. No! no! People who leave the pope for Christ, and the commandments and traditions of men for the Word of God, and the mummeries of a debasing superstition for the light of truth and the simplicity of a spiritual worship and who bravely suffer, even to death, for the simplicity of Jesus, have won, at the very least, a right to be spared this sort of slander, especially at the hands of those who profess supreme devotion to the Word of God, and who are indebted to these very Protestants for all the advances they have been enabled to make in spiritual knowledge and enjoyment. If these denominations are but an adulterous brood from the 'mother of harlots,' what are the advocates of primitive Christianity? From whom did they come?

"We are aware of all that can be truly said of the errors and sins of Protestantism. We have no desire to hide its errors, or apologize for its corruptions, but we insist that through it all God had a people among those who came out of Babylon. That they have failed to restore Jerusalem is too evident. That a great work of reformation is yet to be accomplished, we fully believe; but those who went before us have prepared the way for it, and let not the Ezras and Nehemiahs, who now seek to complete the work, while repudiating the errors and failures of their predecessors, and crying aloud for reformation, be guilty of the folly and injustice of repudiating the steps taken, under divine leadings, to prepare the way for them. Sanballats and Tobiahs are still seeking to stay the work of God, and let them be met manfully, and overthrown. [Pause for a moment on that word manfully.] But the whole Protestant world are not Sanballats and Tobiahs. God has a people among them. . . . let us not forget, nor fail to appreciate, the work of those who have gone before us."

A Thought.

BY EDITH M. BOSTAPH.

When friends have departed this life how we haste
With sweet flowers to strew o'er their bier;
But O! 'twould be better, methinks, if those flowers
We would strew round their pathway while here.

Each life hath its trials of sorrow and care,
A rose oft might chase them away;
Or some of the praise we then amply bestow
Often lessen them, e'en for a day.

Kind acts are the sweetest of flowers that grow
In the soil of the heart full of love;
They never will fade, but transplanted will live,
And bear fruit in that garden above.

Then strew lovely blossoms of kindness along
At the feet over-burdened with care,
And when to those pearly-white gates you will come,
They will greet you with flowers over there.

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying, tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half-brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. Rhoda has a visit from a mysterious man named Boggs, who claims to have been sent by Mrs. Revore's half-brother to find out whether the children know anything of a bronze vase. After much delay it is decided to send Rhoda to an orphan home, and Raymund to Mr. Omer's farm.]

PART II.

CHAPTER III.

"Are you Raymund Revore?" asked Nelsie Loraine, as she leaned upon the ornamental iron fence, and looked over at the half-prostrate form under the cottonwood tree.

The youth looked up definitely from his school book. The beautiful face wore a friendly look, and he answered cheerfully that he was Raymund.

"I am Nelsie Loraine Omer," said the girl. "Everybody knows me, though, I guess. My father owns this farm and other farms, too. They always call me Nelsie Loraine. My father's name is Nelson; Loraine was somebody in a book of poems. That is why I was named Nelsie Loraine." She gave Raymund a bright, friendly smile and asked, "What are you reading?"

"This is my algebra," said Raymund, answering her smile and beginning to be very glad that at last his employer's daughter had decided to notice his presence on the farm.

"I thought it looked tiresome," said Nelsie Loraine, "and I guessed it was some kind of mathematics. Do you like it?"

"In one way I like it," said Raymund. "I can't say that it is interesting, but every page I get over carries me just that far toward an education."

"Do you want to be educated? What for?"

Raymund considered this question a moment and then answered, "I've noticed your father's horses, how fine they are, and how well kept. He wouldn't keep a carriage horse that was shaggy and hairy and splattered up with mud. He would either have it curried and rubbed or he would get rid of it."

"I guess he would!" cried Nelsie Loraine. "My father has the best horses in the country. He has anything he wants, and he is proud of his horses."

"I should think so!" said Raymund. "There is such a difference in horses. It is wonderful what a difference currying and rubbing and care will make. Just that way with people. You can't take a man and curry him and shut him up in a stable, but you can educate him—that's what makes the difference between men."

Nelsie Loraine laughed light-heartedly, then remarked: "It isn't all in currying and rubbing down, though. Some horses might be kept in a gold stable with a marble floor and if it was a common, raw-boned nag, it would stay a nag."

"That is true," said Raymund, smiling, "but as I am not a raw-boned nag, perhaps the gold stable and marble floor will work wonders with me."

"I don't think education is much," observed Nelsie Loraine. "My father isn't very highly educated, and look how rich he is! Next year I'm going to a boarding school. I don't mind it much, though; I expect I'll have lots of fun. I won't have to study much. I hate studying. It seems so foolish, when you have everything you want, anyhow. Of course it's different with you. Maybe it will help you get a good position some day. I wouldn't always want to be a farmhand, if I were you."

"I mean to be something more than that," returned Raymund, nodding. "I'll never be just a hand, whatever I'm in. If I'm to stay on a farm I'll not be a farmhand, as you'll see if you watch; I'll be a farmhead!"

The girl laughed. "I hope you will be," she said. "But it will be mighty hard for you to get hold of much money, and money is what counts in anything. Papa says it's that way even in the church. He belongs, but he doesn't care very much about it. He hardly ever goes. But if they ever want to do anything, they ask his opinion, you had better believe! He says you may be so good that you pretty near die of it, but if you haven't money, people don't care much for your opinion. Papa says it doesn't pay to be good, it is just a sort of luxury."

"I wouldn't want to be good because I thought it paid in dollars and cents," said Raymund; "and if it is a luxury it's one that a poor man can enjoy just as much as a rich man, so you have no advantage over me there, Nelsie Loraine!" he laughed.

The girl looked at him thoughtfully. "I think it a pity," she said abruptly, "that I didn't get to know you sooner. I didn't think when I saw you toddling around with that ridiculous baby of Tom's that you were any different from Tom. But you are different, somehow. It must make you mad to have to care for that child. I'm going to ask papa to send it to a place of some kind. and keep it till it is older—like an orphan home, for instance." She stopped abruptly, as she dimly remembered something had been said about some relative of Raymund's being sent to some sort of a charity institution.

"Oh, I do hope you won't ask your father to do that!" cried Raymund. "It is so much better for Baby to stay with its father."

"Well," said Nelsie Loraine, much disappointed, "I thought maybe being a nurse wasn't what you liked. I don't call that currying and brushing a person's mind."

Raymund returned eagerly, "If you could see Tom, when he comes home from work, take Baby in his arms and sit down and talk to him and ride him on his knee, and laugh, and all that, you wouldn't want to send away the only comfort he has. That's what pays Tom for working so hard and resting so little; it is what he looks forward to from morning to night. Yesterday Fred called me out of the barn to peep through the window of our house, and inside, there was Tom on his hands and knees hopping about as stiff as a jumping jack and Baby straddled on his back laughing so he could hardly hold on. Fred said to me that if he had something like that to come home to at night he wouldn't mind the sweat and ache and dead feeling in his legs; but he said all his work was just to keep himself fed and clothed, because, not being very strong, he couldn't get much wages. He said it often seemed that just to keep himself alive didn't seem worth the struggle. And he would have married, long ago, if he had felt that he could support a wife. Fred said that if he envied any man on earth a thing in the world, and he didn't think he did, it was that baby of Tom's. That's how Fred felt about it. And that's the way Tom feels. And so do I."

There was a little silence, then Nelsie Loraine said, "You think of the strangest things! Mamma has always said it was such a pity that Baby was ever born. Tom is so poor, and it is so in the way!"

"He is poor—mighty poor," said Raymund, shaking his head, "but I don't believe your father, with all his farms, could buy that baby from Tom!"

The girl looked at him with that thoughtful gaze from her luminous brown eyes that added a softened beauty to her face. "Do you know," she murmured, "that I never thought much about Tom—that way, I mean—or Fred? Of course, when I wanted the horses hitched up, or something like that, I would call whichever one wasn't too busy. But as to thinking of them as living—I mean like we live—but I don't know just how to tell what I do mean!" She smiled thoughtfully. "But maybe you understand."

"Oh, yes, you mean in their home life," Raymund explained for her.

"I guess I do, though I never thought much about any kind of home. A home is just a house, you know. I'd as soon board, or be at one place as another. Wouldn't you? But I guess you can't feel as I do. Anyway, I guess Tom and Fred—well! They were always just workmen to me, you know—hands."

"But," said Raymund, "there is a time when every workman stops working—that's when he goes home, or wherever he stays. Often it isn't home. But I've been surprised to find that men you wouldn't think of at all as having family ties and homes, when you come to see where they live, why, they are just like other people! They think and feel and talk as if they owned themselves, at least! Do you know Wizzen?"

Nelsie Loraine shook her head.

"Well, you know Tom and Fred. You ought to hear them sometimes, over their pipes, discussing politics, and showing how the president made a mistake, or did just the right thing."

"I suppose," said the girl doubtfully, "that they even have opinions about us!"

"I assure you they have!" cried Raymund, smiling.

"Do you know," remarked Nelsie Loraine, "it never occurred to me that they could have any kind of opinions except just about their work? But that's because I never thought of them at all, I guess. Do you know any Latin?"

"No," Raymund sighed, "I haven't any Latin book. I guess that's why I'm so far over in algebra and history, because I can't spread out over more studies."

"And did you ever study French?"

"No, never!"

"Now, I'll tell you what," said Nelsie Loraine suddenly; "I'm to have a governess this year—she's coming next week. I'll go to boarding school next year, but papa thinks I'm too young to go now—I'm about thirteen. How old are you, Raymund?"

"I will soon be thirteen—at least in about six weeks. My birthday is Christmas Eve."

"Oh, is it?" cried the other. "Then you are only one day older than I am, for Christmas day is my birthday. Wouldn't it be fun if you gave me a party on your birthday over there at the Hands' House, and the next day I'd let you come to my party at our house?"

"Would you come to mine?" asked Raymund. "If you would, I invite you now!"

"And I invite you to mine. That would be lots of fun. But I was going to tell you: Now, how would you like to begin Latin and French when I begin it, under the governess? She could have a certain hour, and you could come up and learn, and Aunt Sophy would take care of the baby for that little time."

Raymund's face glowed. "But would your mother be willing?" he faltered.

"I don't know whether she would or not," said Nelsie Loraine. "But that don't matter. I'll persuade papa. I always do just as I please."

"I should like it so much—Oh, Nelsie Loraine, if I only might!"

"You might and shall!" declared the other, nodding brightly.

"But if your mother objects—"

"I'll fix her," returned Nelsie Loraine, easily.

Advance Society Letters.

The young lady—I feel sure it must be a young lady—who sets up the type for our page made a singular mistake two weeks ago. She took several lines out of Mrs. G. G. James' letter and wedged them among some of my remarks about Felix; as a consequence, I am represented as saying that Drusie sheds her hair on my parlor chairs! Mrs. James, by the way, wrote from Santa Ana, California; I hope the wave of death and desolation did not sweep over her. Here in Arkansas it is difficult to imagine the ruins of San Francisco. You ought to see our fruit trees! all white and red and purple blurs against the sky of blue and gold—and red earth under everything; at least, earth and rock; good deal of rock; but like the old lady in David Copperfield, I seem to be "meandering."

Elsie Dennis, Single Tree, Wisconsin: "I will tell about our branch Advance Society. There are eight of us. There are four girls" (and I can guess how many boys) "and four boys" (just as I thought)! "When we first heard of the Av. S., we thought it would be nice to join and hold some kind of meeting. So we did. We meet twice a month, every other Friday evening. When we meet, we bring our note books, and compare how we have kept the rules. The secretary marks how many weeks each one has kept all five of the rules. Some of us had to begin all over again, several times, because we would forget something When we meet we all recite the quotations we have memorized since the last meeting. The person who keeps the rules best for twelve weeks, becomes president of our society for one quarter, without any election. Our society has been running fourteen weeks, and I am the only one who hasn't forgotten something, so I am the president this quarter The president gets to decide when and where we will have a picnic, or social of some kind. We are going to hold a picnic on May Day. We have a fine time when we meet. Several of us play on the piano, and all of us can sing, or think we can. Do you know 'Under the Shade of the Old Apple Tree'? I'd think that would be a favorite down in Arkansas, where there is so much fruit." (I know it; I hope that "Single Tree" of yours is an apple tree. Be sure and tell us about your picnic, when it nicks.) James Eaton, Hartford, Conn.: "My aunt sent me a CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST about a month ago, telling about the Av. S. I tried to get some of the boys to join, but they didn't seem interested, so I have just joined by myself. I have a cat named Licks. She is named after your Felix. She and I are the Av. S. in this city. See if I have the rules right—every week I read at least five pages of history and thirty lines of poetry, and memorize a quotation. Then I read a Bible verse every day—but generally a chapter—and write down in my note book how much I have done. Is that it?" (That's it.) "For history I am reading Dickens' 'Child History of England,' but it is so much like an interesting story that I always run beyond five pages a week. My poetry is 'Lady of the Lake.' This week I read fifteen pages, so I didn't count the lines; I knew thirty lines were swallowed up in the first page! The Hartford streets are so broad and white and clean, with beautiful shade trees. Now that the leaves are coming out, I enjoy taking my book out in our front yard, and lean my chair against a tree and imagine the great men of the past as they used to walk along these very streets. Some of them are living yet. Licks likes to climb up in the tree over my head."

Matilda Carey, Clarksburg, Mo.: "I am thinking of joining the Advance Society. I am 11 and in the sixth grade. I have a sister 3 years old and another 9. I read 'The Bronze Vase' every week. I was sorry you made Rhoda and Raymund part, but I did not want them to run away. I think this is the best story of all. I like the Advance Society letters, too." M. O. Stewart, Sewal, Ia.: "We love 'The Bronze Vase,' but at our house we don't forget old loves; and the children want the final touches of the 'Woodneys.' We want a whole lot of it in big slices every week. We hope the small Wrens will mount old Bony's back and ride off into oblivion. But how did the temperance plan succeed? What did Mace accomplish? If the world were full of folks like Mace we would feel like shouting. And the blacksmith—what is he doing now? We hope you will not forget to put an extra finish on that story, for it is as good as 'In His Steps' to encourage poor, struggling human beings to do their best. Please write it for the children next year." (That's just what I believe I'll do! I should like to hear from the gentleman of Blooming Grove, Texas. Does he think he could stand another "Week with the Woodneys"? We might call it a "Year with the Woodneys," in deference to him. By the way, have you read "The Other Wise Man," by Van Dyke? One of our Av. S. sent it to me recently; it is such a book as I would be glad to have written.) Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo.: "I enjoyed reading Charlie's letter and am sure he is striving for an education. I hope and pray for the success of our Av. S. orphan boy, and am glad so many contribute to his education fund. Please find enclosed my little mite for him, and for our missionary, Drusie. I wish both great happiness." Edgar Bream, Whitehill, Neb.: "I don't understand who Drusie is, or what she is doing. I have been reading the Av. S. letters only a short time." (Drusie is a young lady who went to China as a missionary, not sent by a board, but trusting God for means of support. Of course those who are sent by our missionary board are as earnest and as full of faith; but there is this difference, that Drusie has no financial support except as we feel prompted to send her our mites. The Advance Society wanted to help in the great missionary work of the world; and we felt that the young people would feel a personal interest if we had a missionary that we might claim as our own. Of course we are heartily in sympathy with those regularly supported through our church organization. I haven't heard from Brother McLean yet, or Brother Rains, as to whether or not they know that the Av. S. is in existence.)

Charlie, Orphan Home, St. Louis: "I sent Mrs. David Jay my picture about a week before I received her letter stating that she had not received one yet. I sent another, and she sent a postal card saying she had received it. Inclosed you will find one of my pictures; I sent my sister one, too." (Mrs. David Jay sent me a dollar, to be sent to Charlie, that he might have his picture taken, and one sent to her, another to his sister. He was to keep the change.) "The pictures cost 50 cents per dozen." (Very good pictures, too). "There is going to be a large show here this month, but it is not the one we saw in Plattsburg. I have not thought much about vacation yet. I think I should like to visit Arkansas all right. I hope Felix has got accustomed to his new home by now. I think 'The Bronze Vase' is very interesting." New Honor List: Elsie Dennis, Single Tree, Wis.; Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo. (tenth quarter); Ruth Day, Sparta, Mo. (fourth quarter); Henry Asbury Stevens, Akita, Japan (ninth); Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo. (tenth); Carl Swift, Billings, Mo.; Sadie Pugsley, Woodbine, Ia. (fourth); Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga, Tenn. (twentieth); Beulah Shortridge, Glenwood, Ind. (ninth). I have just received a most interesting letter from our missionary Drusie, but it will Writing of books, Bacon said, "Some are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested." We deal in the latter sort. Inspect our catalog which will be mailed free on request; send us a trial order; write us about our library installment plan; make us your booksellers.

Our subscription list has shown a net gain every week in 1906. One result of the present attempts to injure the business of this House is to arouse our friends to greater enthusiasm in its support. We appreciate the esteem of our friends always; right now we wish their aggressive support.

One Kentucky preacher, loyal to the plea of our fathers in this Restoration movement, has just expressed his approval of our practical advocacy of Christian union by sending us nine subscribers from a town to which THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is now making its first visits. No other form of missionary activity will do more to advance the real interests of the Kingdom at the present time than this. Let hundreds of other preachers emulate the example of this brother who bears the suggestive name of Campbell.

have to go over for two weeks. I will give you just a taste of it. She writes: "Praise the Lord! Six good letters by this foreign mail. Thank you for forwarding the one from Miss Lucy Cloe. I am always glad to hear from any of the Av. S. members. Have had letters from several. I hope they will feel free to write and ask any questions they wish. I inclose receipts for the $5 drafts of the past months. I am glad you send New York drafts, or checks on home banks, as postal money order or drafts on Hong Kong lose money. May the Lord richly bless those who had a share in these loving gifts. You ask about my goat—poor thing! It has no name. Perhaps some one could suggest one. It is fed on k'ao lean, a kind of grain something like wheat or popcorn. It is kept with some other goats in a mud-fenced enclosure in a corner of the compound. I was not in the least expecting 'Adnah,' so it was a pleasant surprise and I am enjoying it very much. By the way, I had no idea you were going to publish what I said about books. I was afraid the readers would take it as a hint from me. However, a missionary must get where he does not mind what people think —just see that he pleases the Lord. And now I am afraid you will have to give this to the Av. S. members in installments. I send greetings to all friends who have remembered me so lovingly, asking them to continue praying for me." I published what Drusie said about wanting some books to read, because she also said that, much as she longed for interesting books, she must not take a penny sent to her for that purpose. It was not a hint; and I wanted you to know how Drusie has given up not only her home with its family associations, but must deny herself what the poorest of us receive almost as a matter of course; and that she denies herself all this gladly (else it would not be worth mentioning at all). So we, too, send her our $5 draft each month with gladness. Another goes to her on this day's mail. But how long it takes to reach her "compound"! The money for Charlie and Drusie has not been coming in rapidly of late. But we are not discouraged. We do not urge any one for a cent—we do not want a cent—unless it is sent with joy and love and a prayer. Still, it has not come in lately as it did in the past; I thought I would speak of it, for I feel that you ought to know.

Shall We Have a Professor of Handshaking?

If people only realized how eloquent the palm of the hand and the tips of their fingers can become, they would talk more than they do with their hands—not in pantomime, or in the mute language, but in the pressure of the hand in greeting!

A gentleman who is little given to sentimental effusiveness said the other day: "One of my young men came back from his vacation with a tingle in his hand clasp that I shall feel all winter. He is not a young fellow of much demonstrativeness, but he held on to my hand after the first cordial grasp, and gave it a second caressing squeeze that said better than words could have told, 'I think a great deal of you, and want you to know it.' I must have smiled to myself a dozen times since, over that extra pressure of his hand; it sent such a glow to my heart."

How vast would be the gain to the human race if we all knew how to make our heart throbs reach to our finger tips! Isn't it time we took handshaking out of the realm of etiquette, and put it into the sphere of language? What more expressionless and inane performance could be invented than the correct and elegant handshaking of etiquette—so many inches of marble finger tips frigidly touching so many more inches of the same! What business has your courtier prescribing rules for handshaking? It is a language.

Perhaps we may find room in our crowded curricula for a professorship of handshaking. Our theological seminaries and Y. M. C. A., and deaconness' and Christian Endeavor training schools ought to have it. There is a mighty ministry of cheer and inspiration, the art of which consists in coaxing the heart to lie in the palm of the hand, so that the touch shall say, "I am much interested in you. I want to be your friend. Count on my sympathy."

The tongue would stammer in uttering what the finger tips may telegraph in a handshake. How many times a day we might preach a gospel of good cheer if only we could substitute for our flabby, perfunctory counterfeit of a real, flesh and blood handshake, the living human touch that would make discouraged hearts vibrate with new hope.—John F. Cowan in Cumberland Presbyterian.

GEORGE E. DOANE, Contractor, 6339 Champlain Ave., Chicago, writes: "I can not say how you succeeded, but that my eye is sound and well and the tumor is entirely gone. My faith in your treatment is unbounded, for I had been repeatedly advised that the trouble was incurable."

MR. BRAME HOOD, Adv Mgr. of the Montgomery Journal, Montgomery, Ala., writes: "I would not take $10,000 for the good you have done me."

DR. O. W. F. SNYDER, the famous Obesity Specialist, Chicago, writes: "I want to say again that I believe you have solved the problem of a bloodless and painless cure for eye troubles."

CROSS-EYES STRAIGHTENED WITHOUT THE KNIFE
AND WITH ABSOLUTELY NO PAIN

I am particularly anxious to learn of every case which has suffered unsuccessful treatment or which has been pronounced incurable, by physicians or oculists. Do not let your unsuccessful experiments discourage you. Write me a full history of the trouble and I will be pleased to give the matter my personal attention and give you my opinion. THIS OPINION AS WELL AS MY ADVICE WILL COST YOU NOTHING WHATEVER AND WILL NOT PUT YOU UNDER ANY OBLIGATION OF ANY KIND OR NATURE. This is a fair proposition. You may rest assured that if I consider your case beyond relief that I will candidly tell you so. I have no false hopes to hold out, neither do I make any promises which I can not fulfill. If, later, you decide to place your case in my hands for treatment, you will find my fees reasonable and within your grasp. A moment of your time in writing to me may save you or a friend from a life of darkness.

I have still some copies of my Book, "DISEASES OF THE EYE, THEIR CURE WITHOUT SURGERY." This book is without a doubt the finest of its kind in the world, and consists of eighty pages, sixty pages of which are devoted to eye diseases. Nearly fifty ordinary diseased conditions are treated in separate chapters, and the book is illustrated throughout with colored plates. The remaining twenty pages are devoted to testimonials from cured patients all over the country. The book is well worth its weight in gold to any one who is suffering with their eyes. Many books of comparatively no value are daily sold for $5.00 a copy. I offer it to you, however for the asking. IT IS ABSOLUTELY FREE. Either fill out the attached coupon and return it to me or mail me your name and address upon a postal card. DO IT NOW.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

This House has just engaged its own Living Link evangelist, Bro. J. D. Lawrence, of Muncie, Ind., as one means of doing its part in doubling our membership by 1909, and disciplining our churches in faith and all good works. Brother Lawrence is a man of proved ability and has been the means under God of bringing thousands into the fold of primitive Christianity. His services will be given largely to churches unable to employ evangelists solely dependent on their compensation for meetings for a livelihood. Congregations that can do so will be expected to contribute as they are able in part payment of his necessary expenses. Brother Lawrence may be secured at once for his first meeting under this new arrangement. If our efforts in this direction meet with manifest approval from on high we hope our first Living Link evangelist may soon have many colleagues.

The justification of our giving most of this department this week to expressions of views relating to The Christian-Evangelist and its attitude toward some of the great questions of the hour, is that the greatly increased circulation of the best Christian literature in the homes of disciples of Christ is one of the preliminaries, or essentials rather, of the splendid triumphs we hope to celebrate in Pittsburg in 1909.

Before our people can nobly do, or want to do, or know what to do, they must read, and read where they will learn of the genesis of this Restoration movement with which we are identified, and of the aspirations of its founders, and its manifest destiny under the great Captain of our rapidly increasing hosts. They must be comforted, encouraged and inspired week by week by those men of God with whom they may commune in their own homes through the printed page. Brethren, place a Christian paper in every Christian home within a year, and all our dreams of conquest in the next three years will be surpassed by the history concluding with 1909.

Missouri and the Centennial.

W. F. RICHARDSON.

The time of our annual state convention is drawing near, and we shall soon go up to Hannibal to report what the Lord has done for and through us, in this great commonwealth. Shall we make that report such as to rejoice our own hearts, and please him who hath called us to be his disciples? Your board will be able to report a creditable year's work, considering the amount of funds they have had to work with. Our chief anxiety is that the permanent fund shall be secured by the date of the convention. Bro. R. A. Long's offer of $5,000 is contingent on our securing $15,000 more by July 1. It will not do for us to fail. It would be nothing short of disgraceful for the great brotherhood of Missouri to permit this opportunity to be lost. We are now about $5,000 short of the amount needed. There are many men and women in our churches whom God has blessed with wealth, who could easily contribute $100 to $1,000 each. What an uplift it would give to our convention if we could go there with the entire amount secured. Who will share in this holy enterprise? Send your pledge to our corresponding secretary, Bro. T. A. Abbott, 311 Century building, Kansas City, or to the writer, 1016 Lydia avenue. "What thou doest, do quickly."

Kansas City.

Centennial Propagandists.

Long live the great and good Christian-Evangelist.—Mrs. S. M. Lightfoot.

Am glad you have kept sane on the federation proposition. I wish you continued success.—Norman H. Robertson (minister).

I feel that I can not do without The Christian-Evangelist because I am 73 years old and live six miles from the church and can not get there much in the winter.—Mrs. Adeline Rogers.

Enclosed find draft for $10.00 to be applied to my subscription account of The Christian-Evangelist. I want to get square or ahead on it. I expect to get some subscribers soon now—at least 25.—E. O. Sharpe (minister).

My brother and wife and my father, 84 years old, say your movement on foot to convince the world that Christian bodies ought to co-operate and have a common aim and be one in putting down all evil, is fine.—Mrs. Stella Mumaugh.

Enclosed find money for three new subscriptions to The Christian-Evangelist. Our minister, Brother Crockett, reads your paper and highly esteems it and says it ought to be in the home of every family.—Mrs. S. Cottle, Olympia, Wash.

There has never been a time when I enjoyed The Christian-Evangelist more. I am certainly with you for the 100,000. Keep on telling us the news. Give us a little federation now and then for nachtisch, but do not make it our staple.—B. H. Cleaver.

I am sending you "The Berean Helper" as a feeble token of my genuine appreciation of your excellent paper, The Christian-Evangelist. I thank God for it. You know not the good it is doing. I feel that you are very largely saving the church from infidelity and ruin. God ever be with you. —Thomas J. Easterwood (minister), Temple, Texas.

I enjoy The Christian-Evangelist very much and look forward to getting it each week with great pleasure for I know each number will bring information of our churches from everywhere and what they are doing. I hope the subscription list may continually grow. Such a paper as The Christian-Evangelist is worthy the earnest support of every honest preacher in the brotherhood because of its admirable position and spirit on the subject of Federation.—Howard T. Cree (minister), Augusta, Ga.

You are sound on Federation. I am deeply grieved at the course of some others. Their success would make us a sect without remedy, and a very narrow one at that; to say nothing of the logic of our movement and the noble traditions of the fathers. How can such a work as the success of prohibition of the liquor traffic ever be accomplished without federation? If the churches do not federate it will never be done.—Peter Vogel (minister), Somerset, Pa.

It has always been a real pleasure to me to serve The Christian-Evangelist in any acceptable way. I consider it the greatest agency among the Disciples of Christ, next to the living ministry, for extending the kingdom and building up the individual believer in the gifts and graces of our holy religion. It is a paper that I delight to place in the hands of any friend or neighbor. More than any other periodical that comes under my notice it studies and teaches the things that make for peace and the things whereby one may edify another. I will do what I can to place a copy of your paper in every home.—N. M. Ragland, Fayetteville, Ark.

I am glad the controversy with the.... ........has been closed. The Christian-Evangelist can not afford it. May God raise up hosts of good men who will guide our movement over the shoals of inconsistency, not to say disloyalty, to our leader, the Christ. Press the issue of federation; press it hard; it is much more important than home missions, foreign missions, etc., because to fail now would be to cease to have a mission at all. We would receive and deserve the contempt of all Christendom. Our next national convention must speak in no uncertain tone or a hundred years of splendid achievement will be hopelessly neutralized.—Charles W. Dean (minister), Grand Rapids, Wis.

Practical Centennial Helpers.

Last week the Paris (Mo.) church, where J. H. Wright ministers, sent in a club of 3 new subscriptions; Huntsville Mo., J. R. Perkins, minister, 6; Union Avenue, St. Louis, I. S. Chenoweth, assistant pastor, 11; Mobile, Ala., Claude E. Hill, minister, 7; Hot Springs, Ark., T. N. Kincaid, minister, 43. A great many more than these came by singles and twos, showing that the movement to place The Christian-Evangelist in 100,000 Christian homes is not dependent on the manipulation of club workers or professional solicitors, but is active in disciple homes in country, village and city, and will soon be happily consummated.

Current Events

The Science of Earthquakes.

The San Francisco earthquake has excited a great popular interest in the recondite science of seismology. Even persons with a minimum of scientific interest can not help asking what cause could have been adequate to the production of so vast an effect, and where the next earthquake is likely to strike, and whether San Francisco will probably be visited by another destructive earthquake when it has been rebuilt. The general opinion of those best informed is that the recent disturbance was due to a slipping of strata in the earth's crust. That is to say, it was tectonic or structural, rather than volcanic in origin. In that respect it differs from the very frequent and often violent earthquakes of southern Mexico and Central America, which are volcanic. The Pacific coast for more than a thousand miles north of the Isthmus of Panama is the volcanic garden of the world. Nowhere else are active volcanoes found in such numbers. Fortunately for our canal, the Isthmus itself is just outside of the earthquake belt and has never been seriously disturbed in that way. North of this zone of volcanoes, the Pacific coast has always been rather subject to earthquakes of the tectonic type mentioned above. Between 1850 and 1886, the instruments in San Francisco recorded 254 shocks of greater or lesser intensity, most of them, of course, very slight. During the nineteenth century, according to Professor Holden, California experienced ten earthquakes of serious intensity. The people of San Francisco seem to be a trifle sensitive on this subject and prefer to speak of the late calamity as "the fire," rather than "the earthquake," probably with the feeling that if the public mind becomes impressed with the idea that San Francisco is subject to violent earthquakes, the future growth of the city will be hindered. It is an unnecessary fear. San Francisco's development can not be seriously impeded by anything. The strategic character of its location is too marked and the indomitable spirit of its founders is too potent. Besides, even in a region more or less subject to seismic disturbances, it is highly improbable that any single spot will twice be visited by an earthquake of such destructiveness as the recent one.

The Situation in Panama.

It is comforting to hear from a disinterested observer a good word for the conduct of affairs on the Isthmus. Mr. Lindsay Denison, representing "Everybody's Magazine," made a recent trip to the Canal zone and presents his findings in an article in the current issue of that publication. He reports that the work is actually going on as expeditiously as possible. So far, most of the work has necessarily been of a preliminary sort. The work of sanitation, providing water supply for the towns, draining the malarial marshes, conquering yellow fever, exterminating the deadly mosquito, building quarters for the officers and workmen, sorting over the vast quantities of machinery left by the French company, repairing such as could be used and getting the rest out of the way, improving harbors, building wharves—these and the thousand other things which have to be done but which do not in themselves at once add to the length, width or depth of the ditch, have occupied most of the attention of the force thus far. But this part of the work is practically done. About 19,000 men are now on the payroll and they are being transferred as fast as possible from the building, cleaning and overhauling sections to the digging gangs. But even now some digging is being done. A dozen ninety-ton steam shovels, picking up five cubic yards of earth at every scoop, are steadily scratching away. On any job of less magnitude than the Panama Canal this would soon make a big showing. Forty more steam shovels of the same type are now en route to the Isthmus. These ought to make the dirt fly fast enough to satisfy even the critics of the administration. Mr. Denison gives high praise to the chief engineer, Mr. John F. Stevens, and to Colonel Gorgas, who is in charge of the sanitary work, and under whose administration the average daily sick list has been brought down to 21 in the thousand, which is less than it is on the New York street cleaning force. Mr. Denison thought he saw evidences of graft on a small scale in minor positions, but none in high places. The weak points in the present force and organization are the incompetent superintending foremen, who are being worked out as rapidly as possible, the lazy Jamaican laborers whom nobody has yet learned how to handle, and the poorly equipped and badly managed railroad.

The Case of Gorky.

A few weeks ago New York society was preparing to give to the Russian litterateur, Maxim Gorky, and his wife, that warm reception which society is accustomed to award to the heroes of its fads. But it was suddenly discovered that Mr. Gorky had another wife in Russia and that the lady who was with him in New York was not his wife. Thereupon the invitations were recalled and society visited upon M. and Mme. Gorky its virtuous displeasure and indignation. Upon fuller information from Russia, it appears that Gorky and his first wife parted by mutual agreement and tried to get a divorce, but the Holy Synod of the Russian Church, which has jurisdiction over such matters and is very conservative in regard to divorce, refused to grant it. So, in accordance with a custom which is almost as common and quite as respectable in Russia as easy divorce is among us, the first marriage was virtually dissolved by consent and the second relation was entered into on a common law basis. This was very reprehensible, but it occurs to us that New York society has not much occasion to point the finger of scorn at Mr. Gorky. He did the best he could. It was his misfortune that there was no South Dakota in Russia. Under our free (and easy) institutions he would doubtless have been the lawful husband of the lady who now accompanies him and fully qualified to introduce her into the best society. Why should society be spiteful toward a man who, under the oppressive rule of a tyrannical government, is deprived of the legal privileges which American society so highly prizes, and who takes the simplest means of circumventing that tyranny?

Humor and Missions

Humorists seem constitutionally unable to handle the subject of Christian missions without making fools of themselves. We all remember the deplorable experience of our beloved Mark Twain shortly after the Boxer rebellion, and how, in connection with his attack on the missionaries in China, his readers, for the first time in his long and honorable career, were forced to laugh pityingly at him and not at his jokes. Now it is "Life," the New York weekly, which is so anxious for fair play in dramatic criticism but apparently does not care much about fair play toward men who are trying to help people to a better religious life. "Life" recently printed two companion pictures, one representing a group of missionaries of the conventional long-coated type destroying idols with the axe and violently ramming Christianity down the throats of the reluctant Chinese; the other picturing a group of Chinese missionaries similarly engaged in the forceful propagation of Confucianism on Fifth avenue. "Turn about is fair play." Quite so. If that is the way our missionaries proceed in China, we ought to allow their missionaries the same privilege here. But if, on careful investigation (which is not at all likely to be given) "Life" should find that our missionaries in China work through argument, persuasion, the building of hospitals, the free treatment of the sick and invoke the aid of the government only for the protection of their own lives and property rights, as any American citizen may justly do, then it would be necessary to revise the pictures somewhat. If the Chinese wish to try to convert us to Confucianism by such means, we have not the slightest objection. They will find that their lives and property will be perfectly safe in any part of this country and that they will enjoy perfect religious liberty. Let them come on with their preachers and hospitals. "Turn about is fair play."

Labor Troubles.

The first day of May is, the world over, not only moving day, but the favorite day for beginning strikes. At present there are an unusual number of industrial disturbances at home and abroad. The eight-hour movement in Europe has given rise to wide-spread troubles. In England the demand for an eight-hour day is strong, but it has not yet led to serious strikes. The same is true of Spain. Austria is involved in a general strike over this question. Russia is in a complete turmoil on the whole subject of wages, hours and conditions of labor. In France a general strike has been brewing for months and an attempt was made to call out the workmen of all trades in a strike beginning May 1. The effort was imperfectly organized and it is not yet apparent whether the strike will become serious. In Paris and to some extent in the larger provincial towns of France there were popular demonstrations on that day which made it necessary to suspend business, close the banks and call out the militia. In Paris alone on May 1 over a thousand persons were placed under arrest for disturbance of the peace, but even there the assemblies seemed to have no leaders, no definite program and no special desire to create a disturbance, and became dangerous only by reason of their vast size. Still, it seems rather probable that France is now on the verge of a serious strike. Our own coal strike is not yet of the first magnitude, but it is almost certain to increase. Even now 300,000 miners are out. In various parts of the country local demands for shorter hours or better pay have been met in a spirit of conciliation and strikes thereby averted. The printers' strike has been simmering along since January, with about 4,500 men idle, while the strike of the marine workers on the great lakes, beginning May 1, involves 20,000 men, threatens to completely tie up lake traffic until it is settled, and is second in seriousness only to the coal strike.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

IV. The Protestant Era.

4. The Problem of Harmonizing Union and Liberty.

What was the distinctive task which this Christian union movement set for itself? It undertook the solution of that problem of all the Christian centuries, namely: the harmonization of Christian liberty and Christian union. How can we stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, while standing fast also in the unity wherewith Christ hath made us one? Roman Catholicism secured union, of a kind, but it sacrificed liberty. Protestantism secured liberty, but at the sacrifice of union. Are these two principles, then, essentially antagonistic, the one to the other? Are they mutually exclusive terms, so that those who enjoy one must do so at the sacrifice of the other? This can not be, for Christ not only taught both union and liberty as principles of his kingdom, but he enjoined them upon his followers. How can they be reconciled?

In a stormy period of our national history, when the different sections of the American Union seemed likely to fall apart on the subject of slavery, there were some political leaders who were in favor of sacrificing the Union to save liberty, and there were others who believed in perpetuating the Union, even at the expense of liberty. In that critical period of our national life there stood up in the United States Senate that great constitutional statesman, Daniel Webster, who propounded a nobler motto: "Liberty and union, now and forever, one and inseparable!" That was the slogan that carried us through the struggles of the civil war and brought us out a free and united nation. Liberty to the several states and individuals within the well defined limits of the constitution; union through unswerving loyalty to one flag and one constitution—that was, is and forever must be, the basis of the American Union, whose starry banner is the ensign of hope to all the struggling nationalities of earth.

Liberty in Christ and union through loyalty to Christ—that is the harmonization of these two principles of the Gospel. Loyalty to all that Christ has clearly commanded—that gives us unity. Loyalty to Christ only and a rejection of all human authority in religion—that gives us liberty. So far from there being any conflict between these two principles each is essential to the other; for just as there can be no Christian union without liberty, so there can not be real Christian liberty, in its widest and best meaning, without union. The vital relation of liberty to union is seen in the fact that all attempts to bind men's thought and conscience where Christ has left them free have resulted in division and strife, and that all steps in the direction of a reunion of Christendom involve the concession of liberty in matters of opinion, and the rejection of all authority that interposes between Christ and the liberty which the emancipated soul finds in him. But why should we say that union is essential to liberty in its widest and truest sense? Because Christian union means the breaking down of all artificial barriers which separate Christians from each other, and the removal of those prejudices and arbitrary limitations of fellowship which enslave the mind and hinder the soul's true and normal development. May we not say, therefore, in religion as in patriotism: "Liberty and union, now and forever, one and inseparable"

Here, at last, in the free atmosphere of America, with the full guarantee of civil and religious liberty, there was born, for the first time in history, a religious movement which faced squarely the problem of a divided Christendom, and set for itself the task of promoting the union of Christians in harmony with the prayer of our divine Lord. It would be strange, indeed, if, coming long after the previous reformatory movements which we have mentioned, profiting by all the truth which they had elicited and emphasized, as well as by their mistakes and shortcomings, and directing its aim specifically to healing the divisions of the church, this religious movement of the nineteenth century had not made some important contribution to the problem of unifying the church, and to the work of bringing it more into harmony with the divine pattern shown us in the mount of divine revelation. In his history of the Protestant revolution, Dr. A. H. Newman says, concerning the work of the Genevan reformer: "Calvin, beginning his work at Geneva (1536), had the benefit of nearly 20 years of Protestant experience and prestige. Had his ability been no greater than that of Zwingli and Luther, he might yet have been expected to improve upon their reformatory efforts."* How much more, therefore, might it have been expected that a religious movement, starting nearly three centuries after that of Luther, and almost a century after the Wesleyan reformation in England, should have "improved upon previous reformatory efforts." But especially—and this is more directly to our point—might it have been expected that such a movement having for its specific aim the promotion of unity among Christians, and seeking to find the basis for such unity, would have made a distinct advance toward the solution of this vexed problem. That it did make such advance, we can not doubt will be the verdict of that future history which is to sum up the movements and influences which have brought about a united church.

A Question of Relationship.

Christianity is pre-eminently a social religion. It deals very largely with our relationships. Indeed, it may be said that the whole of Christianity is involved in the two great commandments—to love God with all our power, and our neighbor as ourselves. That is to say, the end and aim of Christianity is to bring men into right relations to God and to one another. All religious reformations have had for their object this fundamental aim. The chief emphasis, however, has hitherto been laid on our relations to God. This is fundamental, but does not exhaust Christ's teaching. Our own religious movement, however, has laid special emphasis upon the relation of Christians to each other. Our plea for Christian union means that the attitude of Christians toward each other should be fraternal and co-operative.

The deepest question involved in our current discussion about federation is that of our relation to other Christian bodies. In an address on this subject delivered more than two years ago, we said, "This way of regarding our brethren in other religious bodies, not as foes, but as allies, is the only one with which we may go before the world and make our plea for unity, maintaining our own self-respect and winning the respect of others. This question of federation, then, has roots which reach down to the most fundamental conceptions of what the Church of God is and of the relation of its several parts to each other and to the Kingdom of God." Further reflection upon this subject has only strengthened us in this conviction. Many have failed to see this meaning in the present agitation. Some of our friends have thought we were "unfortunate" in giving such prominence to this feature of the discussion, and have thought that it would have been more politic—as perhaps it would have been—to have avoided this issue, while thoroughly agreeing with us in our attitude toward the question of federation. But this question of relationship is the underlying question, and must be settled before we can have a correct idea of the meaning of federation.

As we view the subject, nothing is more vital to the future welfare of the Cause we plead than a clear apprehension of what our position is in respect to the rest of the religious world. We are approaching the centennial anniversary of the birth of our movement for the union of God's people. It is greatly to be desired that we shall not pass that anniversary without having attained to a general understanding among us of our relationship to other Christian forces. There are at least three views of this relationship, which may be stated as follows:

(1.) There had ceased to be any Church of Christ in the world, except in the sense of scattered believers, until the inauguration of our movement for the restoration of New Testament Christianity. Our churches, therefore, are the only Churches of Christ, and all others are mere sects or denominations. There are Christians within these denominations, but they have no churches that should be regarded as Churches of Christ.

(2.) Since baptized believers alone make up a church, and since immersion is the Scriptural baptism, only those churches whose members are made up wholly of immersed believers are Churches of Christ; hence, while Baptist and Free Baptist churches may be regarded as churches of Christ, in spite of some irregularities in their doctrine and practice, Pedobaptist churches are to be denied this name.

(3.) All religious bodies have departed, more or less, from New Testament teaching and practice, and have instituted new tests of fellowship resulting not in destroying the church, but in dividing it. Ours is a movement within the Church to restore the New Testament conditions of membership and fellowship, and to heal its divisions. All churches which hold to Christ as Saviour and Lord are Christian to the extent that they teach his doctrine and reproduce his life, and no further. There are no perfect churches in the world, but Christ is working in and through those which acknowledge him as Lord, according to the measure of their faith and fidelity. As to whether a given group of Christians, meeting and worshiping together, is a Church of Christ, is not to be determined by any one act or ordinance (such as baptism, for instance), but by their general Christian faith, character and work. "By their fruit ye shall know them."

The last position mentioned above is that of The Christian-Evangelist. No other position seems to us tenable, and no other is consistent with our aim as promoters of Christian union. This position was clearly apprehended by the originators of this movement, and has been held by our great, representative men throughout our history. This is entirely consistent with the view that denominationalism is an imperfect, and transitional condition of the Church growing out of a partial view of Christianity and certain historic conditions, and is destined to give way, ultimately, to the union for which Christ prayed; and that sectarianism is the inveterate foe of Christianity and the chief obstacle in the way of Christian union. To say that these groups of believers, known as denominations, are "Christian bodies," and that their local churches are Churches of Christ in spite of their errors in doctrine and practice, if only they hold to Christ and are reproducing his life, is not to affirm that denominationalism, much less sectarianism, is any part of the Church of Christ. The Church of Christ is made up, not of isms of any kind, nor of forms, or theories of church government, true or false, but of believers in Christ who share his life and who are in the process of being conformed to his image.

It is easy to see how perfectly harmonious with our position is this view of the church, and how perfectly consistent it is with the idea of co-operation among these Christian bodies with the view of promoting their unity and prosecuting with greater effectiveness the work of God in the world. According to this view, we are not the Church of Christ in the world, but we are a body or group of Christians within the Church of Christ pleading for its unity on the basis of New Testament Christianity. Our local churches are Churches of Christ, though none of them are perfect, and some of them are grievously imperfect in their teaching and practice.

This is our position and we would far rather fail in its advocacy, if that were possible, than to succeed on a false basis. We want to be clearly understood first, and then we are willing to bear all the opprobrium and opposition that may come to us because of this position, for we have not a doubt that it is the true position, and that it will be the position occupied by all of us in the future, as it is now held by a vast majority of our leading, representative men.

Notes and Comments.

J. H. Garrison does recognize sects as churches of Christ, and in so doing antagonizes our plea as presented in the language just quoted.—"Christian Weekly."

Brother Briney has been a very careless reader of our writings to reach any such conclusion as the foregoing. The use of the term "church" to designate a distinct religious movement called, in our usual parlance, a denomination, we hold to be extra-Scriptural, if not anti-Scriptural. There is no authority for it in the New Testament. We do not admit that our own religious movement is either the Church, or a Church, though of course its local congregations are churches of Christ. The term church, as we have often stated, has only two Scriptural uses: one is to designate a local congregation of believers who meet and worship in the same place, and the other includes the whole body of believers. All this is stated very clearly in our present editorial serial on Christian union. We believe all local churches of evangelical bodies, including our own, to be Churches of Christ, just in proportion as they hold to Christ as their living head, and are doing his will and reproducing his life in their membership. No more, no less.

The addresses which we publish elsewhere, by President E. Y. Mullins, of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, and Bro. I. J. Spencer, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Lexington, Ky., will no doubt be widely read, as they deserve to be, because they present very clearly and comprehensively, the views of two representative men on an issue that has hitherto been a barrier to union between Baptists and Disciples. It is noteworthy that the two papers do not differ very materially in their exegeses of the passages involved. They agree in repudiating baptismal regeneration, and in urging the necessity of faith, including penitence and a changed heart, as a condition preceding baptism. They even agree that baptism, with its proper prerequisites, is in order to remission of sins, but whether that remission is "ceremonial" or actual—that is the point of divergence. Since the New Testament uses neither term in describing the character of the remission, they might both be dispensed with. The speakers both agreed, again, that the absence of baptism, through necessity of any kind, does not imperil the soul's salvation; that it is not related to salvation in the same sense as faith or repentance. In a word, the two papers make it apparent, just as we anticipated they would, that there is no difference on this point of sufficient importance to hinder the heartiest co-operation between Baptists and Disciples.

Our own view of this subject for years has been that baptism is one of the merciful provisions of God to adapt the salvation offered through Christ to the needs of men. Man, in his present condition, needs some concrete act in which to externalize, or objectify, his faith and purpose, to assure both himself and others of his willingness to surrender to Christ, his Saviour and Lord. It is, therefore, among other things, a means of assurance to the believer of his acceptance with God, and the forgiveness of his sins. It fills, therefore, an important place in New Testament evangelism, and the failure to use it by many popular revivalists is no doubt one of the reasons why so many of their converts fail to unite themselves with the churches, and to continue their Christian life. Many a man is left in doubt, when told that he is saved by faith alone (which, when properly construed, is true enough, as against salvation by works), whether he has the requisite degree of faith on which to rest his hope of salvation. The situation is somewhat vague and nebulous to him in the absence of any concrete act by which his faith expresses itself in a decisive way, that commits him to Jesus Christ and to the Christian life. The confession of Christ "with the mouth," and in the symbolic act of baptism, is such a commitment to the Christian life as to satisfy the mind and heart of those desiring to enter into this new relation. Hence divine wisdom has associated the promised blessings of salvation with these acts of faith to give this assurance.

One thing Brother Spencer would readily admit, and that is that some of our scribes and preachers, in their effort to give proper emphasis to a divine institution, which has so often been dishonored, have unduly stressed the ordinance, and, proportionately, have given too much prominence to baptism as compared with the spiritual preparation preceding it and the Christian life which is to follow it. This error, however, is correcting itself, as we are getting away from the era of debate and controversy, and the truths of the Gospel are seen in their proper proportion.

The "Baptist Argus" of Louisville, Ky., has a whole page notice of the work on "The Holy Spirit," by the editor of The Christian-Evangelist, consisting mainly of quotations from the book itself, and heartily commending it, with a kind personal word about its author. That is very kind of Brother Prestridge, but it is just like him.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair has been enjoying a glimpse behind the scenes. As our readers know, it has been a lover of the beauty and glory of Nature by the lake shore in Michigan, when summer has clothed the forest with foliage of greenest hue, covered the hillsides with flowers and many a curious plant, and stretched over it all her bending arch of blue. But how does it all look in the early springtime, when the trees are yet unclothed and the new life is only beginning to manifest its presence? Last week we made a flying tour to Pentwater, our new summer resort, to take a peep behind the curtains and see what preparations Nature was making for our reception later in the season. It was a clear, bright morning, yet with a little sharpness in the breeze, that we stood upon the heights of "Garrison Park" and feasted our eyes once more upon Lake Michigan's vast expanse, and listened to the music of the proud waves breaking along the sandy beach. The trees were only beginning to bud, but on hillside, in canon and in vale the spring flowers were blooming, and the trailing arbutus added its charming fragrance to their odor. The magician, Spring, was busy over all the hills and in all the glens, getting her looms in order for weaving her wonderful robes with which she is to clothe in beauty every tree and shrub. We are authorized by Her Excellency to say that these hills and woods and by-paths have never looked so beautiful as they will look by the middle of June, or by the time her visitors arrive. Assisting Nature in her work of beautifying the park, a woodsman during the winter months has been cutting out the underbrush and trimming up the trees, so as to enable one to see to better advantage the beauties of the place.

Our readers will be interested in knowing that quite a number of our people are turning their eyes toward Pentwater for the coming summer, and as many as can be accommodated in the club house, and in the few cottages that are for rent, intend spending their summer vacation in that quiet, restful resort. Besides, there is plenty of room for tenting. In addition to these, we expect several new cottages to be erected during the coming spring and summer. Mrs. W. T. Moore, the enterprising president of Christian College, Columbia, Mo., who accompanied us on this flying trip to Pentwater, has planned for the erection of a handsome cottage immediately south of "The Pioneer," where the Easy Chair holds forth during the heated term. It is expected that the owners of the park will each build a cottage here during the summer. The fishermen were staking their nets out in the lake opposite "Garrison Park," where we can watch them draw in their "catch." The boats have resumed their trips. The local anglers were meeting with fine success with trout and perch, and the villagers are in a state of expectation of quite an influx to their population during the coming season. We found a meeting in progress in the Baptist church, conducted by Bro. W. H. Kindred, one of our ministers, of Atlanta, Ill., who has obtained a good hearing. We have a few members in Pentwater, and the Baptists, though few in number, have an excellent church building. It is a case in which the two congregations should agree to work together in the same building for the promotion of Christianity in the town—a thing which is greatly needed.

On our return trip from Michigan we had the pleasure of making a short stop at Grand Rapids, where we met our old friends, Brother and Sister L. C. Stow, with whom we dined and had a pleasant visit, coming from there down to Macatawa Park, where we had a few hours to wait for our evening train. This favorite resort of ours in former years is already beginning to be enlivened with visitors, especially the cottagers, a few of whom have already come for the season. Everywhere the place looked quiet and serene under a bright May sun, except along the Lake Michigan shore, where the scene was one of desolation. The storms of the autumn and winter have destroyed both the driveway and sidewalk clear along the shore, from the bath houses down to and beyond Cedar Walk. Carpenters were at work replacing the ruined walks with a board walk, and it is hoped by the time the season is fairly open that the roadway along the lake front will be restored. The problem of building out a beach along this shore is a difficult one, but it will no doubt be solved. One or two cottages were injured by a severe storm which visited the place in October last, but "Edgewood-on-the-Lake" sat quietly and serenely on her perch on the hillside, undisturbed. Her broad verandas and the wide expanse of view which she commands never looked more inviting. Another call we made during the journey was at the office of the "Christian Century," in Chicago, where we spent a few hours during a rainstorm. The editorial force was absent, but the clerks, the bookman and other helpers seemed to be busy and hopeful. The "Christian Century" has made great improvement during the past year, and deserves the growing patronage which we are glad to learn it is receiving. It was a very flying trip which we made into the region of summer resorts, but it may be taken as a premonitory symptom of a longer stay when the rays of the sun become more vertical and the mercury soars toward the century mark.

The reference in a recent paragraph in our Easy Chair to the brother who received such a signal and unexpected answer to his prayer for light and guidance, has awakened a good deal of interest among our readers, a number of whom have written to know the name of the brother from whose letter we quoted. Others have spoken to us personally of the incident, one lady saying, "It is easy for me to believe that story, because I have had the same experience twice in my lifetime." This kind of experience is not so uncommon, we dare say, as might be supposed. It is the sort of experience which one does not care to relate except to most intimate friends, and then only to those whose experience is likely to make them understand it. But no doubt the experience would be much more common if the practice of "The Quiet Hour" were more universal among Christians. It is only in moments of silent waiting upon God, with the whole spiritual nature in a receptive mood, that such an experience comes to us. And yet no one has a right to be discouraged if the particular form of experience referred to does not come to him. We are differently constituted, and God does not deal with all his children in the same way, as no intelligent earthly father deals with all his children in the same manner. It should be enough that, seeking strength and guidance, we receive it, no matter what may be the way in which the help is conveyed to us. With many Christians it is as natural to seek counsel from God in times of perplexity, or sorrow, or distress, as it is for the little child, when it is hurt, to seek the comfort and consolation of its mother. The answer to our prayers may often seem to us to be withheld, but sooner or later, if our request be wise, and made according to his will, we have the assurance that he has heard it and answered us in his own way, which is always better than our way. Wait upon the Lord and he will renew your strength, and according to the demands of thy day so shall his grace be.

The Easy Chair congratulates its readers, the number of whom is rapidly increasing these days, on the signs everywhere evident, that the storm clouds, which have hidden the sun of peace in our Zion for some time, are passing away, just as we prophesied they would do when they seemed most dark and threatening. From every section of the country, and from sources the most unexpected, we are receiving words of encouragement and of hearty sympathy in our contention for the spirit and aim of the Fathers of this movement. It took a little while for some of our own readers, and much longer for the readers of some other journals, to see just what was involved in this discussion, but they are seeing it now with great distinctness, and they are justifying our confidence in them that when they did see they would stand true to the principles which gave us our existence and our success.

Baptism and the New Testament

By E. Y. Mullins, D. D., LL.D.

The following paper, read at the National Congress of Disciples of Christ at Indianapolis, April 25, 1906, by President Mullins, of the Southern Baptist Seminary, Louisville, Ky., has as its theme: "What Is the New Testament Teaching on the Relation of Baptism to the Remission of Sins and the New Birth?" The Review by I. J. Spencer follows on page 591.

I rejoice in the fact that two great bodies among the followers of Christ have made common cause in their advocacy of the paramount authority of the Scriptures regarding the form, and also in their advocacy of immersion as the sole New Testament mode of baptism. Surely good and only good can come from a free and fraternal interchange of views upon points regarding which there may be only partial agreement, or regarding which there may be total disagreement. And if as a result of such conference the dove of Christian peace, fraternity and unity shall hover a little nearer than before, it will be time and effort well spent.

The topic assigned to me is very clear, distinct and specific. It is not what is the view commonly held, but what is the New Testament teaching—not as to the form of baptism, or the relation of baptism to the Lord's supper, but the relation of baptism to the remission of sins and the new birth?

Rules of Interpretation.

It need not be emphasized in this presence, but it may not be amiss to remind ourselves at the outset that any interpretation of the New Testament teachings on this subject, which shall be trustworthy or final, must possess the following merits: 1. It must take account of all the elements of the problem. The total relevant teachings of the New Testament must be taken into account. 2. The interpretation must resort to no straining of the principles of grammar, or violent exegesis of any kind. The rack and the thumbscrew used to be applied to men to extort unwilling denials or confessions. Now they are often applied to the Scriptures. I shall hope to avoid the revival of the Inquisition even in this form in what follows. 3. The interpretation must be self-consistent throughout. All the factors of the problem must be fused into a final unity. There must be no heterogeneous elements lying about loose when the structure is completed, and, 4. It goes without saying that our view must be confined to the Scriptures. We are to make no excursions for the time being into the realm of dogma, or elsewhere, but interrogate the New Testament alone.

Perhaps the best method of approaching our problem will be to go straight at it and place before our minds the significant passages of Scripture which connect baptism most closely with regeneration and the remission of sins.

The first passage we will note is in Mark 16:16, containing Christ's words in the commission: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." Here unquestionably salvation in one member of the statement is put over against faith and baptism in the other. Whether faith and baptism are conditions of salvation in the same sense of the word will have to be determined by other considerations, as we shall see a little later.

Consider next the much discussed passage in John 3:5, "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit [γεννηθῇ ἐξ ὕδατος καὶ πνεύματος] he can not enter into the Kingdom of God." I need not remind you, of course, that many and diverse interpretations have been made of these words: That water means the natural birth which Jesus is here contrasting with the spiritual; or that by a hendiadys water and spirit are taken as synonymous, water simply suggesting in figure what spirit conveys in reality; or that water here means baptism, and that baptism is a condition of entrance into the Kingdom of God. For the present I will let the last meaning stand and concede that it is entirely possible that water here does signify baptism.

Again in Acts 2:38 we read: "And Peter said unto them, Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto remission of sins [μετανοήσατε, φησὶν, καὶ βαπτισθήτω ἕκαστος ὑμῶν . . . εἰς ἄφεσιν τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν] and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." It is sometimes maintained regarding this passage that means "in reference to" and that it can not bear the meaning "in order to," because repentance and baptism would in that case both be in order to remission of sins, which is forbidden by other teachings of Scripture. I need not, of course, remind you that on the other hand it is maintained with equal vigor by many learned interpreters that here the preposition carries its usual simple and clear meaning, "in order to," and that therefore baptism and repentance are both in order to remission of sins. It must be confessed that this seems to be the natural meaning of the passage, and as a provisional interpretation I will let it stand.

Again in Acts 22:16 we read in the words of Ananias to Saul, "And now why tarriest thou? arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins [ἀπόλουσαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας σου] calling upon his name." Here baptism assuredly is placed in a very close relation to remission of sins. The "washing away of sins" is a form of expression necessarily connecting the second clause with the first, "arise and be baptized," and it would seem to be difficult to disconnect the two statements if we are to deal fairly with our syntax and our principles of exegesis.

Again in Titus 3:5 this language occurs: "He saved us through the washing of regeneration [διὰ λουτροῦ παλινγενεσίας] and renewing the Holy Ghost [καὶ ἀνακαινώσεως πνεύματος ἁγίου] which he poured out upon us richly through Jesus Christ our Savior." This is sometimes translated "laver of regeneration," or "bath of regeneration," but in any case water is the basis of the idea, whether the language be figurative or literal. The word loutron translated "washing," shows this. It is natural, therefore, to refer this expression to baptism, although there is no lack of exegetical authority for the view that the language is figurative and refers to water as a cleansing element.

A passage in Ephesians 5:26 is of similar import. Christ loved the church and gave himself for it that he might sanctify it, "having cleansed it by the washing of water with the word," etc. (τῷ λουτρῷ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐν ῥήματι.) Here the word translated washing, loutron, is the same as in the passage just referred to in Titus. Two remarks may be sufficient regarding these words. The first is that the sanctifying and cleansing spoken of are not necessarily the same, or at least the one may be the spiritual and the other the ceremonial aspect of the same thing. The second remark is that if the washing referred to is baptism, though it is not necessarily to be so taken, it is to be noted in addition that the word is referred to as the instrument of the cleansing.

We read, again, in 1 Peter 3:20, 21, that Christ preached to the spirits in prison when the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah while the ark was preparing, "wherein few, that is eight souls were saved through water; which also after a true likeness [ἀντίτυπον] doth now save you, even baptism, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh but the interrogation [συνειδήσεως αγαθῆς ἐπερώτημα] of a good conscience toward God, through the resurrection of Jesus Christ." Most probably the word eperootema, translated "interrogation," should be rendered appeal or earnest request. The passage is confessedly a difficult one. The sentence is long and involved and various figures of speech are introduced. Among the many interpretations possible the passage may mean that baptism as an antitype of the flood of waters in the time of Noah, and as the request or prayer of a good conscience, now saves through the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

The above passages constitute the New Testament group of teachings in which the relations between baptism on the one hand and regeneration and remission of sins on the other are stated in the strongest terms. Taking these passages, then, as a basis for an induction, what conclusion can be drawn? For one thing this group may be described as a closed circle of teachings which are self-consistent and harmonious. In this closed circle of teachings we find nearly if not all the elements of salvation placed in the closest kind of connection with baptism; in some instances even a causal connection seems to be taught. In the passage in 1 Peter baptism or water is said to save us; in Acts 2:38 baptism is declared to be "unto remission of sins." In Acts 22:16 baptism is referred to as a means of washing away of sins. In Ephesians cleansing through the washing of water is the form of statement, and in Titus it is called the bath or laver of regeneration. For the sake of clearness of treatment we have presented these passages together, and now we leave them for the moment to consider another group. Meantime the final conclusion must be reserved until our interpretation is complete.

The second group of passages to which attention is called make no reference at all to baptism.

In John 3:18 we read: "He that believeth on him is not judged: he that believeth not hath been judged already because he hath not believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God." In these words faith alone is indicated as the condition of exemption from judgment. Again in Acts 3:19 we read: "Repent ye therefore, and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out, that so there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Here repentance alone is made the condition of the blotting out of sins. Once more, in Acts 10:43, faith by itself without reference to baptism is coupled with remission of sins: "To him bear all the prophets witness, that through his name every one that believeth on him shall receive remission of sins." In Romans 3:21 we read, "But now apart from the law a righteousness of God hath been manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God through faith in Jesus Christ unto all them that believe." Here faith is coupled vitally with the realization of righteousness. In Romans 1:16 also salvation is declared to be conditioned upon faith: "I am not ashamed of the Gospel; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

In giving instructions to an inquirer Paul, in Acts 16:31, says, "Believe on the Lord Jesus' Christ and thou shalt be saved." Eternal life is offered on condition of faith as clearly set forth in John 3:14, 15, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth may in him have eternal life.' Once more in Romans 5:1 we read, "Being therefore justified by faith let us have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." There are a number of instances in the New Testament which indicate that repentance is coupled immediately with remission of sins. In Matthew 9:2 Jesus says to the sick of the palsy, yet unbaptized, "Son, be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven," and to Zaccheus in Luke 19:9, "To-day is salvation come to this house." In Luke 18:14 Jesus declares of the publican who had offered a penitent prayer that he went down to his house justified. The dying robber heard from Christ's lips the words: "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise" (Luke 23:43).

We might extend this class of quotations indefinitely, but it is unnecessary. We may now repeat our process of induction employed in dealing with the first group of passages. Looking, then at this latter collection of teachings by themselves, what do we discover? We find that, as in the former group, practically all the great elements of salvation were connected closely with baptism, so here we find that those elements of salvation are vitally connected with faith or repentance, and no reference whatever is made to baptism. Righteousness, justification, remission of sins, eternal life, salvation, all these great aspects of the one redemption are declared to be ours upon condition of faith, or of repentance, or of both.

Glancing back, then, over the ground covered, we discover that there are two closed circles of teaching in the New Testament, one of which associates the initial ceremony of the Christian life, baptism, and the other the initial spiritual exercise of the Christian life, faith, with the rise in the soul of all those spiritual blessings which together constitute salvation, and which may be summed up in the terms employed in our subject, regeneration and remission of sins. The situation thus disclosed gives rise of course to the problem of harmonizing these two groups of passages. For I take it that all of this audience will concede that harmony in some form is possible. This problem is indeed a far reaching and profound one and involves the whole question of the relation of the ceremonial to the spiritual in Christianity. That there is a ceremonial principle in Christianity is clear from the numerous and important passages in which the two Christian ceremonies are placed in important relations to other Christian elements. That there is a spiritual principle of course goes without saying.

E. Y. Mullins, D. D., President of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.

In view, now, of the closed circle of ceremonial teachings as well as a closed circle of spiritual teachings, in one of which regeneration and remission seem to be made dependent upon baptism and in the other upon faith, we may give to the emerging problem a four fold form. 1. Do the ceremonial passages properly yield the law of interpretation, according to which the other group must be understood; or 2. Does the spiritual group impose that law, requiring us at any cost of mere verbal or grammatical exegesis to understand the ceremonial passages in a spiritual way; or 3. Can we unite the ceremonial and the spiritual principle in salvation and hold that it is in the union of the two that the truth is found; or 4, Finally, is there a comprehensive conception of salvation itself and the conditions leading to it which enables us to harmonize the two groups of passages, observing the most faithful obedience to the principles of exegesis and preserving in their integrity both the ceremonial and the spiritual elements in Christianity? To state these four questions more concisely: Does baptism secure remission of sins, or does faith secure this blessing, or do baptism and faith together do so, or is remission of sins a broader conception in the New Testament than we have been wont to hold, which relieves both exegesis and theology of all their embarrassment?

1. First, then, does baptism alone secure remission of sins and regeneration? I shall not discuss this point at length for the reason that the essential matters which relate to it will be brought forward further on in the discussion, and for the further reason that, if I understand the views of the scholarly and representative writers among both the Disciples and Baptists, this view is entirely repudiated. Certainly it is rejected by all Baptists. I have a strong impression that sacramentalism in the sense of an opus operatum, which asserts efficacy in the sheer application of the material element, is not a doctrine now held by any really representative member of either denomination. In any event the purposes of this paper can be attained by considering the view which, if I understand it right, is the prevalent one among Disciples, viz., that which insists upon a spiritual change prior to baptism in order to any sort of efficacy in the ordinance itself. This is not meant to ascribe to writers among Disciples the view that baptism is without any spiritual efficacy, but only the view that baptism apart from a preceding spiritual change is without efficacy. Baptism, with them, as I understand it, has a supplemental, but no original and inherent spiritual efficacy. We pass this first question, then, for the present to consider very briefly the second, whether faith alone secures remission of sins and regeneration.

2. In reply to this question it certainly is an impressive fact, whether conclusive as yet or not, that in our second group of passages there is a closed circle of teachings which clearly indicate that faith alone is a condition of remission, justification and of eternal life. If we had no other Scriptures bearing upon the subject, the whole question could be closed at this point. But inasmuch as these blessings elsewhere seem to have an equally close connection with baptism, in an extensive and important group of passages, we must await further development of the argument before announcing our conclusion.

Are Faith an Baptism Conditions?

3. We consider in the next place, then, question three: whether or not the two principles are to be united in salvation, so that both faith and baptism are conditions of remission, the one supplementing and completing the other. There are several forms in which this view may be held. One is that regeneration is a begetting on the part of God, while baptism is the birth of the soul newly begotten in God's image. This assumes the necessity of the spiritual begetting prior to the birth through baptism, and regards baptism as the supplementary spiritual process. Another form of this general view holds that repentance precedes baptism, is necessary to its efficacy indeed, but that in baptism God actually remits the sins of the penitent believer. A third form of the view omits all spiritual efficacy from the conception of baptism, save as a means or condition of Christian assurance. Repentance and remission and regeneration have already taken place before baptism; this ordinance simply brings to the penitent and obedient disciple the assurance that God now accepts and pardons him.

As to the last of these views, it may be conceded that many penitent believers do obtain in baptism the inward peace and joy which is called assurance. It may be questioned, however, whether we have Scripture warrant for holding that the ordinance uniformly brings this assurance.

As to the first view, that we must distinguish between a prior begetting and a subsequent being born, I think it can not be maintained from the Scriptures. The birth is by water and spirit in the third chapter of John, not a begetting by spirit and a birth by water, and so of the other passages bearing upon the subject. No such distinction is observed by the Scripture writers, and although John's writings uniformly employ the Greek words which denote begetting and begotten in reference to sonship or childship to God, these writings nowhere distinguish between a spiritual begetting and a baptismal birth.

Some Objections.

The second view named, that repentance precedes baptism while remission accompanies it, we now consider. There are serious objections to this view also. One is that if the distinction between regeneraton and remission usually maintained by interpreters is correct, there is conflict of Scriptural teaching on this point. For in Titus 3:5 it is the washing of regeneration which baptism secures, and not that of remission. If remission again is God's act, then it is inconsistent for Ananias to say to Saul in Acts 22:16, "Arise and wash away thy sins." Some interpretation must be found which will harmonize these varying statements better than the view which limits immersion to the means or condition of securing remission for sins previously repented of. Another objection to this view is that it separates in time the sinner's act of repentance and God's act of remission. This is never taught in Scripture. Forgiveness is the correlative to repentance, and in the case of the healed paralytic, the justified publican, and of Zaccheus, the evidence all indicates that there was no interval of time between genuine repentance and divine remission of sins. Inasmuch, therefore, as baptism can never thus follow without some small interval of time, it can scarcely be held to be a condition of remission of sins. Then, besides, remission of sins would depend upon the administrator of baptism, and tend strongly to a sacerdotal conception of the ministry.

Again, if baptism is the condition of remission of sins, it is difficult to understand why it is never commanded in Scripture that we repeat it. It must be borne in mind that forgiveness is an act of God repeated at frequent intervals throughout the Christian life. The prayer for forgiveness is imbedded in the heart of the Lord's prayer for the perpetual use of believers. Why is the condition of remission to be observed but once if the necessity for remission so frequently arises? It is scarcely to be held that there are two principles of remission taught in the Scriptures, so that a man may actually be forgiven in two totally distinct ways at different periods of his spiritual experience.

A further objection to the view we are considering is that it leaves unexplained the large group of passages which connect remission and regeneration with faith, entirely exclusive of baptism. It is scarcely conceivable that if baptism were a necessary condition to the actual remission of sins it would ever be omitted in the statements of the conditions of salvation by the Biblical writers. In other words, this principle of interpretation is not broad enough to explain adequately all the facts. The induction is not an adequate reproduction in general terms of the total significance of the phenomena.

Once again, this view unites two incompatible things in salvation—the spiritual and the physical. To hold that repentance, which is a spiritual act on man's part, finds its correlative, forgiveness, which is a spiritual act on God's part, only through the mediation of baptism, a physical act which he might be prevented from performing at all, is, it seems to me, to place incongruous things in vital relationships.

It is easy to see how perilous this principle might become. If a physical act, a religious ceremony, actually secures the unspeakable blessing of remission of sins, then it is almost inevitable that the preceding spiritual condition, repentance, will wane in importance, and men will gradually adopt a thoroughgoing sacramental theology at all points.

So much for our third question. We now come to the fourth and last, whether we may find a principle of interpretation broad enough to include all the Scripture teachings upon the subject in hand. I am quite well aware that as yet all difficulties are not cleared up. I announce my conclusion and then proceed to establish it. It is that in one closed circle of teachings, the ceremonial, we find a distinct ceremonial principle in Christianity; that in the other closed circle of passages we find a distinct spiritual principle in Christianity; and that there is no union or amalgamation of these two principles on the one hand, and there is no conflict between them on the other.

We must begin on common ground if we are to make progress toward unity of view. I take it that we all agree as to the Lord's supper. When Jesus says to the disciples "this is my body" (Luke 22:19), or "this is my blood" (Mark 14:24), we have no difficulty of interpretation. All Baptists and Disciples agree here that we have no "real presence" in the Romish or Lutheran sense. The bread and wine are symbols. They do not, when partaken of, communicate grace; they vividly portray truth to the mind, and in proportion as the mind of the participant grasps the significance, the meaning of the symbols, is there blessing for him in observing the Lord's supper.

My next remark is that we have in these passages relating to the supper at least a recognition of the ceremonial principle in Christianity in the sense here maintained. We eat the body and drink the blood of Christ in the Lord's supper, for so the Scripture asserts—but we do this symbolically. The exegetical difficulty which Romanists have never found it possible to overcome is the point blank assertion of Christ that the bread and wine are his body and blood. I am not referring to the passage in the sixth chapter of John, which I do not think refers to the supper, but to the words of the institution in Matthew, Mark and Luke.

This ceremonial principle is clearly seen in reference to the supper, and these words of Christ naturalize the principle, so to speak, in Christianity and furnish us a clew to the interpretation of the other ceremony, baptism, without doing exegetical violence at any point. Christ says point blank, in the third chapter of John, that in order to entrance into the Kingdom of God a man must be born of water. This is literally true of symbolic entrance into that kingdom. Ceremonially no man ever entered into the kingdom without baptism, for baptism is the ceremonial door into it. So also in the second chapter of Acts baptism is "in order to" ceremonial remission of sins. I employ the terms ceremonial and symbolic here as synonymous. There is but one way to secure actual spiritual remission of sins, and that is by means of repentance, and there is but one way to obtain ceremonial remission, and that is baptism. No man since the time of Christ ever received ceremonial remission otherwise. So also of entrance into the kingdom. Actual spiritual entrance is conditioned upon birth by the Spirit of God; ceremonial or symbolic entrance is through the ceremonial birth. As the spiritual principle of Christianity is a closed circle, actual and spiritual justification, regeneration, and remission are all secured through repentance and faith (spiritual conditions), and through these alone; and as each is complete, needing no addition when faith is exercised; so also ceremonial remission and ceremonial justification are complete when baptism is performed.

It is clear, then, that when the birth by water and that by the Spirit are conjoined as conditions of entering the Kingdom of God, the Savior had in mind both the actual spiritual entrance and the ceremonial entrance, and where repentance and baptism are conjoined as conditions of remission, it is evident that actual spiritual and ceremonial remission are both in the mind of the writer.

Lest this be not perfectly clear a few illustrations are given to show how in common usage the real and the symbolic may be united to express purpose or result. Take this example: The minister pronounced them husband and wife and the groom placed a ring on the finger of the bride in order to consummate the marriage ceremony. The ring was symbolic and might have been omitted; the essential thing was the pronouncement by the minister. Or this: In order to complete the interment, dust was sprinkled on the casket, the words of the burial service were uttered, and the grave was filled. Here the sprinkling of the earth was symbolic only. Or this: The representatives of the two nations signed the papers and shook hands in order to consummate a treaty of peace. In each of these instances there was an actual and a ceremonial performance of the same act. It is easy to distinguish the two in every instance.

The Ceremonial Symbolizes the Spiritual.

Now in Christianity the ceremonial symbolizes the spiritual and the actual. Baptism and the supper are beautiful external figures of internal spiritual realities. The closed circle of teachings, therefore, in which we read of the "laver of regeneration," of baptism as the "earnest request of a good conscience toward God,' as well as the other passages referred to, need only be interpreted in the light of the ceremonial principle we have expounded in order that all difficulties be cleared completely away. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" does not mean that faith is the first step and baptism the second in the conditions of salvation, but this: he that believeth and is baptized is saved in the complete New Testament sense, that is, both actually saved by faith and ceremonially saved by baptism. The believer is actually saved, his sins actually remitted without and before baptism, just as the bridal pair may be and are actually often joined in marriage without the symbolic ring. And just as they are and can never be symbolically married without the ring or other symbol, so no man can be symbolically saved without baptism.

The above interpretation leaves all the passages of Scripture intact, recognizes the full natural force of every noun, preposition and verb involved in the exegesis, and in particular it is comprehensive enough to allow for apparent contradictions in that it clearly defines the ceremonial and spiritual principles of Christianity in their relations to each other.

It is impossible to see how this interpretation is to be avoided without rejecting our common view of the teachings regarding the Lord's supper and adopting a corresponding principle there. If the spiritual and ceremonial are to be made jointly efficacious in saving in the one, so must they be in the other, instance.

To sum up our view now we may say that baptism, in its relation to regeneration and remission, is not a procuring cause; nor is it a part of a whole of which the latter are the other part; nor is one a spiritual condition of which the other is spiritual fulfillment; but rather, baptism is symbolic cause of which symbolic remission and symbolic regeneration are the effects. Baptism is not the moving or original cause of salvation, nor is it a meritorious or efficient cause, and it is certainly not the final cause. It is rather a symbolic instrumental cause, producing a symbolic effect. It is the external invariable symbol of an internal spiritual reality which precedes.

In the New Testament baptism was the invariable concomitant of faith and confession of Christ. It is well that two great Christian bodies insist upon this close relation of the two. The New Testament does not contemplate a divided Christendom. Entering the Kingdom of faith was never dissociated from the significant ceremonial act which always attended it. It will be well if Baptists and Disciples continue their emphasis upon this close relationship, and that we will thus gradually come to see this whole subject alike signs are not wanting. In these I greatly rejoice, and pray that our common Lord and Master may preside over the destinies of both bodies, and in his own time and way bring together again those who years ago were sundered, and make all of us increasing fruitful with the passing years.

Baptism and Remission—A Review

By I. J. Spencer, LL. D.

The paper read by President E. Y. Mullins, Louisville, Ky., on "What is the New Testament Teaching on the Relation of Baptism to the Remission of Sins and the New Birth?" before the Eighth National Congress of Disciples of Christ, held in Indianapolis, Ind., April 25, 1906, was reviewed as follows by I. J. Spencer, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Lexington, Ky.

The spirit, method and comprehensive conclusion of the paper just read are admirable, and I believe the document will result in profit to many.

Baptists and Disciples agree as to the sole source of authority in religion and as to the instrument of that authority. They agree as to congregational church government and as to the great spiritual necessity of preaching the Gospel to every creature. They agree as to the importance of a regenerated church membership, of a consecrated and educated ministry and as to the value of teaching the Word as well as preaching it. They mutually believe in a cultured, courteous, courageous, Scriptural editorship for religious periodicals and in the same character of men as professors in schools, colleges and universities. They both oppose the introduction into the church of any human philosophy, criticism or ritualism that will diminish the power or hinder the progress of the simple teaching of Christ. And it would appear, from the paper just read, and, I trust, will seem from this review, after a little explanation and a few remarks of emphasis, that they agree also as to the very terms of salvation and the order in which they occur. I believe that frequent conferences and frank expositions of Scripture on the part of representatives of the two bodies, who humbly desire to know the truth and be loyal thereto, would help toward the unity and its results for which Jesus prayed.

Perhaps neither the writer nor the reviewer of the paper can speak with any authority for others. But, after all, it is the authority of truth, not of men, that should prevail, truth spoken in the spirit of the 13th chapter of First Corinthians in the hope that men will see and receive it.

I must ask this audience to remember that this review was prepared hurriedly. The paper to be reviewed lay five days in the wrong post office, when it should have been in my hands, and the few days remaining after it reached its proper destination were by no means free from other exacting duties. I have not been able, therefore, to give to the subject the attention its importance demands. This fact I sincerely regret.

I shall not attempt to interpret or to examine critically the author's interpretation of numerous portions of Scripture used in his paper. Except in a few instances I will leave his expositions and interpretations unmolested.

The author in approaching the question as to what the New Testament teaches on the relation of baptism to the remission of sins and the new birth, lays down four rules by which to test his answer, which tests the reviewer accepts. They are these: (1) It must take account of all relevant New Testament teaching; (2) the interpretation must not be strained; (3) it must also be self-consistent and fused into final unity; (4) it must be confined to the Scriptures.

The author's first step in approaching the problem is to place before us a group of Scripture passages, seven in number, not an exhaustive but a sufficiently representative list for the argument. (They are Mark 16:16, John 3:5, Acts 2:38, Acts 22:16, Titus 3:5, Eph. 5:26 and 1 Pet. 3:20,21.) They connect baptism closely with regeneration and the remission of sins. From these passages he draws the conclusion that they form "a closed circle of teachings self-consistent and harmonious," that they bring baptism into "the closest kind" of relationship with nearly if not all the elements of salvation and that "in some instances even a causal connection seems to be taught."

He then calls attention to a second group of Scripture quotations which have no reference whatever to baptism but in which the elements of salvation are "vitally connected with faith or repentance." (They are John 3:18, Acts 3:19, Acts 10:43, Rom. 3:21, Rom. 1:16, Acts 16:31, John 3:14,15, Rom. 5:1, Matt. 9:2, Luke 19:9, 18:14 and 23:43.) "Righteousness, justification, remission of sins, eternal life," "are declared to be ours upon condition of faith or repentance, or of both."

Speaking of these two groups, he says, "We discover that there are two closed circles of teachings in the New Testament, one of which associates the initial ceremony of the Christian life, baptism, and the other the initial spiritual exercise of the Christian life, faith, with the rise in the soul of all those spiritual blessings which together constitute salvation and which may be summed up in the terms regeneration and remission of sins."

The problem "involves the whole question," says our author, "of the relation of the ceremonial to the spiritual in Christianity." That there is a ceremonial principle is clearly discovered from the declarations of the New Testament in which the two Christian ceremonies are placed in important relations to other Christian elements, and that there is a spiritual principle is, of course, taken for granted. The writer denominates the principle prominent in the former group the ceremonial, and the one dominant in the latter class the Scriptural principle.

He then asks four questions: (1) Does baptism secure the remission? (2) Does faith secure it? (3) Do faith and baptism together obtain the blessing? or (4) Is remission of sins a broader conception in the New Testament than we have been wont to hold? He answers correctly the first question by saying that baptism alone does not secure forgiveness and regeneration. In reply to the second, whether "faith alone secures remission of sins and regeneration," he affirms that there is in his second group of passages "a closed circle of teachings which clearly indicate that faith alone is a condition of remission, justification and of eternal life," and that if we had no other Scripture bearing upon the subject the whole question at this point could be closed. But, in view of the fact that these blessings elsewhere "seem to have an equally close connection with baptism, in an extensive and important group of passages," he awaits further development to announce his conclusion. His reviewer will await that announcement before making reply.

The third question is the one to which the writer of the paper gives most attention, and considers at length, stating seven objections against the view it presents. The question is "whether or not the two principles" (the spiritual and ceremonial) "are to be united in salvation, so that both faith and baptism are conditions of remission, the one supplementing and complementing the other." He names three forms in which this view may be held, but the special form to which he devotes special care is "that repentance precedes baptism, is necessary to its efficacy indeed, but that in baptism God actually remits the sins of the believer."

1. One objection is that if the distinction between regeneration and remission usually maintained is correct, there is conflict of Scriptural teaching on this point; for in Titus 3:5 it is the washing of regeneration and not remission which baptism secures. I suggest that regeneration includes remission as the greater includes the less.

2. A second objection is that, remission being God's act, the view would make it inconsistent for Ananias to say to Saul in Acts 22:16, "Arise and wash away thy sins, calling upon the name of the Lord." Concerning this objection, I remark that no doubt Paul was allowed to co-operate with God in doing representatively what God did really. The phrase, calling upon the name of the Lord, seems so to indicate.

3. A third objection to this belief is that it separates in time the sinner's act of repentance and God's act of remission. Time and its succession of events are for men. Those who believe that remission of sins does take place in baptism normally would not bind God to forgive sins in baptism only. Certainly, however, if remission may take place before baptism it may take place in baptism.

4. The fourth objection to the opinion under consideration is that baptism depends upon the administrator, and therefore remission would depend upon him in case the sins are remitted in and not without baptism. To remove this objection it is necessary only to realize that the better part of baptism depends not upon the administrator. The spiritual part depends upon God and the repentant sinner. Only the physical part depends upon time, place or the administrator. That baptism has a deep spiritual side will be shown later. "It is accepted according to that a man hath—not according to that a man hath not." Even granting that baptism may depend wholly upon the administrator, does not faith depend upon hearing, and does not hearing depend upon the preacher? Do not multitudinous blessings for mankind wait on human agency?

5. Again, it is argued that if baptism be a remitting ordinance it is difficult to see why it is not repeated. The difficulty will disappear when it is remembered that it is also an initial ordinance. If an Englishman naturalized in America commit an offense he does not have to be re-naturalized to receive pardon. Then, too, let it be remembered, thankfully, that baptism is not a remitting ordinance only. It is very much more than that, as we shall see a little farther on.

6. But I hasten to weigh the sixth objection to the view that remission accompanies baptism, namely, that it leaves "unexplained" the large group of passages which connect remission with faith, "entirely exclusive of baptism." It is worthy of remark that it does not contradict them. Later, it may be shown that it fully harmonizes with them; may be inferred from or found supplemental to them. "It is scarcely conceivable," says the author at this point, "that if baptism were a necessary condition to the actual remission of sins it would ever be omitted in the statements by Biblical writers of the conditions of salvation."

To this it may be replied that even repentance itself is often omitted in those statements. It is omitted in six out of the seven Bible references in the author's first group and in eleven out of twelve quotations of Scripture in his second group, and yet all agree that repentance is a necessary condition to actual remission except those who hold to the theory of baptismal regeneration or those who cling to the doctrine of faith-alone as the solitary condition of salvation. Moreover, even faith is sometimes omitted and left to inference as in the conversion of the 3,000 at Pentecost, in 1 Peter 3:21, Titus 3:5, Eph. 5:26 and also in the conspicuous case of Saul of Tarsus. May not baptism, like faith and repentance, even when not specified, be implied always in its proper place and relation? I think it may.

7. Still another objection is urged against this view, the last of the mystical number, seven. It is that it "unites two incompatible things in salvation—the spiritual and the physical," and seems "to place incongruous things in vital relationships." "If a physical act, a religious ceremony, actually secures the unspeakable blessing of the remission of sins, then it is almost inevitable that the preceding spiritual condition, repentance, will wane in importance, and men will gradually adopt a thoroughgoing sacramental theology at all points." The objection is clearly and strongly stated. We have come at last to the very heart of the matter.

I admit that if baptism were only "a physical act," simply "a religious ceremony," it would seem "incongruous" in our spiritual religion to connect it so closely, as has been seen, with remission and regeneration. I have already said that "the better part of baptism" does not rest with the administrator. The spiritual side of the ordinance is larger than the physical and more important. I am sure it could not have been regarded as only a physical or ceremonial act by the Apostle Peter, when he described it as "not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the interrogation of a good conscience toward God, through the resurrection of Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. 3:21). To consider it a merely physical act was in Peter's spiritual estimation to degrade it. Such a conception he rejected with instant, fervent and intelligent zeal for his Lord and his holy appointment. To him it had faith in it; it had repentance in it; it had conscience in it; it had earnest seeking after God and prayer in it; it had the crucifixion of the old life in it; it had the burial of the sinful heart in it; it had the power of "the resurrection of Christ" in it. When baptism loses its spiritual content it will be an anomalous, useless and discordant thing in Christianity. It is holy baptism; it is like John's baptism from heaven, not of men; it has a soul, not a body only. There is not in the whole Christian economy one purely ceremonial thing. A striking, splendid peculiarity of Christianity is the union and harmony it presents between the spiritual and physical. As the enraptured seer beheld the King in his palace and upon his throne, and heard the angels sing from their superior vision, "The Whole Earth is Full of His Glory," so may we exclaim of baptism and the Lord's supper, and the Lord's day, and God's Word, "They are full of his glory."

As an initial ordinance baptism introduces one into Christ, into his death, his resurrection, into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit—into all that is revealed or known of God (Matt. 28:19). The glory of spirituality burns in the ceremonial of the new dispensation as the lowly bush burned before Moses and was not consumed. As when Jesus in his transfiguration manifested through his physical face and form, and even his garments, the inexpressible glow of the spiritual and celestial, so I believe that baptism in God's sight is far more spiritual than physical, and we need only to stand with Jesus upon the mount of vision to see it so.

But I must not dwell too long on this enchanting truth. It may suffice to refer to the second chapter of Colossians and the third of Galatians, and the sixth of Romans, to remind you that the form of baptism was not then under discussion, but its aim, purpose or design inspired the apostle's thought. He presents not its physical but its spiritual aspect. Baptized into his death; buried with him; raised with him to walk in the new life; planted together in the likeness of his death; made like him in his resurrection. As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye were raised with him through faith in the working of God, who raised Christ from the dead." But one may say those passages are figurative, metaphorical or symbolical. Be it so. Then the glory of the symbol swallows up the physical. I prefer to call them spiritual phases of baptism. Only let baptism retain the spiritual character and occupy the princely place which Jesus gave it as an initial ordinance, when he linked it with the promise of remission and the gift of the Holy Spirit, and crowned it after his resurrection with his own exalted name, and there can be no danger of a thoroughgoing sacramentalism. Do n t degrade it into a mere ceremony, a physical act only, beautiful as a symbol but empty of all spiritual content, "incompatible" with the spiritual and "incongruous" with repentance and faith.

I do not put baptism on an exact par with faith or repentance. I would not lift baptism to the skies by dragging faith and repentance down. Neither do I believe in exalting these at the expense of baptism. Faith may exist without baptism, but baptism can not occur without faith. It is a fruit of faith, an obedience of faith, and partakes of the same spiritual principle. Faith and baptism are not two successive steps in order to remission of sins, for faith does not halt nor end. It is a continuous stream, running through and concurrent with the baptismal act and flowing on, increasing as it flows. Likewise, repentance has always been essential to salvation, and must be. As there can be no burial of the dead without death, so there can be no Christian baptism without repentance.

Our brother, in his paper, has said, and has impressed upon us the saying, that the two groups of Scripture passages used are "closed circles" of teaching. I do not think so. I do not concede that there are any closed circles of teaching in the New Testament that may not be opened to and interpreted by other portions of Scripture. Take a few examples in the groups. One is Acts 16:31, in which Paul and Silas said to the Philippian jailer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." From what speedily followed we learn that the very terms of the Lord's commission were observed—he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved—and the rejoicing of assurance succeeded. The jailer was told to believe on the Lord. In the next verse it is reported that they preached the Word to him and his household, and in the next verse it is said he was baptized immediately. If the circle had been extended over two succeeding verses it would not have been faith alone in this case, but faith and baptism, as in the commission. Another passage in the faith-alone circle is John 3:18, and another is John 3:14,15. If the circle had covered only the first part of that same chapter, had taken in the declaration of Christ to Nicodemus, spoken in the same connection, time and place, that, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God," it would have joined another of these "incompatible" passages in the other group. Still another verse of Scripture, found in the fifth chapter of Romans, is put into the closed circle with faith "exclusive of baptism," while in the following, sixth chapter, and in the same connection, Paul tells at length the relationship of baptism to salvation and life in Christ. If the faith-alone circle excludes baptism, making no reference thereto, then eleven out of the twelve passages exclude repentance also, for only one of the twelve mentions it. The author's reference to the sick of the palsy, to Zaccheus the publican, and the robber dying on the cross, showing that their salvation was coupled immediately with remission (without baptism), can not apply to those saved under the new covenant, after the resurrection and the giving of the great commission, for until then no one had been baptized into Christ.

It is important to notice also that although one is said to be justified by faith he is not said anywhere in the Bible to have been justified by faith only. James declares plainly that faith alone is dead faith, inoperative faith. True faith works by love, bears fruits and finds expression in obedience. But the closing of the circles would not be so misleading if too much were not claimed for the second and too little for the first, so that

By F. D. Power

I have always been interested in Ephesus. Before coming to Asia I knew I should see only a beggarly Arab village and some old ruins, but I cared more for these ruins than for stately Smyrna. When we were struggling in our poverty, during my early years with the Vermont Avenue Church, an old unsightly desk was used for the pulpit, and a disreputable and dilapidated hair cloth sofa for the pulpit seat. I conceived a scheme to get a hundred dollars by a course of lectures and fix up the place with a better outfit. I asked my friend Sunset Cox, of New York, if he would be one of the lecturers, saying I expected Mr. Garfield, also to speak for me. He said: "If Garfield will do so, I will; and I will speak for you on 'The Tenth Muse, or the Poetry of Mechanism.'" I told the general Mr. Cox would help me if he would. Garfield said: "I would like to, but I can't afford to make a poor speech, and I have not time to prepare myself." He yielded finally. My friend Mr. Waddell, of North Carolina, consented to be one of my speakers, and would discuss "Morse and Mauvy: Two Americans," and another congressional friend, Mr. Townsend, of New York, who had a theory about the Phoenicians being the discoverers of America, agreed to discuss, "The Phoenicians." So I announced my "Star Course of Lectures."

Garfield's theme was, "The Recent Discoveries at Ephesus." He had given hours that winter to Wood's Work at Ephesus and this was a digest of Wood's book, with his own comments and original observations. When the evening came there was an awful downpour of rain. I went for my lecturer in a closed carriage. I said: "I am sorry you have such a night." He said: "You have sold your tickets, haven't you, and got the money?" "Yes," I answered, "but I wanted you to have a good audience." "Don't worry," was his reply. He had himself drawn his map of Ephesus, and stood on the platform with a pointer in his hand, and delivered one of the noblest addresses I ever heard, to a small gathering of people who braved the storm. There was no printed report of it. I remember how he spoke of the spirit of literary criticism or skepticism which brands Homer as a myth and the Iliad as idle tales, and the history of early Rome as a fancy, and even pronounces the great poet, "Will Shakespeare, the deer stealer." How he declared if Thomas Arnold, the great teacher, who gave way to this spirit, had lived to read the words of Mathew Arnold, his son, wherein he denied the existence of God, he would have seen the result to its full fruitage of this spirit. How he showed that the discoveries of recent time had increased the faith of men in history, antiquity and tradition. He then sketched the history of Ephesus and showed that so long as she maintained her religious faith, she lived; that when that was given up her civilization decayed; how when the soul of a nation goes out her civilization decays, and the monuments of Ephesus were eloquent of unfaith.

It was a great speech. I got my new desk, and the chairs that are still used in the Vermont Avenue pulpit. I said to him afterward, as Ingersoll was making a great noise at the time in Washington, I wished he would write out the lecture and give it to me, as such an utterance from him would be potent in offsetting Ingersoll's blasphemy. He said: "I can't write it out. But Ingersoll is not doing the harm you imagine. People may go to listen to his oratory but they don't believe what he says."

Now I have seen for myself the ruins of ancient Ephesus. I was not disappointed. It is worth a great deal to see it. From Smyrna it is 48 miles by rail. The road is along a pleasant valley which marks the highway between Smyrna and Ephesus from time immemorial. Green verdure and blooming fruit trees, peasants at work in the fields, numerous caravans of camels moving slowly along the road, the ships of the desert not unlike a string of turkeys going up to a Thanksgiving market, fields of grapes and fig trees and olive trees, and the distant range of mountains with Olympus towering above all, its snowy top glistening in the sun—all made the journey one of unusual interest. We got off at the miserable little village and our first sight was the old Byzantine Aqueduct with high pillars, on which jackdaws have their nests. Ephesus is very old, prehistoric. Carians and Phoenicians knew it long before the Greeks. Alexander the Great brought it into prominence as a Greek center, by erecting magnificent public buildings, theaters and temples. Then the Romans made it their capital and chief commercial mart in all Asia. One sees from the stately ruins it must have been one of the greatest and most magnificent of cities. The Goths destroyed the temple of Diana in 263, though the story goes that Erostratus set fire to it to perpetuate his name. Christianity flourished long in this city where Paul, Timothy and John did much of their work. Six councils assembled here, and at that of 431 the Virgin was proclaimed "the Mother of God." When Constantinople began to rise Ephesus declined, its magnificent harbor filled up, and it fell into hopeless decay. The Turks became its masters in 1116. One can hardly realize that this was ever a great city, but the broken walls and pillars on every side fill him with amazement and admiration. Here are the massive arches of the Aqueduct and Gates of Magnesia, the remnants of a great gymnasium and of a Roman temple, the wool market and the Odeon, a Byzantine church and an Agora or market place, and above all the Great Theatre. The Artemisium, or Temple of Diana, called one of the seven wonders of the world, was one of the most magnificent structures of ancient times. Pliny says it was 425 feet long, by 225 wide, and with 127 great columns supporting its roof. Only the remains of the substructure and pavement are now left and a great mass of marble fragments. Other ruins are the Church of St. John, the Double Church in which the third Ecumenical Council was held, the Stadium and the Praetorium, the great Mosque and the Marble Hall. One could wander for days among these impressive memorials of the past. Unlike those in Athens they have never been patched up, but are just as left by the hand of the spoiler, with broken capitals, half buried pillars, shattered inscriptions and falling arches, wreathed often in vines and flowering plants to hide their desolation.

Paul's work at Ephesus would alone make it immortal. He remained here longer than at any other place during his active ministry (Acts 19:1-20.) Ephesus was the metropolis of proconsular Asia and the third capital of Christianity, as Jerusalem was the birth place and Antioch the center of foreign missions. Preparation for Paul's labor had been made by Apollos who had instructed a small number of Jews up to the twilight of John the Baptist's teaching. There were just twelve here who knew not that there was a Holy Spirit. From Paul's friends, Aquila and Priscilla, Apollos had learned the Gospel. For three months Paul labored in Ephesus among the Jews and enquiring Gentiles, but when Jewish opposition endangered the work, for the first time he called the believers out of the synagogue. Over two years he continued, making tents during the week and preaching

REPAIRING BRAIN

A Certain Way By Food.

Every minister, lawyer, journalist, physician, author or business man is forced under pressure of modern conditions to the active and sometimes over-active use of the brain.

Analysis of the excreta thrown out by the pores shows that brain work breaks down the phosphate of potash, separating it from its heavier companion, albumen, and plain common sense teaches that this elemental principle must be introduced into the body anew each day, if we would replace the loss and rebuild the brain tissue.

We know that the phosphate of potash, as presented in certain field grains, has an affinity for albumen and that is the only way gray matter in the brain can be built. It will not answer to take the crude phosphate of potash of the drug shop, for nature rejects it. The elemental mineral must be presented through food directly from Nature's laboratory.

These facts have been made use of in the manufacture of Grape-Nuts, and any brain worker can prove the value of the proper selection of food by making free use of Grape-Nuts for ten days or two weeks. Sold by grocers everywhere (and in immense quantities). Manufactured by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

on the Jewish Sabbath. Most of the seven churches of Asia were founded by him at this time, all of which are in the vicinity of Ephesus.

Nothing interested me so much as the ruins of the old theater. It is beautiful yet with its marbles. Off toward the Mediterranean one sees the old harbor, the mountains and the distant sea. Near by was a solitary shepherd, with his flock feeding, whose dogs ran toward us barking. Close by were a half dozen Bedouins on their little sinewy horses. A Turkish soldier with his gun on his shoulder stood watching. Yet, standing upon the proscenium, and recalling the thrilling scenes so vividly recorded in the nineteenth of Acts, I forgot the present day surroundings. I could see Demetrius, the silversmith, fearing that the new teaching of Paul would turn the minds of the people away from his little temple models, shouting at the head of the riot he had stirred up: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" and I could fancy Paul, for two hours trying to make himself heard in the presence of the howling and furious mob, which is appeased at last only by the authority of the town clerk. It is not difficult to live over the scene in the midst of such surroundings. Inscriptions are here, and pillars are here, on which Paul's eyes rested, and which were here when 25,000 people gathered within these walls in a single assembly. They have all passed by and all that lives of Ephesus is in that wonderful story in Acts and that great epistle to the Ephesians.

We journeyed back and came down to real life in the little hotel where they served us macaroni and what seemed to be camel steaks from some ancient ship of the desert, perhaps coming down from Paul's time, and half done Irish potatoes, and Ephesian figs and oranges. Taking the train we were soon hurrying away from the old ruins back to Smyrna, but with the vision of Paul and Timothy and John the aged before our vision. Not far away is Patmos and all this soil seems sacred.

Education at the Congress

$25,000 for Butler.

Owing to lack of space, we were unable to give any account of the sessions held at Butler College during the meeting of the Congress. Thursday afternoon a large number of friends of Butler College, and those interested in educational matters, assembled in Athenæum Hall, at Irvington, when Mr. Hilton U. Brown, chairman of the board of Butler College, presided. Harry G. Hill read a short paper on organized effort among the Disciples in behalf of our colleges and universities, and showed that our history had not been marked in any of its phases by strong organization. Especially was this true of our educational work, of which the "rank and file" of our brotherhood is remarkably ignorant. Our colleges, he said, are ours only because they serve us, not because we have done anything material for them, and it is the miracle of our movement that we have any colleges at all. Mr. Brown said he often asked the brethren, how can a college have a beautiful environment when its faculty is starving? State institutions, he declared, are spending as much every year as our whole brotherhood has in endowment and property. Our church, he urged, ought to maintain high grade institutions commensurate with our great movement. Money and men are needed. J. H. Garrison said that as theorists on the subject of education we are a unit. We acknowledge our sins every time we get together, but our men of wealth stand aloof from our educational institutions. He told of one college president who had not received enough in the way of salary to buy a single loaf of bread, and he had been thinking since coming out to Butler of a young man who had almost laid down his life for the raising of an endowment of $250,000 for that institution. Carl Johann said if colleges lack in efficiency it is largely due to financial conditions. How can we keep good men in our faculties when other colleges can pay so much larger salaries? It costs more to maintain a single gun in one of our big battleships than it does to pay the salary of a professor in any of our colleges for a whole year. Brother Johann told an anecdote. A little boy, riding on a broomstick, was going along saying "toot-toot." His little sister was some distance behind him. He was asked why he did not wait for her, and replied, "I am the automobile, and she is the gasoline smell." Our colleges, said Brother Johann, have been the gasoline smell of the church from the beginning. I. J. Spencer thought it is the obligation of churches to be responsible for the support of the teachers in our colleges, for their life-work is as sacred and important as the work of any preacher or any missionary. W. T. Moore thought preachers, in the first place, are to blame for the present state of things, and second, the churches. He spoke of the encouragement he received in his own young manhood to enter the ministry, and referred to a class that came under his notice recently where not one of the young men had had any encouragement from their own churches to take up the work of the ministry. Carey Morgan said most of our churches do not know anything of our schools, and he hoped the day would come speedily when our preachers would be ashamed not to observe Education Day just as many of them are now ashamed not to observe the first Lord's day in March. R. G. Sears spoke of the need for some institution where our young men could take post-graduate work, instead of being compelled to go to Chicago and eastern schools. What library in any of our colleges, he asked, is first-class? A. McLean believed our colleges must lead, and that they must be in full sympathy with the brotherhood and its aims. Brother McLean's remarks were approved by some of the preachers present, but on the whole, the college men hardly agreed with his speech. He thought the trustees ought to be all profoundly concerned with the success of our work, and that endowment ought to be for endowment. Further, with every professor our plea ought to be a passion; in other words, our colleges must be our colleges. Some of the professors, he thought, needed a little gasoline behind them, and should be more enterprising. He suggested that they ought to go out during vacation and evangelize. He believed in the college passion. Harvard and other institutions are, he said, getting money from the third and fourth generations, and the parents and graduates of our own colleges ought to want to send their children to no other college than their own alma mater. Prof. J. D. Forrest pointed out that the interest of the college is wider than merely the ministerial student. He thought there should be more done in the way of spreading information of our own college work, and agreed that

ONE IN THREE

Every Third Person Poisoned By Coffee.

It is difficult to make people believe that coffee is an absolute poison to at least one person out of every three, but people are slowly finding it out, although thousands of them suffer terribly before they discover the fact.

A New York hotel man says: "Each time after drinking coffee I became restless, nervous and excited, so that I was unable to sit five minutes in one place, was also inclined to vomit and suffered from loss of sleep, which got worse and worse.

"A lady said that perhaps coffee was the cause of my trouble, and suggested that I try Postum Food Coffee. I laughed at the thought that coffee hurt me, but she insisted so hard that I finally had some Postum made. I have been using it in place of coffee ever since, for I noticed that all my former nervousness and irritation disappeared. I began to sleep perfectly, and the Postum tasted as good or better than the old coffee, so what was the use of sticking to a beverage that was ruining me?

"One day on an excursion up the country I remarked to a young lady friend on her greatly improved appearance. She explained that some time before she had quit using coffee and taken Postum. She had gained a number of pounds and her former palpitation of the heart, humming in the ears, trembling of the hands and legs and other disagreeable feelings had disappeared. She recommended me to quit coffee and take Postum and was very much surprised to find that I had already made the change.

"She said her brother had also received great benefits from leaving off coffee and taking on Postum Food Coffee."

"There's a reason."

—J. A. Deatherage writes us that the brethren at Harrison, Ark., are now planning a church building which will cost $8,000. He has just begun an evangelistic meeting at Cotter, Ark., and asks members of the Christian Church who desire to locate at that place to address him there.

—The first church of Disciples of Christ in New York City, known to many brethren as the Fifty-sixth Street Church, has been having its troubles. We hope that these are about at an end, for we learn that the church has extended to Miner Lee Bates, of Orange, N. J., an earnest and unanimous call to its pastorate. Brother Bates will probably take up his work in the summer or as soon as a successor can be secured for East Orange. He is one of our brightest young men, and we trust that New York brethren will rally around him to do the work that they can do only when they are united and enthusiastic in the support of their preacher.

—We are glad to know that William Woods College, Fulton, Mo., has received funds for the erection of an auditorium, to be known as the D. M. Dulany auditorium. It will cost about $20,000, and is due to the gift of $7,500 from Mrs. Mary Dulany. Dr. Woods duplicated this amount, and also the $2,500 given on the annuity plan by E. L. Edwards, of Fulton. The new auditorium is to have a seating capacity of not less than one thousand.

—The commencement exercises of Add-Ran-Jarvis College, Thorp Spring, Texas, will be held May 18-23. This is the institution over which Brethren A. and R. Clark preside. Among those to take part are J. B. Eskridge, Homer T. Wilson, Prof. J. C. Smith, Major and Mrs. J. J. Jarvis, the Hon. C. K. Bell, Brethren Clark and many old students. The railroads have made special rates for the occasion, and ample provision has been made for the entertainment of all friends of Add-Ran, who are cordially invited to be present.

—Bro. G. A. Hoffmann and family have had a narrow escape through their residence taking fire when they were all asleep. At about 3 o'clock in the morning Mrs. Hoffmann was awakened by the smoke and heard the crackling of the flames. Fortunately, the fire had not obtained sufficient headway to prevent the escape of all the inmates of the house, and the saving of some of the furniture. The loss, however, will amount to some $1,500 in money value and quite a number of things that can not be replaced.

A Practical Contribution.

On the day following the earthquake at San Francisco, Borden's Condensed Milk Company contributed and had under way to the devastated city, from one of their Pacific Coast factories, two carloads of condensed milk and cream, aggregating 50,000 cans, the value of which was more than $5,000. Speaking of milk, the three-page illustrated article which appears in the April 26th issue of "Leslie's Weekly," relating to the methods employed in the production of the products of Borden's Condensed Milk Co., is a story which one should read who is interested in the problem of pure food.

—The Ninth District (Kansas) Missionary Convention will be held at Norcatur, May 22, 23. Among the speakers will be Edmond Church, Wallace C. Payne, W. S. Lowe, W. S. Coleman, Samuel Teaford, B. W. Mulkey, J. Ed. Stevens, A. L. Drummond, A. R. Poe, W. A. Hill, Mrs. H. B. Wallace, Mrs. Jennie Dean, Mrs. J. W. Henderson, Miss Ethel Palmer, Mrs. Emma Coppage.

—O. E. Palmer has decided not to continue with the church at Armour, S. D., but will accept a call to the church at Napa, Cal. During his ministry of two years and four months at Armour the church there has paid off a debt of $300, while the membership has been increased 38 per cent and the work strengthened in every department. A successor to Brother Palmer has not yet been chosen. Mrs. Charles Kyte is the church clerk. The state board has appointed F. A. Smith, Verdon, S. D., to fill the balance of the term of corresponding secretary. Matter pertaining to the program of the coming convention should be addressed to A. O. Swartwood, Miller, S. D. The convention is to be held at Brookings in June.

Missouri State Bible School Work.

Reports from field workers are cheering. R. B. Havener put in five schools during March. Horace Siberell, besides holding a number of institutes, held a meeting and organized a church at Sikeston. H. G. Bennett held a profitable institute at Lathrop, which resulted in a teacher-training class. He is now holding a meeting at Georgetown, Ill., but will be back in the work in Missouri by the time these lines are in print. He will be subject to the call of the brethren for institute work until the meeting of the convention in June. Write him, care of the Superintendent, 311 Century building, and keep him busy.

The state superintendent held institutes at Plattsburg, Richmond, Appleton City, Deepwater and Albany. The pastors at these places, J. P. Pinkerton, H. S. Saxby, J. I. Orrison and C. H. Mattox, rendered the secretary every assistance in their power and showed themselves true leaders of men. The teacher-training work was received with much favor and classes have been, or likely will be, formed in all of these places.

Our next engagements for institute work are Columbia, Marionville, Maryville and several other points, the dates for which have not yet been definitely settled upon. Our correspondence is beginning to indicate a wide-spread interest in the state convention to meet at Hannibal, June 15-20, and unless present indications are deceptive there will be a great gathering at that time.

In order that we may be thoroughly ready for this great convention, it is highly important that every Sunday-school that has not yet sent something to our treasury, do so at once. Many schools have sent only a part of what they pledged and a great many have sent nothing at all this year. "Time enough yet" is dangerous in a general way, but in connection with this subject, it is absolutely perilous.

J. H. HARDIN,
State Superintendent, Kansas City, Mo.

HE CURES CANCER

Success Makes Removal Necessary.

Dr. E. O. Smith, whose sanitarium has heretofore been located at the corner of 29th and Cherry streets, Kansas City, Mo., has been compelled to remove to a larger building. Dr. Smith's address is now 201 Wabash ave., Kansas City, Mo., where he has bought and fitted up one of the most complete sanitariums in the country, overlooking one of Kansas City's beautiful parks.

A Magnanimous Gift.

The Board of Ministerial Relief has recently received a gift of $4,500 first preferred stock in the Simmons Hardware Company, of St. Louis, Mo., which stock is now worth on the market something over $6,0 o. This investment was made by Mr. Robert H. Stockton, of St. Louis, by request of his deceased wife, Mrs. Bettie Mae Stockton. This investment idea was original with Mrs. Stockton, and it was the good pleasure of her husband to carry out the same. With no other idea than to serve the cause of their Master, by providing a source of perpetual income for the support of worthy, needy old preachers, these good people planned and executed this good deed.

The gift has been placed in the permanent fund of the Board, and, as Brother Stockton does not seek notoriety, by his request this will be known as the "Bettie Mae Stockton Fund." As the interest only will be used, the fund becomes a source of perpetual income. As now invested, the returns amount to something over $300 a year. Brother and Sister Stockton were much interested in the work and welfare of the Christian Church. It was the delight of Sister Stockton to be doing something that would be of practical benefit to others. Although an invalid for some years before her death, she always delighted in the association of her friends and in various ways sought their pleasure and comfort. In this gift she and her husband express their appreciation of the labor and sacrifices, and their desire for the welfare of those whose lives have been given to the service of the Master's cause. It is a beautiful expression of the spirit of the Master in the disciple.

Mrs. Bettie Mae Stockton

In whose memory her husband, Mr. R. H. Stockton, has helped the Board of Ministerial Relief and contributed toward the erection of the new Hamilton Avenue Christian Church, St. Louis, dedicated last Lord's day.

Concerning the work of this board, or gifts to the support of this work, address, Board of Ministerial Relief, No. 120 East Market street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Missouri Sisters and the Hannibal Convention.

Dear Sisters of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions of Missouri:

Rapidly the weeks roll off. The date is near for our state convention, but it is not too late to raise the rally cry and sound it round and round—"A delegate from each auxiliary in the state." The Hannibal sisters send you greeting, and will give you a warm, heart-felt welcome. We are not of the hub, but on the rim of the state, where the grand old Mississippi flows, boasting of our beautiful bluffs, hills and valleys, a "Lovers' Leap" and "Mark Twain" Cave. Come and let us rejoice together in the advancement of our Master's cause, and plan for greater victories in his name. We extend you a cordial invitation.

Mrs. Thos. Chinning, Pres.
Mrs. Samuel Schultz, Sec. of the Hannibal Auxiliary.

President Mullins at the Christian Congress.

On other pages we give the main part of President Mullins' address before the Christian Congress, Indianapolis, last week, and along with it some further report of some of the other papers. In response to questions President Mullins gave us the following impressions he received at Indianapolis:

1 "I was impressed with the ability of the body. It was composed of a group of very representative men, pastors, teachers, business men—it was a noble body and a large one.

2. "I was impressed that there is to-day more unity of views on points used to be debated than most of our people know.

3. "I do not believe the time is ripe to attempt organic union, for the reason that the two denominations as wholes can not be said to agree on points enough to attempt union now.

4. "There are, however, fewer obstacles between large segments of both denominations than between almost any other two religious bodies. There are also large segments of both between which there are serious obstacles.

5. "It is very desirable and in accord with the spirit of Christ for the unity of his followers, that Baptists and Disciples hold friendly conferences with each other more frequently than they have done. This would tend to take the acrimony out of the relations of the two denominations, and prepare the way to a more sympathetic attitude on points of difference.

6. "I would like to see promulgated some statement from representative men of both denominations showing the present doctrinal status as relates to both, not as a basis of union, for no one has any authority to put forth such a statement, but simply for information and as a means of educating the membership of both bodies as to the actual facts of the situation. I suggested that something of this kind of an informal character be undertaken if it met with favorable reception on the part of the congress.

7. "I received a most cordial welcome at the congress. The spirit was the most fraternal in every way and the occasion was to me full of delightful fellowship."

Our information is that President Mullins received distinguished consideration, and that his paper called forth a general discussion which was followed up by a number of pleasant personal discussions.—"The Baptist Argus."

The Preacher Will Make It Up.

As the time for our Missouri state meeting approaches, I am concerned about our permanent fund. It does seem that it would be an easy task to raise $15,000 among so great and numerous a people. It would be if all understood the necessity for it; but if this work is put upon one man, then it becomes a great undertaking. If the pastors of our leading churches will present this matter to their people the money will be forthcoming. I appeal to the preachers of Missouri to lay this matter upon their hearts and upon the hearts of the churches to which they minister. In the New London and Bowling Green churches we have raised $325 for this fund. We expect to make it $500 by June 15. What the churches fall short of this amount the preacher will pay. Surely we will meet Brother Long's generous offer to give $5,000 to this fund if the entire brotherhood will raise $15,000.—E. M. Richmond, Bowling Green, Mo.

Home Again—Many Thanks.

After an absence of nearly three months abroad, Mrs. Carpenter and I have returned to our home, with our faith in the old Book intensified, and our love and loyalty in Jesus Christ stronger than ever before. The trip was a most delightful and profitable one. We shall ever thank God that the dream of our lives is no longer a dream, but a reality. We have come home to try and do better work for the Master than ever before.

The cost of the trip for the two of us was, in round numbers, $1,500. Of this amount a dear friend in Chicago very generously donated $100. Other friends in different parts of the country donated another $100, and the churches and preachers nearly $200 more, making about $400 donated to us. We desire from the depths of our hearts to thank the kind ones who gave this $400. We shall always remember them with gratitude, and pray that God's richest and best blessings may be theirs.

Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Carpenter.

President Zollars' Resignation.

I wish to state to the readers of The Christian-Evangelist that I have tendered my resignation as president of Texas Christian University, to take effect at the close of the present school year in June. This will, no doubt, be a surprise to many who have been observing the work that has been going on here. I am sure those who know me will feel that I have reasons for resigning that, to myself at least, are good and sufficient. I am acting conscientiously and with the desire uppermost in my heart that the work of the Master shall be advanced. For eighteen consecutive years I have been doing a very laborious work as a college president. In addition to the executive duties of the office I have done the work of an average college professor and have given much time to raising money for current expenses, endowment, building, etc. My friends insist that I ought to take a rest. This may be true, but I know myself so well that I fear that I would not be happy without employment. Several openings for work have already presented themselves to me, but I shall act with deliberation, trusting that I may be divinely directed in choosing my final field of labor.

E. V. Zollars.

Children's Day Notes.

The Sunday-schools will strive to make up the deficiency in the receipts for foreign missions caused by the stormy Sundays in March. It takes more than bad weather to defeat the boys and girls on children's day.

Several Sunday-schools are planning to raise enough on children's day to support their own missionary on the foreign field. And remember these boys and girls will be the church of the future!

The Sunday-school at Canton, O., has ordered 1,400 missionary boxes and started a great campaign for children's day. This is one of the largest schools in our brotherhood. Some of the others will need to watch their laurels.

Many superintendents are striving to bring their offering up to twice what it was last year. The Sunday-schools believe in advancement.

Reports come from many sources that the new children's day exercise, "Arise, Shine!" is the best yet. It is very popular both with small and large schools.

"Theory vs. Practice," etc.

charge against the Christian bodies of America?

4. Not only is there no difference in principle between what is proposed by federation and the union meeting referred to in Dallas, but such union meetings are the highest and most difficult form of co-operation. If there is any surrender, anywhere, in any line of work with our religious neighbors it would have to be in union meetings. There is not the slightest excuse for it in other lines of work for the promotion of human good. Why Brother Davis should insist that "the difference between the two is vital," in spite of all the facts and explanations and repeated denials, he must answer for himself. We repeat, however, that there is not a principle involved in the federation proposed by the New York conference that is not involved in the union meeting with which Brother Davis has been co-operating. If there were, Brother Davis would point it out; but neither he, nor any one else, has done so. We recognize other religious bodies as "Christian bodies" in co-operating with them in union meetings, else we are hypocrites, and that is all that federation involves.

perhaps to some extent the colleges were to blame; but, undermanned as they were, and with their professors underpaid, it was a difficult thing, he said, to spare men or money for the purpose of organization. He said that when persons were put on the board from some other reason than because they are members of the church, those reasons are likely to be important. He was of the opinion that no good educational purpose would be served by taking the vacations of college teachers from them to send them among the churches on lecturing tours. If their time should be spent in this way their efficiency in the class-room would diminish greatly.

Prof. H. L. Willett brought in the following report from the committee on the educational society which, he said, was a revolutionary report in some respects, but its purpose was to remedy defects and place responsibility back upon the colleges. It was as follows:

"We believe that the educational society has an important function to perform in the promotion of educational interest. It has already secured the adoption of education day in the calendar of the churches. It has prepared and distributed educational information, both through the church papers and special publications. It has secured funds not only for its own support, but for assistance to needy institutions and causes in line with its purpose.

"But the services thus rendered do not meet the needs of the situation. It is apparent that a more vigorous activity is required."

The chief recommendation was that the society be placed more immediately under the supervision of the colleges, the reduction of the dues to $2 a year and the publication of a quarterly bulletin of information.

Immediately after the adoption of this report, Mr. Brown announced the gift of $25,000 by Andrew Carnegie to Butler College, conditioned upon the raising of all the remainder of the $250,000 endowment fund in cash or marketable securities. Mr. J. I. Irwin started the fund with $100,000 upon the same condition, so that there is now needed about $80,000 to make up the complete endowment which the college authorities are seeking to secure.

Supper was served at the Downey Avenue Christian Church, Irvington, by the ladies of that congregation, after which a meeting was held in the chapel of Butler College, presided over by Allan B. Philputt. He referred to the regret of all that President W. E. Garrison was not permitted by the state of his health to be present. He had brought the congress to Indianapolis, and looked forward with such interest to its coming. W. T. Moore offered a resolution that a telegram be sent to President Garrison, announcing Mr. Carnegie's promise, and stating that "the canvass is on." The following addresses were made on the general subject, "The Educational Expression of a Religious Movement," "The Relation of Religion and Civilization," by Prof. Scot Butler; "Educational Developments in Indiana," by Prof. Allen R. Benton, and "The Aims of a Christian College," by Prof. C. B. Coleman.

At the meeting of the congress the following day, President Hieronymus, on behalf of the educational board of directors appointed the day before, offered some resolutions which were accepted by the congress as a basis of operations. These recognized that a new policy for the work of the American Christian Education Society is implied by the report of the committee mentioned above. The responsibility for the success of the association being now placed upon the executive heads of our various institutions of learning, a new organization became necessary. In the new basis of operations, ten college presidents and the occupants of six Bible chairs and the representatives of such other institutions as shall, upon application, be admitted by a majority vote, become the directors. The following constitute the temporary executive committee: Presidents Rowlinson, Hieronymus, Bell, Brown, Cramblet, Jenkins and Johann, the first two being chairman and secretary and treasurer, respectively. Full recognition was given of the work of Harry G. Hill, the retiring secretary, and his sacrifice, courtesy and generosity in releasing the society of all financial obligations to him was especially mentioned. As to finances, it was agreed that old pledges shall not be called for, though the amounts due on them will be gladly received. The new membership fee is to consist of $2. A permanent organization is to be effected at the Buffalo convention.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Another Good Meeting by Spencer and Douthit.

For the past year I have preached one-half time at Woodward and one-half time at Mutual. After Bros. E. V. Spicer and E. M. Douthit closed the meeting at Woodward they held a three weeks' meeting at Mutual. Considering the almost continual inclement weather, this was a great meeting; 58 were added to the church by obedience and relation and 4 were baptized who have not yet put in their membership. Mutual is a small country town, situated in the southeast corner of Woodward county, in the heart of the rich farming district known as Persimmon Flats. The church at Mutual is now one of the strongest churches to be found in Oklahoma. The membership, now nearly 100, is made up of prosperous, God fearing people, who love the cause. The brethren are able and willing to pay an able minister for full time. Woodward demands my full time. The brother who is to preach at Mutual will soon be here. His will be a pleasant work.—Ed S. McKinney, Mutual, Okla.

Kansas City Notes.

At the meeting of the ministers of our churches of Greater Kansas City, reports for Easter were all flattering. When summed up, it was found that the attendance at our Sunday-schools, including missions, was not less than 4,000. The number reported as added to the church was 61. All the preachers except two were present at the meeting. Some of the Sunday-schools had taken an offering for the Christian Orphans' Home. The Junior Endeavor Society had charge of the evening service at several of the churches, notably Hyde Park, Jackson Avenue, Budd Park, Sheffield, South Side and Forest Avenue. Good offerings were received as a result of the Junior department of our C. W. B. M. work. All the brethren were encouraged by reason of the evidences of growth throughout the churches in the city. The face of Bro. E. L. Ely is already becoming familiar to those who make up this meeting. He came from Boone, Ia., and is now ministering to the North Side Church of Kansas City, Kan.——J. J. Morgan, pastor of the South Prospect Church, is still wrestling with an attack of pleurisy. He was attacked on March 26 and may be laid up a few weeks yet.——Prof. E. C. White, a member of the First Church, and for more than 30 years connected with the Kansas City High School, the greater part of the time as principal, is suffering as a result of an attack from which his friends can not hope for a speedy recovery.——W. F. Richardson returned to his church after an absence of more than five weeks. A large congregation, including many of the children and young people, greeted him. In the ministers' meeting he spoke of his trip to the island of Jamaica in the interests of our C. W. B. M. mission work.——Dr. W. T. Moore recently gave five lectures on "The Philosophy of Our Plea" at the South Prospect Church. He covered the ground pretty much as in his recent book on the subject. The sickness of Brother Morgan and other causes prevented Brother Moore from having a very large hearing. All who heard him were pleased with his thoughtful treatment of the subject.——A meeting closed at the South Side Church on April 12. J. T. McGarvey, minister of the Warrensburg church, was the evangelist. The singing was conducted by a voluntary choir, led by Prof. C. E. Parker, of the Hyde Park city school. Thirty-eight were added during the meeting and on the Sunday following. T. P. Haley, pastor of the church, reported at the ministers' meeting that he and his people were greatly pleased with the meeting and the results. They greatly appreciated the work of Brother McGarvey during the two weeks and a half of the meeting.——We buried Sister J. W. Monser in beautiful Elmwood cemetery, April 15. W. F. Richardson conducted the funeral services and paid a tribute to the character of the deceased as a mother and wife. T. P. Haley also spoke of her many sterling qualities. George H. Combs otherwise assisted in the service, which was held at the residence, 514 Quincy street. Many neighbors and friends, including other ministers, were present to pay tribute to the memory of a noble woman and to show sympathy with Brother Monser and their five stalwart sons, who, with their father, were mourning an irreparable loss.—Barclay Meador.

Meyersdale, Pa.

The series of revivals at the Christian church at Meyersdale came to a close after continuing more than five weeks. This revival has proved to be the greatest ever held in this community by any of the churches, and as far as we can ascertain the largest in the county and outlying districts by any one church. That means great things for the Meyersdale church in that Somerset county abounds in wealth, towns and strong churches. In all there were 84 to respond to the invitation. Of this number 28 represent heads of families, 11 husbands, 17 wives, 17 young men and 33 young ladies. There were 66 confessions and baptisms, 12 who came by statement, some yet to be baptized; 25 came from the denominations. Clarence Mitchell was the evangelist for three and one-half weeks, but had to leave to enter the simultaneous movement at Chattanooga, Tenn. George W. Knepper, of Somerset, Pa., concluded the meeting and during his two weeks 28 came forward. The church could not accommodate the crowds; one large theater building was used part of the time. Throughout the past 20 years the church has made a struggle to gain her prestige with the other nine churches of this town. The meeting is deemed a great victory; it nearly doubles the membership. Meyersdale is a town of 5,000 inhabitants. The Wabash, which begins to build this summer, will augment its commercial activity. The main line of the Baltimore and Ohio, from Pittsburg to Washington, runs through Meyersdale. The church rejoices and has hopes of bright future.—Chas. E. Geis, Minister.

Grover Hill, Ohio.

My third meeting at Grover Hill, O., was the best meeting in the history of the church. During four weeks there were 114 additions; 90 per cent were adults—one-eighth of the population. Quite a number of the business men took their stand for Christ. There were 21 husbands and their wives to step over the line. A few came from other organizations and accepted New Testament Christianity. The congregation had been without a pastor for some time, but just a few days before the meeting they secured J. E. Smith for half time. This is his first work, and he starts with promise. The congregation is trying to arrange with him for full time. At the close of the meeting I was invited by the new members to call at the tailor shop and leave my order for a suit of clothes, which was very much appreciated. People were stirred up over Bible questions as never before, men of all character could be seen with their Bibles in hand searching to see if the things heard were true. There were about 90 baptisms. Payne, O., is in need of a good preacher for half time; other points handy, so as to arrange for all time. Write H. Underwood, Payne, O., R. F. D. No. 1.—D. F. Harris, Montpelier, Ind.

Another Forward Move at Brazil, Ind.

The splendid meeting conducted at Brazil by John W. Marshall and his assistant in song, Edward O. Beyer, closed with a reception. There were 169 additions to the church, 122 baptisms and confessions and 47 otherwise. There were 4 confessions before the meeting began and 4 by letter and statement not reported. Many of those by baptism, learning the way of the Lord more perfectly, came from other churches. This city of 12,000 was stirred by the power of the New Testament plea as never before, and the meeting has been the talk of the town. Many heads of families came, especially many husbands came to join their wives, and often husband and wife came forward together. The church is strengthened in its every department, and now has an enrolled membership of more than 600, making it one of the strong churches of the state. After burning out, still in debt on practically a new building, rebuilding and dedicating a much better church and providing for the debt, this successful meeting comes with added cause for joy to this worthy congregation.

John W. Marshall is a teacher and preacher of God's Word of which the whole brotherhood should be proud. He has many strong qualities and he ranks among our best and greatest evangelists. Edward O. Beyer is a consecrated, hard-working helper in every way. He sings, not for entertainment, but to win souls to Christ.—Edward L. Day.

A New Congregation at Sikeston.

John S. Zeran, of Farmington, and I closed a short meeting at Sikeston, Mo., which resulted in the organization of a church of 23 members. They are planning to at once employ Brother Zeran to preach for one-fourth and perhaps half of the time. Sikeston is a growing town in the southeast portion of the state, in the center of very rich farming lands. It is a center of great importance to our people, and should have a strong congregation. There is but little prejudice against us in that place. The citizens are desirous of helping us and, in fact, did help us very materially in the meeting. Brother Zeran is a very fine leader of song, and the community was completely carried away with the music. This is the second church that I have organized in southeast Missouri since taking the work as Bible school evangelist in this part of the state, Jan. 1 last. I wish we could have a few more ministers who are willing to work for a small salary. If you are thinking of making a change, I would be pleased to hear from you, and may be we can help you to find work in this part of the state. Churches looking for a pastor or wishing for a meeting or Bible school institutes would do well to correspond with me. Address me at 1287 Broadway street, Cape Girardeau, Mo.—Horace Siberell.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

A Blessing in the Southland.

We have just closed a good meeting at the First Church, Valdosta, Ga. Robert Graham Frank, of Liberty, Mo., was with us for three and a half weeks. There were 12 additions—6 by letter or statement, 4 by confession and baptism, 1 from the Baptist church and 1 from the Presbyterian church. The Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Christian churches had union services in the afternoons, and there was preaching in all four of the churches at night. This sort of federation will do any community good. Under the influence of our united efforts every saloon in the city, and most of the business houses, closed for the afternoon services.—Richard W. Wallace.

Memphis, Ind.

A great revival at Memphis, with 32 additions, 22 by confession, 7 by statement and 3 by letter, was conducted by Pastor M. E. Genge, of Charlestown, Ind., president of the Christian Association of Clark County. The meeting was held in the town hall, as the Christian church was burned in the fire which swept our town in 1901. Prof. M. L. Davidson had charge of the music. Great interest was manifested throughout the meeting, people driving from five to seven miles in spite of the inclement weather and bad roads. Brother Genge and Prof. Davidson won the hearts of all our people. Brother Genge reorganized our little band of Christian workers, appointing trustees, elders and deacons. We hope in a short time to rebuild our church.—Miss Ella Hawes, Corresponding Secretary Christian Endeavor.

New England.

There are bright prospects for the Hancock Street Church at Everett, Mass. There have been 5 confessions, 5 additions, 2 baptisms, with more to follow this week. We are in the midst of an evangelistic service, with Bro. James McKissick as the evangelist. The church has met the appointed sum of $45 for New England missions and has about doubled the apportionment for foreign missions, which was $30.——Many were saddened by the news of the death of the youngest child of Elder W. W. Robinson. Brother and Sister Robinson have the sympathy of all our people.——The Junior and Intermediate Endeavor Societies held a union service in honor of Brother McKissick, who gave a talk on the "Devil's Mouse Trap."——Brother June teaches a Bible class in the Y. M. C. A. each week.——Mrs. June filled the pulpit at Swampscott on a recent Sunday evening, in order that Brother McKissick and Brother June might be together in the evening service at Everett.——The basement of our church is now near completion. The plastering and wiring have been finished for some time and the floor is to be laid at the close of the special meetings. We are in great need of the room. The Junior work has an enrollment of nearly 60. Our Bible school, under the efficient leadership of F. T. Mellish, is growing.——The Senior Endeavor is making splendid progress because of the untiring efforts of Bro. Andrew McGregor.——At the beginning of the year we received in cash and pledges nearly $600 for our debt clearing fund. By the close of 1906 we expect to make it $700.—Alonzo B. Aldrich, Brockton, Mass.

Christian Colonies in California

GOOD HOMES FOR GOOD PEOPLE.

Howard Kirk, recently from Akron, Ohio, came to the colony after corresponding nearly a year, and when he looked the ground over, he said: "I wish you had gone back to Ohio a year ago and compelled me to come out here then."

We have spent a great deal of money advertising this colony and trying to get you to come and share in these bargains, but we can't afford to go back and compel you to come. It seems that the great catastrophe in San Francisco has frightened people east so that they think there is no safety in California, and all inquiries have ceased since that occurrence. Absolutely no damage was done except in a strip not over fifty miles from the coast. The colony did not suffer a nickel's worth, and I consider it as safe as anywhere in the east.

But we can't afford to advertise for the fun of it. We shall go right on just the same. Next year you will come out and pay at least $25 per acre more for this orchard land. Property will continue to advance, and when you do come you will say, like Brother Kirk, "Why didn't I go back and compel you to come!" This closes my advertising for the present.

In and About Greater New York.

The Disciples of Harvard, Yale and Union theological seminaries had a very profitable fellowship meeting at Yale April 19. Harvard was represented by J. T. McKissick; Yale by H. E. Pritchard, V. Blair, H. E. Brown, S. J. Golightly, W. H. Smith and Mr. Miller; Union and New York City, by R. W. Gentry, J. L. Garvin, Dr. H. L. Martin, Miner Lee Bates, A. J. Wilson and J. C. Todd. After dinner together the men assembled in the missionary library of Yale Divinity School and listened to an address by Miner Lee Bates on federation and heard from Dr. H. L. Willett on "The Future of the Disciples of Christ." Each address was followed by an open parliament participated in by all. Dr. Willett spoke at the Yale chapel Friday morning. The men will have another meeting in the autumn. H. E. Smith was chosen president and J. L. Garvin, secretary.——J. L. Garvin has been supplying the pulpit at the First Church, New York, during the winter. The church has been without a pastor for several months, but hopes to call one by the time this is in print.——B. B. Tyler preached at the First Church the third and fourth Sundays in April. He arrived in New York April 19 from the Orient.——Dr. H. L. Martin has also supplied at the First Church during the winter. He is professor of philosophy in New York Teachers' Training School. Some church would do the brotherhood a great service to tempt him from the school room into the pulpit.

The Chattanooga Campaign.

BY AN EVANGELIST.

At the request of some of the other evangelists I offer a brief report of this campaign. The battle has been fought and the victory won for our four churches in Chattanooga, and the brethren of the city seem to be delighted with the result. The meetings continued four weeks, with results as follows: Sherman Heights Church, W. S. Buchanan and Bert Gardner, evangelists, 60 additions; Highland Park, Clarence D. Mitchell, evangelist, and Henry Schwan, pastor, 83 additions; Walnut Street, R. H. Fife and H. H. Saunders, evangelists, and Ira M. Boswell, pastor, 128 additions. [Brother Fife seems to have omitted Eastlake, where, according to the total, there should have been 58 additions.—Ed.] Total, 329. This is considered great for Chattanooga and that part of Tennessee where our cause is less prosperous than in some of the northern states. The interest in all of these meetings was good from start to finish, and could have been continued with profit two or three weeks longer. But, as usual, the evangelists had other dates to fill after staying the time agreed upon in Chattanooga, and other places were not willing to postpone their meetings.

The Walnut Street Church, where Bro. Ira M. Boswell is pastor, is the mother church of the city, and the Highland Park, Eastlake and Sherman Heights churches are the results of missionary efforts in the rapidly growing suburbs of the city, and have developed in a very short time into flourishing and self-supporting congregations. Bro. Henry Schwan is the pastor at Highland Park, and Bro. M. C. Hart is the pastor at Eastlake. Both are young men of much promise and will succeed in their splendid fields. Brother Boswell is in great favor with his people at Walnut Street, where he is doing a splendid work. At present Sherman Heights is without a pastor, but one will be secured as soon as the right man is found. There is a desire on the part of the pastors and churches in Chattanooga to maintain the most hearty co-operation in all of their work in the city, and a splendid degree of harmony prevails. Each evangelist thought he was with the best church in the city. I am sure there is no finer class of people anywhere than we had at Walnut Street. Brothers Mitchell and Buchanan are too well known as evangelists to need any introduction to our brotherhood. But we have discovered a new man, who is developing splendid evangelistic powers and will be heard from in future efforts. This is Bro. Austin P. Finley, of Lexington, Ky. He is a young man of fine appearance, scholarly and of deep spirituality. He is a success. See his record in this campaign. Bro. Herbert H. Saunders, my singing evangelist, was in great favor with the people, and his popularity made him a very busy man during the campaign. On account of the special needs at Sherman Heights, Bro. Clarence Mitchell, who had two weeks intervening between this and his next date, was induced to continue the work there a few days longer.—Roger H. Fife.

A New Church Building in St. Louis.

The Hamilton Avenue Christian Church, located at the northeast corner of Hamilton avenue and Julian avenue, this city, was dedicated last Lord's day, May 6, J. H. Garrison preaching the dedicatory sermon. The mission from which this church began was organized in 1894 by O. A. Bartholomew, in a small frame chapel built by himself, at the corner of Delaware and Etzel avenues. In the spring of 1895, larger quarters becoming necessary, a vacant lot was purchased on Hamilton and Plymouth avenues and a stone chapel erected, into which the Gilead mission moved, and established it as a regular congregation, under the name of the West End Christian Church, dedicating the building to the service of God the first Lord's day in June, 1895, Brother Bartholomew serving as the pastor until June 1, 1901, when he resigned. Paul Castle was called, but was compelled to give up his work after a short pastorate, on account of failing health. Geo. L. Snively and Frank J. Nicolls filled the pulpit very acceptably next.

In July, 1903, the congregation decided on the name Hamilton Avenue Christian Church, and took out incorporation papers as a church body. July 1, 1904, F. A. Mayhall was called as pastor of the congregation and served acceptably until Oct. 1, 1905, when he resigned from the ministry and entered the profession of law. Lewis Ward McCreary entered upon the pastorate Nov. 1, 1905, and is conducting a most aggressive work.

In the meantime the street car system was extended so that two lines of cars crossed at the corner where the church stood, and the noise from the constant traffic became a source of disturbance to the services. About Jan. 1, 1905, the movement for a new location began to take definite shape. Bro. Robert H. Stockton bought the lot at the northeast corner of Hamilton and Julian avenues, 113x150 feet, and presented the deed to the congregation as a free offering toward the new church. The congregation immediately responded and subscriptions were raised in a short time that have enabled this people to erect and dedicate this splendid edifice, which occupies a space of 80x84 feet, practically free of debt. In fact, one unique feature of the dedication was the fact that no money was asked for, arrangements having been made to pay all bills, so that the church will be absolutely free from debt. This has been made possible by the liberality of Brother Stockton, who has contributed generously with financial gifts in addition to the lot, which he donated as an initial offering; and, while the congregation feels a debt of gratitude to Brother Stockton, it may be fitting to remark here that some of the contributions made by other members of the church represent sacrifices that are rarely seen. Day laborers, salesmen, stenographers, alike contributed with remarkable liberality. One poor woman, a widow, whose only source of livelihood is hard work at $1.25 per day, contributed $50 to the fund and has paid it regularly at the rate of $1 a week. This looks like life's blood, and such sacrifices as this characterize the subscriptions of this people.

The congregation now numbers about 250 active workers. The Sunday-school occupies the basement. The main assembly room is 50x60 feet, with 12-foot ceiling, and large enough to accommodate 500 people easily. Opening from this room are eight large class rooms, accommodating variously from 25 to 75 people. The entire basement is well lighted and ventilated, and is in every way a very superior Sunday-school equipment. The main floor has an auditorium 50x60 feet, accommodating 450 people, with a gallery for 100 more. Opening from the main auditorium are two large parlors, each accommodating about 100 people, and two small reception rooms, each accommodating from 30 to 40 people, in addition to which there are a pastor's study, kitchen and other smaller rooms for various conveniences.

The entire equipment, including the furnishings and lot, will cost about $40,000 when completed. The members of this congregation are to be congratulated upon their success. The leaders, however, all say that they have merely commenced and that out of this work will eventually grow other churches of greater proportions than this. As previously stated, Lewis Ward McCreary is the present pastor. He is a young man and a graduate of Hiram College, Ohio. He was married about a year ago, and is ably assisted in his work by his wife. Brother McCreary is now conducting a revival at the new church, the result of which it is hoped will be large and valuable additions to the work.

Baptism and Remission.

the first may receive no enrichment from the second.

There are the two principles in the New Testament referred to which he calls the spiritual and the physical, the actual and ceremonial. I can not, as I have said, accept the idea that baptism is wholly physical or merely ceremonial. I have shown that the Scriptures contradict it. But I do cheerfully acknowledge that faith and repentance are purely spiritual, or psychical, and that baptism is part spiritual and part physical. There is the internal and the external, the invisible and the visible. The illustration or analogy presented by the Lord's supper is an excellent one. True, the bread and the wine are symbols. They represent the inward spiritual life. It is a memorial, and it is also a communion to the spiritual who discern the inner meaning. These elements, to him who sees beneath the surface, are not regarded as mere bread and wine, not as representing literal dying, but representing the essential spiritual life. Jesus saw in the loaf more than the physical when he said, "This is my body," and more than the wine when he said, "This is my blood." It is the open vision to discern the Lord's body and blood, that men need. It is not transubstantiation but transfiguration that men should realize.

When Jesus said, in John, sixth chapter, I am that bread that came down from heaven, the true bread, spiritual bread, men stumbled. When he said, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood ye have not life in yourselves, and he that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life," many were offended, and said it was a hard saying. He explained that it was not the literal flesh they were to eat, but were to receive the spirit that quickeneth. The words he spoke were spirit and were life. They were to eat of his words instinct with life and quickening and drink of his spirit. If we call the bread Jesus gave the true bread, as he called it, and think of the material only as the covering to the real, an avenue through which to approach and partake of the real, then it seems to me we shall be profited. We may feed upon Christ really in the supper and be joined to him truly in baptism.

I will now notice briefly a few illustrations used in the paper to show the difference between the actual and ceremonial. "The minister pronounced them husband and wife, and the groom placed a ring on the finger of the bride, in order to consummate the ceremony. The ring was symbolic and might have been omitted. The essential thing was the pronouncement by the minister." I suggest that the whole ceremony was ceremonial. The affection back of it and simultaneous with it, the plighting of their vows one to the other, was the essential thing. The union of soul was the spiritual part of the marriage. The ceremony realized the actual; expressed, supplemented and confirmed it. As the bride took the name of the bridegroom only after the ceremony, not before, so always in the New Testament instruction the name of the Bridegroom is taken only in or after baptism; never before.

Another illustration of the author may yield to a slight modification. "In order to complete the interment dust was sprinkled on the casket, the words of the burial service were read and the grave was filled." We infer, of course, that the body was in the casket and the casket in the grave before the grave was filled. Otherwise we might have a closed circle without the physical. True, the sprinkling of dust and the burial service might have been omitted, not because symbolical, but because unnecessary. But to omit baptism is to omit the burial, and to omit a command of the King. He gives one more illustration: "The representatives of the two nations signed the papers and shook hands in order to consummate the treaty." It might read that the representatives believing in the treaty signed it and were glad. The Ethiopian eunuch, believing in Christ, was baptized and went on his way rejoicing; nothing unnecessary omitted nor added. The paper contains this sentence, "The believer is actually saved, his sins are actually remitted without and before baptism." That does not sound like the commission, however. That would make faith the only condition of actual salvation, and baptism not in order to but because of salvation. But our Lord knew where to place his terms.

I would not make baptism a memorial ordinance of one's own salvation. I believe it has to do with present blessings and simultaneous grace in salvation. If Saul's sins had been actually washed away before Ananias said, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord," did Paul know it? Did he ever learn it? He never said so. He doesn't seem to have known it when he wrote to the Romans, Galatians and Colossians, speaking of baptismal death, burial and resurrection.

But the great need in answering the vital question, "What must I do to be saved?" is a "Thus saith the Lord." We know what to do to be saved, according to Mark 16:16, Acts 2:38, Acts 16:31-33, Acts 22:16, but these clear and inspired declarations don't get into groups and closed circles to have no dealings with one another, like the Jews and Samaritans. They mingle freely and unite the spiritual and symbolic elements in salvation. But whatever may be our brother's philosophy I rejoice that practically we are so near together. Our good brother so frankly and fully acknowledges that both faith and baptism, including repentance, are necessarily antecedent to salvation "in the full New Testament sense," that I cheerfully accord to him his theory as to the spiritual and symbolical in connection with salvation. And if that theory is not to be bound on me or on any one and we shall be left free to tell men what to do to be saved according to the very terms of the commission, then I would offer the hand of fellowship to President Mullins both spiritually and symbolically. For after all we agree as to what salvation is, as to its imperative and infinite importance and as to the very terms that secure it instrumentally and their order in obtaining it "in the full a d complete New Testament sense."

DEATH OF JOHN THE BAPTIST. —Mark 6:14-29.

Memory verse, 20.

Golden Text.—Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess.—Eph. 5:18.

We have but few references to the career and work of John the Baptist after the beginning of the ministry of Jesus. His association with Jesus was apparently neither continuous nor intimate. His testimony concerning Jesus and the testimony of Jesus concerning him alike give evidence of the loftiness of his character, his adequate performance of his mission and his appreciation of the character and person of Christ. But the greatest of great men have their limitations. John, who was allied to the old prophets in both nature and mission, did not become an important factor in the preaching of the new kingdom. He announced the approach of the new regime but he did not enter into it. "The least in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he," said Jesus.

John seems to have continued an independent ministry after Jesus began his work. He was baptizing at Ænon (John 3:23-36) when mischief-making Jews tried to stir up jealousy between the two teachers by telling him that Jesus was making more disciples than he. John's reply showed his magnanimity and his understanding of the relation of Jesus to the new Kingdom. "In this is my joy made full. He must increase, but I must decrease."

The imprisonment of John by Herod the tetrarch was the occasion for the departure of Jesus from Judea into Galilee (Matt. 4:12; Mark 1:14). We can not imagine Jesus running away from danger in any cowardly spirit, but his work was yet undone and he had need to preserve himself for his work's sake. He would not use his miraculous power to protect himself so long as ordinary human prudence would suffice.

The other important reference to John is the account of his sending messengers, while he was in prison, to ask Jesus whether he was truly the Christ, or should they look for another. This failure of John's faith indicates, perhaps, not simply the discouragement of a man in prison and in peril of death. Imprisonment had no such effect on Paul's faith. It shows rather that Jesus had in some way failed to correspond to John's idea of what the Messiah should be. It was given to John to proclaim the coming of the Christ, but it was not given to him, any more than to the apostles in the early part of their association with Jesus, to understand the true character of the Messiah and the nature of his work.

We do not know how long John was in prison. The story of his imprisonment and death is not inserted in the chronological order of the occurrences, but is told in connection with Herod's subsequent alarm when he heard of the works of Jesus and supposed it was John risen from the dead. Herod the tetrarch, son of Herod the Great, possessed all the small and mean qualities of his father and none of his more creditable ones. He was crafty, sensuous, cruel and superstitious. His enmity against John was not provoked by the general terms of the forerunner's teaching, but by John's attack upon his own personal sin. It was not religious persecution but personal spite. But he had a superstitious fear of the man whom he imprisoned. Only by the trick of Herodias was he persuaded to put John to death. A hasty oath, sworn carelessly and under the influence of wine, put John's life in the hands of Herodias, and she had neither scruples nor superstitions.

John was a true prophet. It was not without reason that he was called Elijah. Like Elijah, he rebuked sin in high places. He was a stern, just prophet of righteousness preaching the advent of a kingdom of righteousness and rebuking, even in kings' palaces, those whose lives were in contradiction to its principles.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.—Luke 22:7-20.

Welcome, ye hopeful heirs of heaven,
  To this rich feast of Gospel love!
This pledge is but the prelude giv'n
  To that immortal feast above.

How great the blessing, thus to meet,
  According to our Savior's word,
And hold, by faith, communion sweet
  With our unseen, yet present, Lord!

And if so sweet this feast below,
  What will it be to meet above?
Where all we see and feel and know
  Are fruits of everlasting love?

In sweet communion: The promise of heavenly communion (Matt. 26:20-30); disloyalty even at the Lord's table (Mk. 14:17-21); providential preparation for its institution (Lu. 22:7-13); communion humility (Jno. 13:12-20); early services (Acts 2:43-47); Pauline ethics (1 Cor. 11:20-33); to be kept in memory and honored in practice (Heb. 10:19-25).

---

Even more sacred than the inn in which he was born, or the storied hills of the annunciation, or Gethsemane, in which he suffered, or the cross on which he died, is that upper room wherein he instituted the memorial supper. Elsewhere he had freely loved and served others, but here he has the delicate task of asking others for memorial tribute unto himself. But even here he was serving, for the self-ennoblement of the service is greater than the glory we can give unto him.

---

Doubtless the Lord arranged this service in part for his own strengthening against the awful trial of next day's cross. This is his mute, but beautiful, testimony to the power of Christian fellowship to sustain us under the clouds and amidst the crosses of life. Let us so love one another that every troubled heart may feel that in the fellowship of the brethren is a well-spring of comfort and help that will make us all more highly prize our fraternal relationship in Christ Jesus.

---

When Paul, the great Christian logician, says "wherefore," it is well for the world to pause and ponder well what follows. None other of these "wherefores" is more significant than when he said to our Corinthian brethren, "Wherefore, whosoever shall eat the bread or drink the cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner shall be guilty of the body and the blood of the Lord." Hereafter even the most careless of us will see the necessity of approaching communion with clean hands and pure hearts.

In view of the Savior's tender appeal to do this "in memory of me," it seems strange that Paul or any other preacher should feel obliged to exhort disciples against forsaking the assembling of themselves together about the broken loaf and the symbolic cup. We all need refreshing for the heavenly journey, and nowhere else does the heart naturally become so receptive of grace. Carelessness with reference to the invitation to this earthly communion will greatly imperil our presence at the heavenly banquet.

The presumption of satan goes beyond all belief. Even to that hour of heart to heart communion between Jesus and his apostles, which we would expect all alien and sinful spirits to flee as unclean night birds would the brilliant festal hall, he comes in the person of apostate Judas and leaves baleful shadows cast by himself. Let us not hope for exemption therefore. Guard well thy thoughts or even into the home circle and sanctuary, yea, to the communion altar itself, he will follow to divert your thoughts from holiness and fill your heart with evil suggestions.

Not all who drink no wine are great as the world counts greatness, but they are not so inconsequential as they would be if their natural weakness were supplemented by this cultivated depravity.

It is not necessary that we wear coarse garb or flee into the desert to prepare for our Christian ministry, but greater personal seriousness, self-denial and austerity of thought and manner and a grimmer zeal for righteousness will wonderfully increase our prophetic effectiveness.

In studying these strong characters, if rightly interpreted, we may get help even from their weaknesses. When we see Elijah under the juniper tree longing for death, we need not consider ourselves as apostate beyond hope of redemption, if overcome temporarily by feelings of discouragement such as depressed the brave old prophet. The unpardonable apostasy would consist in remaining in the shade of the tree instead of going forth and anointing kings and prophets unto God as he did.

Elijah never would have denounced Ahab's confiscation of Naboth's vineyard had he not first overcome propensities toward wicked indulgencies on his own part. Intemperance of any kind would not only have imparted to him a moral cowardice rendering him incapable of so nobly performing the prophetic office, but would have deprived him of that physical vitality absolutely essential to his splendid career. Fate at once begins to write Ichabod over every indulgent's brow, no matter how great his genius.

Elijah the prophet and John the immerser will always be conspicuous among the world's greatest reformers, no matter how large or small we draw the circle of fame. Men may be endowed with many attributes of greatness and yet be of little value to society because their powers are all unused. These men were not only greatly endowed but were magnificent in action. Study their biographies closely as you may, there will be discovered no traces of self-seeking. They sought God's glory and to make men worthy sons of God, and in doing this became as gods among men.

Maxim Gorky, the Russian patriot and revolutionist, recently came to our shores in the interests of his oppressed countrymen and received a popular ovation predicting splendid success for his mission. Soon, however, it was discovered he himself was as impure as his government was corrupt and all his overtures were immediately repudiated by that class of Americans who could be of help to him in the liberation of Russia. Elijah and John were as pure as the reformations they sought. We need never expect to be taken seriously as reformers until we can ourselves stand forth pure in the sight of men and also of God.

These prophet heroes became great by accounting themselves as nothing but instruments for the accomplishment of divine purposes, and their hearts were so set on the results that it mattered little to them whether a certain process involved the destruction of the instruments or whether they should be used again. Not otherwise can we account for Elijah's maledictions on the priests of Baal, and John's personal rebuke to the iniquitous and despotic Herod. They assumed responsibility for doing God's will and committed to him responsibility for themselves and their work, and all was well.

Twenty-one Sermons and Addresses in the Author's best vein

HEAR WHAT A FEW SAY:

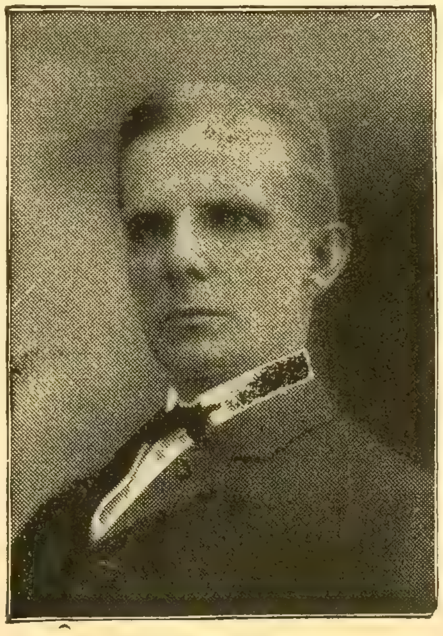
Dean W. J. Lhamon, of the Bible College of Missouri, Columbia, Mo., says: "This volume is of such a high order, so vigorous and inspiring and Christological, that it may well be studied as a homiletical masterpiece, and as indicative of the trend of best pulpit work among the Disciples of Christ."

The Christian Observer says: "Mr. Powell is pastor of the First Christian Church of Louisville, Ky., and in the 20 sermons in this volume he gives valuable and attractive food for religious thought. While in some places he presents the peculiar views of his denomination, he deals, for the most part, with the Gospel in its gracious truth and adaptation to the needs of human hearts."

F. M. Green, Akron, O., says: "All of the sermons bear the marks of thought, and all of them are felicitous in expression. They are strong enough to give pleasure to study, simple enough to be easily understood and palatable enough for the most of religious appetites. Such sermons can not fail to do good to the real lover of earnest, honest and faithful teaching."



E. L. POWELL,
Author of Victory of Faith.

The Louisville Courier-Journal says: "'The Victory of Faith' has 20 sermons and addresses, covering almost every phase of religious thought and life, each treated in Dr. Powell's own inimitable way."

The Louisville Evening Post says: "These sermons and addresses are those of an active thinker and worker and, together, form a real help to the practice of Christian doctrine. Many are printed as delivered, and have, therefore, the style and manner of the author as he speaks from his pulpit. The dominant note is that of triumphant Christianity making its way through the doubt and darkness of the world and of the individual. The volume is well named—the whole subject is the victory of Christian faith."

Another says: "These are masterly addresses by one of our most gifted and successful preachers who is held in high esteem throughout the brotherhood."

“Theory vs. Practice,” etc.

Please allow me a brief reply to a review of an article of mine in your issue of April 5.

1. “But he [myself] seems to regret that the subject of federation has come up for discussion at all, and calls it a bone of contention which has been thrust upon us.” I plead guilty to this regret, and will give some of my reasons for it.

(a) I regret it because it is a “bone of contention.” None of us can be deaf to the protests going up from the churches on the subject. And if matters are not changed these protests will be greatly increased and incalculable injury will be done. Only a few days ago one of the best churches in our state, led by a man famous for his missionary liberality, published an open letter, calling on a missionary secretary to speak out on this subject in order that they might decide as to whether to send in their annual offering. And there are many churches in sympathy with this one. Shall we smother this fire? or will we fan it into a mighty flame? We can do either, and heaven help us to smother it.

(b) I regret it because the religious world is not ready for it. The “Baptist Standard” is one of the strongest papers in the south, and may be regarded as a fair expression of the sentiment of that people, who have 200,000 members in Texas alone. In a recent issue the editor, speaking of a paper from a Baptist preacher which he was publishing, called it “that splendid address.” That you may appreciate it, let me give you a sample: “Once more the Baptist spirit is widely separated from the Campbellite spirit. For, while one is the spirit of evangelism, the other is the spirit of proselytism; the one a spirit of liberty and tolerance, the other a spirit of sectarian strife in the name of union; the one a spirit of loyalty to the holy Scriptures, and to the person and regenerating agency of the Holy Spirit, the other a spirit of loyalty to the influence of the Spirit in the Word of God; the one, consequently, is a spirit of inward spiritual realism, the other a spirit of outward, literal formalism; the one, also, is a spirit of simple symbolism, the other a spirit of hybridized sacramentalism.” And this “splendid address,” in order that it may have a wider and more permanent influence, is to be published in tract form. And Addison Clark, who would not be regarded as an extremist against federation, speaking of this paper, says: “Just about the time my ‘federation’ feathers get full and glossy, and my wings of Christian union are spread for an ethereal flight, plump I come down from some sectarian gun. Pshaw!”

Another example: During our late union meeting conducted by Dr. Chapman, Bro. H. O. Breeden was one of the evangelists. But the meeting had been in progress only a few days when two of the strongest churches in his district (Methodist and Baptist) deserted him, and he would have been sacrificed on the altar of sectarian prejudice and sent home in disgrace but for a vigorous protest on my part. Think for a moment of the meaning of this incident. The trouble was not that Breeden was a poor preacher, for he is a prince among preachers. Neither was it that he abused his privilege and preached his own peculiar doctrine. The sole, but sufficient, cause was that he was what they called a “Campbellite.” Would it not be interesting to see Brother Garrison and other ardent federationists attempt to embrace men like these?

(c) I regret it because federation when applied seems to be a failure. The Oregon incident is familiar to your readers and needs not to be emphasized. But here is a case with which your readers are not so familiar. S. R. Hawkins is one of our true men. He lives in the Indian Territory. Recently he went into a town of 1,200 population and found about 20 of our people. And when he would organize a church he was told that the town, except the Baptists, had federated, and there was no room for a Christian church. Such incidents show us federation in the concrete, and the “common people” will never accept a tree which bears such fruit; and the sooner we recognize this fact, the better for us all and for the cause of our Master.

(d) But I regret it mainly because it seems to be a surrender of our plea. Allow me to quote from my former article. “The work of the Campbells and their colaborers, the most remarkable chapter in the history of the religious world for a hundred years, if not for nineteen hundred, was born in a protest against denominationalism, and it has grown into its present splendid proportions by loyalty to this protest. If this protest was right then, it is right now; therefore, any movement looking to the perpetuation of denominationalism is wrong; and since federation, to many of us, looks in that direction, it must be condemned.”

I suppose that even Brother Garrison will not assail this statement except in so far as it claims that federation tends to promote denominationalism. He will admit that but for the divided state of Christendom this restoration movement would not have been. Neither will be deny that our wonderful growth is the result of loyalty to this protest. The men who have stood out boldly on this line have been our most successful men. Their plea for the restoration of primitive Christianity has made us what we are. It was this plea which leveled the mountains and lifted the valleys so that our progress has been the wonder of the world. This masterly plea, if I mistake not, won Brother Garrison from denominationalism, as it won the writer, and thousands upon thousands of others. When men like Campbell, Scott, Stone, Smith, Franklin, Errett, Lard, etc., made it, it was almost irresistible. It was fair as the sun, clear as the moon and terrible as an army with banners. And the same thing is true to-day. The men who lovingly and loyally preach it are our most successful men. Take Charles Reign Scoville, for example, and you will find that his phenomenal victories are the result of the old-time preaching. He stands four-square on the platform of the fathers and apostles.

But Brother Garrison will deny that his position is a surrender of this plea. I would call his attention to a private letter, unsolicited, from one of our strongest and best men, one whose name is familiar to the readers of The Christian-Evangelist: “Whatever may be the aim of Brother Garrison, etc., this one thing is true: the people understand it to mean a union of denominations, and practically surrendering our position. One of our preachers said a short time ago, ‘If I had never been immersed I would not be.’ And two of our sisters said to me just last week, ‘We must be ready to surrender much for the union of denominations. Let them hold to sprinkling and we to immersion.’ ” If this is not a surrender I am utterly unable to know the meaning of the word.

But it may be claimed that this letter is exceptional, and therefore not representative of the position as a whole. Let us then see the situation from another view point. Imagine a great battle to be fought by an army of 100,000 men. This army is placed in a strategic position by the commander and told to remain there. But in the course of the battle 90,000 materially change position, and to that extent weaken their power. But the conflict still rages with awful fury, and victory seems uncertain. What shall be done? Shall the 10,000 who stand like a stone wall in the position where the commander placed them, change? Or shall the 90,000 be brought back to the old position and rallied round the heroic band? To ask such a question is to answer it. Those who have lost position must return, and the army will again be united and victory made sure. Is not this the condition of the army of the Lord? Much of it has changed position, but a small part retains the original position. And the battle still goes on. What must be done? By all means bring back the wanderers and rally them round the brave little band which refuses to move.

2. “Brother Davis thinks that if we would ignore this action of our brethren seeking a closer unity, and betake ourselves to building up our own interests, the Lord would pour out an abundant blessing upon us! What the Lord wants, then, is not the union of all his people in loving co-operation, but just to see our own general interests thrive and prosper.” Brother Garrison is wide of the mark here. It is our business not to build up another denomination, but to so exemplify apostolic Christianity that all of God's people may be rallied again round the banner of Prince Jesus in “loving co-operation” as the one body, and not as a federation of denominations.

3. “Brother Davis' idea of federation as a trick for the perpetuation of denominationalism . . . is wholly unworthy of him. It is an idea suited to a narrow provincialist who has not read modern Christian literature nor mingled with the great denominational movements of our time.” I hope I may not be regarded as rude when I say that this spirit of arrogant condescension, this lofty air of patronizing, heard far too often from some of our teachers, is not at all pleasant to me. The fact that a man does not approve federation by no means proves him to be a “narrow provincialist,” and ignorant of the living religious questions of the day. This lofty pose of superiority may be pleasant to the poser, but it is anything but lovely to others. Let none of us make the mistake of Job's friend and conclude that wisdom will die with us. I as firmly believe that federation tends to the “perpetuation of denominationalism” as I believe that the Gospel is the power of God to salvation, and yet I am not ignorant of what is going on in the world on the question of Christian union. And so of a mighty multitude of others.

4. “And yet, after all this deprecating the evils of federation as a means of Christian union, Brother Davis is at present engaged in that very thing. He is co-operating with the churches of Dallas in a union meeting, but of course this is not local federation! If that is not equal to the conscientious brother who objected to his son having a ‘fiddle,’ but was reconciled on learning it was only a ‘violin,’ we are willing to discount our knowledge of logic.” It is sufficient reply to the above to say that a man who can not see the difference between federation and the union meeting referred to will necessarily have his knowledge of logic discounted. Has it not been a custom with us to engage in much union work along the lines of Sunday-school, Y. M. C. A., Y. P. S. C. E. and often in union meetings? If this is “local federation,” we have had it for years. Why, then, this great ado about it? The facts are, in spite of Brother Garrison's little witticism, the difference between the two is vital, and the people will not mistake the one for the other. Let us labor for the things that make for peace, and let us stand lovingly and immovably in the footprints of the fathers, and all will be well. M. M. Davis.

Dallas, Texas.

REPLY TO BROTHER DAVIS.

1. We give place to Brother Davis' article, not because it offers anything new on the subject it discusses, but because we like Brother Davis, and we want to extend the utmost courtesy to brethren who are opposed to the view which The Christian-Evangelist represents. A few brief comments will suffice:

(a) We regret Brother Davis' reference to the publication of an open letter from a church calling on a missionary secretary to express his opinion on this question before deciding on an annual offering, without the most unmistakable disapproval of such an unwise course. If our churches are to request the missionary secretaries to express their private opinions on all the questions that come up for discussion in order to ascertain whether they are to make an offering for the preaching of the Gospel, our missionary work would soon be at an end. We can not express too strongly our disapprobation of such a policy. We do not know the church nor the preacher referred to, but we are sure that the consensus of judgment in the brotherhood will condemn such a course as indicating a lack of proper understanding of the relation of missionary secretaries to the societies which they represent. The societies are the brethren who co-operate in missionary work, and no secretary has any authority to make any decision for them on these questions.

(b) The excerpt quoted from the “Southern Baptist” paper is a very strong reason why our churches should come into closer relation that they may understand each other better. Sectarian narrowness and honest misconceptions of each other are among the strongest arguments for a closer co-operation. Again, Brother Davis furnishes another argument showing the benefits of co-operation in his effective protest against the desertion of Brother Breeden. Had Brother Davis been on the outside, instead of the inside of this co-operation, his protest would have availed nothing. Being on the inside and a minister having the respect of the religious people of the city, his voice was heard, and Brother Breeden was heard. Strange how, when the mouths of prophets are opened to prophesy against federation, they prophesy in favor of it!

(c) Yes, “the Oregon incident” is familiar to most of our readers, but it does not seem to be familiar to Brother Davis, else he would know that in harmony with the advice of The Christian-Evangelist the basis of federation proposed in Oregon was rejected, and that the general secretary endorsed our criticism of it, as in conflict with the New York basis. As to the incident mentioned by Brother Hawkins in the Indian Territory, Brother Davis is referred to our comment thereon in The Christian-Evangelist, April 19, page 502.

(d) Brother Davis quotes his former remarks to the effect that federation means “the surrender of our plea.” He gives no reason for it, however, and the facts are all against him. What is the use of continuing to repeat a statement that has not a scintilla of proof, and which is positively denied by every friend of the federation movement? We are in favor of the co-operation proposed by federation because we believe it is demanded by the principles of our plea, and so do all those among us who favor it. Brother Davis' idea that our co-operation involves the surrender “of the old-time preaching,” that is, the preaching of the plain, simple Gospel of Christ, is a strange misconception, not only of federation but of his brethren who favor it. Being a man of “light and leading,” Brother Davis ought to be helping to remove some of these misconceptions to which he refers, for they are absolutely unfounded, and are doing very much, just now, to hinder our progress at an important point in our history. What, in the name of reason, does the remark of some sister about sprinkling for baptism, have to do with the question of federation? It is amazing that Brother Davis would use such arguments.

Brother Davis' illustration about the army does not illustrate. Is it proposed by anybody that we surrender our position and take the denominational position and endorse their errors? Notice the misconception that underlies every argument against federation. Yes, this plea for Christian union won the Editor of this paper from denominationalism, and that is why we should like to bring it to bear upon thousands of others by coming into closer touch with them.

2. The point is, do we “exemplify apostolic Christianity” better by standing aloof from those who do not agree with us, and denouncing them as sects unfit to associate with us, or by co-operating with them to the extent that we can do so without compromising our principles, with the view of advancing the kingdom of God and promoting a closer unity? Let any unbiased mind answer that question for himself.

3. We said that the “idea that federation is a ‘trick’ for the perpetuation of denominationalism” is wholly unworthy of Brother Davis. We are sorry that he regards this as the “spirit of arrogant condescension,” etc. If we had said that this absurd idea was just like Brother Davis, and worthy of him, we might have been justly accused of “arrogant condescension” and even of rudeness; but our regard for Brother Davis did not permit us to do that. We insist that the idea is entirely *un*worthy of Brother Davis and is *un*like him. Brother Davis would not charge the churches of his own city with perpetrating a “trick” of that kind. Why should he make this serious

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying, tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half-brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. Rhoda has a visit from a mysterious man named Boggs, who claims to have been sent by Mrs. Revore's half-brother to find out whether the children know anything of a bronze vase. After much delay it is decided to send Rhoda to an orphan home, and Raymund to Mr. Omer's farm.]

PART II.

CHAPTER IV.

Several days passed by before Raymund again saw Nelsie Loraine, save as a fleeting form. Of course, she drove to town in the carriage almost every day, but there was just a glimpse of the lovely face granted the boy as it flashed up the broad driveway. Almost at once the carriage would go into eclipse under the cochere, and that would be the last of her. He wondered if she had forgotten him. Somehow, since his little conversation with her, it had been harder at night to fix his mind on his studies; and strive as he might against his awakened sensibilities, he was inclined to get at a little distance from Tom and Fred, when they came in heavily at night, their shirts dark-stained with perspiration. It was as if the girl's refinement had emphasized Raymund's humble surroundings. The boy was resolute, however, in his adherence to establish principles. He exerted himself to the utmost in entertaining Baby in such a way that work of different kinds might be combined with sport. They made a splendid game of burning the last trash of the backyard, and while Baby enjoyed the bonfire, Raymund mended the wheelborrow and painted it with some of the bright red paint that had been left over from painting the Hands' House. The house had been painted white with red trimmings, since these were the only colors at Raymund's disposal. The youth had found a quantity of wire-fencing which had been cast aside because it was bent and twisted and tangled with a snarled mass of barbwire. It was apparently in a hopeless condition, but, like most apparently hopeless conditions, its hopelessness was only in its appearance. Raymund set himself the task of extricating the barbwire from the other, and having convinced Baby that it would be fun to watch him do it, Baby was content to sit for a long time each day, Houndpup partly in his arms and partly lapping over upon the ground—it was immaterial to Baby which end of Houndpup hung downward—while the work went on. And at last the closely woven wire net was freed from the rusty barbwire. The next step was to straighten out the wire, and the next to find discarded palings which had been rejected from the garden fence. These Raymund painted red, and, having spliced them, he stood them in the ground at regular intervals, across the Hands' yard, not far from the back door. To these uprights he fastened the wire screen, and though it rather complained of needing a wire stretcher, it looked well enough.

"Now, Mr. Chickens!" cried Raymund who, in his exultation, was not disposed to make a distinction of sex, "I'd like to see you ever come into our house again!" So the chicken yard was duly opened with befitting ceremonies, much to Baby's delight. Of course, the chickens could roam at will from the rear of their yard, and even extend their journeys to the distant pond, and by all means to the neighboring barn lot. But with a little judicious "shoo"-ing and clod-throwing, they were kept out of the front yard. The stool washpan and other unsightly objects were taken from the front porch—Raymund had felt it no use to make this change as long as the chickens had the keys of the house, so to speak—and his improvements made a decided advance.

"I reckon," Tom remarked to Fred as they came home that evening to find the chicken yard completed and the woodbox gone from the front porch, "Raymund will be expecting us to go around to the back door, now, when we come home!"

"I reckon," said Fred in his high, thin voice, "we'd best take off our boots before we venture in, hadn't we, Tom?" And to show that his words were meant in pleasantry, he slowly moved his large ears back and forth several times. Raymund had tried to do that, but couldn't.

"No," said Raymund, "this is our house, and I don't care how nice we make it, it can't ever be too nice for us."

The three-year-old boy came from around the house, caught sight of Tom and, with a shout, charged at his father crying, "Horse! Horse!" Tom immediately went down on all fours, although a moment before he had fancied himself rather stiff. "Well," panted Tom, "I guess nothin' can't be too nice for Baby. I'm givin' him my flesh and bones; so go ahead, Raymund!"

A few days later Raymund stood in his chicken yard, holding Baby by the hand and watching two cocks which, since the erection of the fence and the necessarily closer confinement, had apparently formed the resolve to kill each other, and die with locked spurs. Raymund had just parted the fowls who stood ruffling their necks at each other, and pecking the ground to show what they would like to do for each other. Then, before he knew that anybody was coming, a voice called him. And there stood Nelsie Loraine just outside the wire-fence. She looked very bright, and dainty, and seemed so far above chickens and wire-fences that Raymund blushed deeply. But, though he could not prevent the blush, he could keep from saying anything to show he was ashamed of his labors. So he remarked, "Good-evening, Nelsie Loraine; I didn't hear you."

"I have been watching you a good while," said Nelsie Loraine, laughing. "It was so funny, the way they flopped up in the air and kicked at each other! I like to see them fight. But I reckon," she added mischievously, "you think of them as you do of Tom and Fred, and you are afraid they will not be happy at home, when they go to their families all covered with blood. I came to say mamma has agreed for you to study Latin and French under my governess—"

"Oh, oh!" cried Raymund in an ecstasy.

Nelsie Loraine laughed again. "I think it's just dreadful to have to go to studying!" she said. "It's perfectly funny to see how you like it! And mamma said I could come to your birthday party Christmas Eve, and you can come to mine, Christmas. We had to work with her a long time, papa and me both; we had to work mighty hard, but we pulled her through—"

"You mean she has been sick?" asked Raymund, somewhat confused.

"Yes," cried Nelsie Loraine, laughing more than ever, "that's just what I meant. But she's well now; she's all right. I'll let you know just what hour to come. Now I must run back, for mamma told me not to stay a minute, and she meant it. She hardly ever means it when she says 'not' to me. I've brought you something. What will you give me for it? I know it is something you want very much!"

"Oh!" cried Raymund, noticing that she held one hand behind her, "it is a letter from Rhoda!"

"That is just what it is!" said Nelsie Loraine, giving it to him. "Now, oughtn't you to do something real nice for me?"

"I ought, yes. And I will."

"All right," returned the girl. "Now, remember, the first time I ask a favor of you, you are to do what I ask!"

"I will, indeed I will!" returned Raymund, so impatient to open the letter that he could hardly wait.

Nelsie Loraine danced merrily away and Raymund tore open the envelope. Then it occurred to him that a chicken yard was not a nice enough place in which to read a letter from Rhoda. He went to his cottonwood tree where he had first formed Nelsie Loraine's acquaintance, and having induced Baby to remain as an arbiter of peace between the fighting cocks, he read:

"My darling, darling, darling Ray,
Although we two are far apart,
I can each morning see your face
By looking in my heart.

And each evening, too, and all the time, only that wouldn't do in the rhyme. The poetry just flashed into my mind somehow. I was standing at one of the windows watching the street cars and thinking about our old home, and about mother, how patient she was, and then that I had nobody left in the world to love me but my brother, and I seemed to see your face right in the air between me and the city street. So I know I was looking in my heart. I love to make poetry. You know that, don't you, Ray? But it seems that since I came here, I make it more than ever. I don't try hard, it comes, somehow. They are very kind to me here. The orphan home is just crowded, oh, so crowded, with orphans!

Some have lost a mother, and the father is trying to earn enough to take them to keep, after awhile. Some have a mother who takes in washing or does housework, or anything, to lay something by; but most are whole orphans like us. Every once in a while some one comes, and goes all over the place, and looks at everybody, and selects a little child. And sometimes the poor child is actually sorry to leave us! But we who are left here know how lucky it is. I am able to be of help here. Once a kind gentleman, who must be pretty well off, for he came in his own carriage, patted me on the shoulder and told me to be a brave girl. And the matron told me afterward that he said he would have taken me to adopt only I am so old he is afraid to risk it, not knowing just what I am, you know. That is the trouble with me. I am too old. But I feel so young! The other day I got to thinking and then I wrote this down:

> "The orphan home is crowded,
> There is no room for more,
> And every night some little one
> Is turned outside the door;
> But, for the hundred children
> In orphan homes to-night,
> Thank God ten thousand thousand
> In their parents' love delight.

Of course we don't turn away an orphan every night, but we do every once in a while. Your letters are just so dear, I can never have enough of them, but I am afraid you have spent that quarter Mr. Merlin Aggency gave you for stamps. You mustn't use all your money, writing to me. But I do love to hear from you. I will not write a long letter, this time. Good-bye. I am your own, own Rhoda."

The Winter Sleepers.

There are some kinds of animals that hide away in the winter, that are not wholly asleep all the time. The blood moves a little, and once in a while they take a breath. If the weather is mild at all, they wake up enough to eat.

Now, isn't it curious they know all this beforehand? Such animals always lay up something to eat, just by their side, when they go into their winter sleeping-places. But those that do not wake up never lay up any food, for it would not be used if they did.

The little field-mouse lays up nuts and grain. It eats some when it is partly awake on a warm day. The bat does not need to do this, for the same warmth that wakes him wakes all the insects on which he feeds. He catches some, and then eats. When he is going to sleep again, he hangs himself up by his hind claws. The woodchuck, a kind of marmot, does not wake; yet he lays up dried grass near his hole. What is it for, do you think? On purpose to have it ready the first moment he wakes in the spring. Then he can eat and be strong before he comes out of his hole. —Selected.

The Elevator Boy.

There was a lean, freckled-faced boy who a year or two ago ran up and down in an old shackly office building in Philadelphia. I often went up in it, but certainly I never suspected "Billy" of noble quality which raised him above other boys, high as was Saul among his brethren.

But one day the old house began to shudder and groan to its foundations, and then one outer wall after another fell amid shouts of dismay from the crowds in the streets. And Billy, as these walls came crashing down, ran his old lift up to the topmost story and back again, crowded with terrified men and women. He did this nine times. Only one side of the building was now standing. The shaft of the elevator was left bare, and swayed to and fro. The police tried to drag the boy out of it, and the mass of spectators yelled with horror as he pulled the chain and began to rise again above their heads.

"There's two women up there yet," said Billy, stolidly, and he went on up to the top, facing a horrible death each minute, and knowing that he faced it. Presently through the cloud of dust the lift was seen coming jerkily down with three figures on it. As it touched the ground the whole building fell with a crash. The women and the boy came out on the street unhurt, and a roar of triumph rose from the mob. Scores had been saved by the fidelity of the heroic elevator boy.

But it was 6 o'clock, and Billy slipped quietly away in the dusk and went home to his supper. For your real hero does not care to remain for the shouts and clapping of hands.—The Interior.

Anna's Feud.

"No, I'll never speak to her again!" and little Anna, sobbing bitterly, threw herself into her mother's lap.

"But, my dear," said her mother, "what could Mabelle have done to make you so angry with her?"

Anna dried her tears long enough to explain that Mabelle had laughed at her when she misspelled a word in school that day. "And, mamma, I'll never love her again, and we're going to have a feud."

"A what?" asked grandpa, who had just come into the room.

"A feud," said Anna.

"Well, what do you know of feuds, I'd like to know, young lady?"

"Well, it's when you never speak to each other as long as you live, for Harold told me so, and he knows; so I'm going to have a feud with Mabelle."

"Oh, you will be over your quarrel and as thick as honey inside of an hour."

"Oh, no, grandpa; it's a feud, and I'll never make up!" and Anna shook her little head, quite determined never to speak to her playmate again.

It was such a consolation to walk on the other side of the street and steal a sly glance at Mabelle, and see that she was all alone. Twice did Anna go to school and return in this manner, and then, somehow, a little lonesome feeling would creep in her heart every time she saw Mabelle, and wondered if she were lonesome, too. But still it was a feud, and she could not speak, and she was sure the lonesome feeling would go away. But instead of going away it grew bigger, and little Anna's head came lower and lower.

One night as the children gathered around grandpa for their bedtime story, he said: "What day is to-morrow, my dears?"

"Why, it's May day, grandpa," answered Harold.

"Yes, it's May day, and I'm going to tell you of the May days we had when I was a boy."

Anna listened to every word, and when the story was finished she sat for a long time, thinking.

The next day Anna was up bright and early, and at breakfast time a big bunch of violets was hung on Mabelle's door. A little later grandpa saw two little girls run arm in arm to the old apple tree, and heard their merry laugh as they gathered the violets that grew under it. He smiled as he turned away from the window. Anna's feud was ended.—Jeannette D. Jackson, in Western Christian Advocate.

Sympathetic.

Whenever I start out to walk, our dog he seems to know,
And runs along ahead of me to show he's coming, too;
And when there is a reason why he really musn't go,
The hollering "Go Home" to him is awful hard to do.

He wags his tail and jumps around, and seems as if he said:
"I guess you didn't mean it, you were only jokin' then!"
But when he sees I'm serious, he kinder droops his head,
Or looks up at me sorrowful, an' looks away again.

And then at last he minds me, if I keep an angry tone,
It's awful hard to do it, but I try with all my might;
And sometimes when I look around I see him all alone
A-watchin' me and watchin' me until I'm out of sight.

You see, I know just how it is, 'cause some days when I find
My brother's got to hurry off with bigger boys to play,
And when he says I mustn't go and tag along behind,
He leaves me sittin' somewhere and a-feelin' just that way!

Notes Gathered in the City Desolate.

Incidents of real Life that occurred during and after the Shake and Fire.

San Francisco, April 28, 1906.

If you ask one of the survivors to describe the sensation of being earthquaked he will tell you that there is nothing in the language we speak, or any other language, that is adequate to convey any idea of the experience. A friend of mine who was sleeping in one of the big hotels when the quake came tried to tell me about it.

"I awoke, thoroughly frightened, and my first thought was that I had had a dream," he said. "For a moment I imagined I was still dreaming. The bed was rolling and tossing and the walls were moving. I did not think of an earthquake on the instant. Then I looked at the windows. What I saw frightened me cold—the window frame was bending and snapping like an Indian's bow. The cracking, crunching noise made by the woodwork and walls was hideous. It dawned on me very suddenly that we were having an earthquake. The worst 'movement' lasted about 28 seconds. It seemed as many minutes—and then some. The suspense, the awful suspense of waiting for the upheave that would finish the job and send us all to the cellar, was what took my breath. I was sure it was coming, and I waited for it—but it didn't come. I lay in bed a minute or more, then got up and looked out. I couldn't see anything, and as I had retired very late and needed sleep, I crawled back into bed. I must have been pretty well tired out for I dozed away until after nine o'clock. Occasionally I would hear a booming noise, which I either dreamed or imagined was thunder. Finally an unusually loud explosion awakened me and I looked out and saw the fire. It was dynamite I had heard. I dressed in two minutes and was down on the street in another two. The fire was not near enough to cause apprehension at our hotel. The people did not seem to think that it would go on unchecked. They were accustomed to seeing fires extinguished, and as there was no very strong wind they had no notion that it would get beyond control. I went over to the St. Francis hotel. Folks were sitting around in the lobby, apparently not thinking that the fire would reach that part of town. It was burning south of Market street, below the Palace hotel, and quite a distance from Union Square, where the St. Francis is located. I talked to the clerk about the earthquake. He said it hadn't hurt the St. Francis. 'Everything here is as snug as a bug in a rug,' is the way he put it. When I went out I heard more explosions, and it looked as if the fire were spreading. I walked over to my hotel and we discussed the situation, concluding that we were in no danger. I strolled around, looking at the damage done by the quake, ate lunch and strolled some more. In the evening, after dinner, a group of us at the hotel exchanged experiences, still with no thought of danger. We could see the fire spreading but it wasn't until about nine o'clock that the clerk told us we had better get ready to move, if it became necessary. The wind veered around and the next thing we knew the building on the corner was on fire. My trunk weighed 180 pounds, and I had a valise and two overcoats. I got them out on the sidewallk. It began to get pretty warm. I couldn't find a wagon, and I realized all in an instant that the situation was serious. No one seemed to foresee the extent of the disaster. There I had all day in which to get away, but I did not think for a moment that I would sleep any place but in that same hotel that night. I scurried around and got a rope and tied it to the handle of my trunk. I saw people in the glare of the fire dragging all sorts of things up the street. They were all heading for the west side and I pulled that 180-pound trunk and kept up with the procession. We thought of course that the hills would afford protection—the steepest hills I know anything about—so we took to the hills. It didn't seem any time until the fire was coming for us. People came in droves now, women carrying babies, men lugging or pulling trunks and valises, children with their toys and little express wagons—all stopping to look back occasionally at the mad fire that was fast spreading out across the entire city. I tugged at my trunk all that night. At 6 the next morning I was at Van Ness avenue, so tired I couldn't stand up. I found a soft spot on the asphalt pavement and slept thirty minutes. I awoke to find the fire gaining rapidly and I started up the hill, determined to get that 180-pound trunk to safety. On a very steep grade I would carry my coats and valise and leave them at the top of the hill and go back for the trunk. At 6 that evening I stopped in front of a fine house. The owner was leaving it. His family had fled and he was going to join them. He asked me if I wanted to stay there that night, and I was glad to accept his invitation. I had reached my limit, and I felt that the fire was about in the same fix. I turned in and slept in a snowy white bed. When I got up in the morning I found water in the pipes and I had a bath that I shall never forget. It was almost too good to be true. I had gotten some canned goods from a grocery—the owner was deserting it and was giving away his goods—so there was nothing lacking excepting a cup of coffee."

The foregoing is only an ordinary experience. There is nothing tragic in it, but it serves to illustrate how slow came the realization of danger. To some all the warnings came too late. One young man spent the day looking at the sights down town and when he started home he found that the flames had beat him to it. He was one of many.

People are seldom called upon to determine quickly what they consider the most precious or valuable of their possessions, but the residents of the burned district had to make the decision in haste. Their selections appeared in the motley procession that fled from the fire the first night. One woman carried two bird cages, each containing a canary. She did not have another thing excepting the clothes on her back. Evidently it did not occur to her that one cage could accommodate both birds. Another woman carried three little dogs in her arms. They made a load for her. If she had started with anything in addition to the dogs she had given it up to be able to carry her pets. At every camp of refugees the family dog was a feature of the salvage. Women with children, of course, had no time for dogs. But when there were no children doggie or birdie semed to be "it."

There is nothing left of Chinatown but tottering walls and an assortment of very bad smells. The impression prevails that a hundred or more Chinese lie buried under the debris in this famous district. The smells that emanate from the piles of brick seem to bear out this impression, only the odors speak of thousands rather than hundreds. Millions of dollars worth of fancy imported Chinese goods were stored in the big wholesale and retail houses in Chinatown. I walked over from the postoffice with a Celestial who had managed two stores. He had a fat bundle of mail from Hong Kong. I asked him how he came out of the fire. "Two stores gone," he said. "Two hundred fifty thousand dollars all smoke." We went up on Nob Hill and surveyed the ruined city. The yellow-faced gentleman pointed to a blackened foundation across the street from the Fairmont hotel.

"That Stlanford place," he said. "Mister Stlanford, he gone dead long time. Mrs. Stlanford she gone dead last year. Stlanford house, now he gone dead, too."

The slant-eyed philosopher smiled at his brief sermon on the uncertainty of human life and the things made with human hands. He told me that the fire had turned more than 30,000 Chinese out of San Francisco. For several days after the destruction of their district not a Chinaman appeared on the scene. Souvenir seekers dug about in the ruins for cups and saucers and vases, which they carried off by the armful and pocketful—I saw two men fill a trunk with fine china and carry it away—but no Chinese came. About a week elapsed before John screwed up courage to return to his old haunts. He was a sorry sight—dirty and smoke-begrimed, looking thoroughly miserable.

Scores of dope fiends who had been accustomed to getting their "dreams" regularly in Chinatown were the most acute sufferers from the fire. Without their usual "pill" they were crazed to the point of desperation. The hospital corps found a number and tried to do something for them. They begged piteously for opium or morphine.

The destruction of old Chinatown removes one of the very picturesque sights of the continent. There is nothing else like it in America. To tourists it was ever a great attraction, and an excursion through the subterranean city, taking in the opium dens, was sufficiently spooky to be sought by every sightseer who came to Frisco. The Chinese are anxious to rebuild on the same site, but there is a disposition on the part of property owners and the authorities to remove them farther from the business center. No decision has been reached in the matter.

and squares or plazas—in large cities has never been so fully appreciated as in San Francisco since the fire. The buildings around Union Square, in the heart of the city, got off better than those in any other part of the burned district. The square was a haven of refuge for hundreds of destitute persons. There is a plan on foot now to erect a temporary office building on this open spot. The Dewey column, which stands in the center, could be taken down and erected again after the square had served the purposes of the business community. At Jefferson Square many hundreds are sheltered in tents. The Alta Plaza, the Panhandle and Golden Gate Park are all homes of the homeless. It is not an unusual sight to see a piano in a tent—the only thing saved, in a number of instances, from comfortable homes. At Golden Gate Park a man who, with the help of neighbors, moved his piano two miles, entertained crowds with open air concerts.

A heavy rain on the night of April 22 brought misery to many of the tent dwellers. A woman and her little girl, clad in the thinnest of cotton garments and barefooted, walked in from Golden Gate Park to Devisadero street—nearly two miles. They were numb with cold. Any one who has experienced the chill of an April night in San Francisco needs not be told of the suffering experienced by the people who are sleeping in the parks.

Twenty-five babies were born in Golden Gate Park the first night after the fire started and eighteen the second night. Some of the mothers did not have the attention of either nurses or physicians. Maternity hospitals were established at several points in the parks and throughout the city, before the end of the week, and the best of care is now being taken of the unfortunates.

A phenomenon of the earthquake is found in its effect on the buildings in Golden Gate Park. The keeper's house and restaurant building at the children's playground, a rather heavy, though small, structure built of red sandstone, was wrecked, while the big conservatory near it, made of glass and metal, suffered very little damage. Perhaps the conservatory construction was more flexible. Nevertheless to see a glass structure undamaged, and a stone building shattered impresses one with the thought that "you never can tell."

On Mission street, standing out alone and unscathed, is the new six-story building of the California Casket Company. It had not yet been occupied, but a few weeks will see it completed. This is the only building in the district, excepting the new postoffice, that escaped destruction.

Ladies who affect blondined hair had a hard time in San Francisco. The dark hair had plenty of time to grow before a new supply of peroxide could be obtained, and this resulted in new styles of hair—brown and yellow, black and yellow, black and gold, brown and pink, etc. The earthquake served to tear the mask from a good many of the affectations and vanities of the people.

During the first two days after the earthquake drunken men were a common sight in the lower part of the city. The soldiers seemed to have less patience with this class of cattle than with any of the other disturbers. A guard told me that in nearly every instance of shooting which he witnessed the offender was unsteady on his feet. So much for "booze." To-day you can not buy a drink in San Francisco or any of the cities across the bay. Closing the saloons is one means of preserving order.

No lights are permitted in houses in the city after 10 p. m. Candles have furnished all illumination for domestic purposes since the quake. A private in Company E, Sixth United States Infantry, stationed on guard on O'Farrell street, detected a light in a house at midnight. He rapped and a fat man, with a short, wide beard, opened the door about six inches and asked what was wanted. "Put out that light," ordered the soldier. "No lights after 10 o'clock."

The fat man replied that he would put it out when he got ready, then tried to shut the door. But the soldier was too quick for him. He blocked the door with his gun, put his shoulder against it and entered the room. The occupant was reaching for a 41-calibre Colt's on the bed. "Biff!"—the soldier landed one on his jaw, and the fat man went down with a very dull thud. The soldier blew out the candle and left the fat man lying on the floor. Next morning it developed that the guard had slugged the Russian consul. But they all look alike in these times, and no Russian warships are expected to anchor off

There could be no more delectable [illegible] or wedding gift within a Christian home than the "Garrison Library" catalogued below.

The current quarter is not half gone, but we have sold 55,900 copies of the Bible Student. This is the largest distribution in the history of this House, and is a fair indication of the growing popularity of all our publications. Send for samples.

"The Garrison Library"—Alone With God, 75 cents; Heavenward Way, 75 cents; Half-Hour Studies at the Cross, 75 cents; Helps to Faith, $1; The Holy Spirit, $1, and The Christian-Evangelist, $1.50, all prepaid for $5.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come is a fascinating historical romance of ante bellum days. It has the dreams and chivalry and melodies of the old plantations and all the interest that John Fox, Jr., invariably creates in his stories. Book and Christian-Evangelist, $2; remarkable values for the price.

Katherine B. Patterson, of the National W. C. T. U., sends $10 for Wharton's tract, "The Christian Use of the Tithe System." She sent a previous order to New Zealand. This is the best word on this subject. Our church treasurers should distribute 1,000,000 of them. $1.50 per hundred.

In placing The Christian-Evangelist in the home of a disciple of Jesus, you are planting a tree that before the Centennial will be laden with Christian missions, benevolence, education, piety and zeal for all good work. Nowhere else can $1.50 be so invested as to do so much for the kingdom as in this journal. Send it to at least one new home.

the Golden Gate as a result of this little incident.

Funny placards are common nowadays in the city. On the door of room 61, Appraisers' building, the office of the adjuster of duties, this appears: "Please refrain from recital of hard luck stories and deeds of personal bravery. We've heard them all before."

A street stove protected on three sides by boards to keep sparks from blowing about, was labeled: "Palace Hotel." In the Southern Pacific freight yards on the south side coal cars were impressed into service for living apartments. It was only necessary to board them over to make them habitable. The railroad yards are full of improvised shanties, most of them bearing the name and former address of the occupant. On one of these huts, traced with green chalk, is the following: "The Hooligan Family—Happy, Gus, Monty and Abe."

Childless couples who live in San Francisco should profit by the experience of their neighbors who have babies. The baby carriage was supreme in the flight from the burned district—not so much for the transportation of the baby as for the carrying of household treasures. The wife took the baby in her arms while the husband pushed the carriage, containing what both desired most to save. Silk dresses, table silver, fine china, and every imaginable article made up the loads that were pushed over the hills in baby carriages.

During the first two nights the refugees camped in every conceivable spot. Even the cemeteries were welcome places of refuge. Several vaults were broken open to afford shelter from the cold and people who would have been superstitious under ordinary circumstances were glad to find rest beside the dead. Most of the monuments in the cemeteries withstood the shaking. The tall Dewey shaft in Union Square did not fall. It must have done some tall rocking, however, for a piece of the base was cracked off.

Firewood was in demand for a day or two. Foragers brought in the remains of elegant and costly parlor sets, hard wood tables and even pieces of pianos, and these helped to make the camp fire blaze. Improvised barber shops may be found all over the western part of the city. Barbers are cutting beards that have never been so long before. I got shaved in a shop on Fillmore street, and the price was the same old 15 cents. The barber told me that the chair I sat in had done duty in the Philippines—I did not ask him whether as an instrument of torture in the hands of the Spaniards, but it certainly did not conform to the curves or angles of my anatomy. The two other chairs in the shop were examples of barber shop furniture in the '60's. The barber told me that they cost him $30 apiece. "Before the fire I could have bought them for $5," he said.

The typewriter people say that fully 10,000 machines were destroyed by fire. New typewriters cost $100. This would mean the loss of $1,000,000 on typewriters alone. Thousands of miles of copper wire hang in tangles in the burned district. Much of it will be used again. The sight of it reminds me of the thousands of feet of pipe that was warped and twisted and ruined in the first Spindletop fires. Copper is worth money and the street railway and electric lighting companies will get all the salvage they can on their wire.

The restaurants on the ferry boats of the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe, plying between the city and the towns across the bay, have been doing more business than ever before. Pork and beans and beef stew are the usual menu, and nothing that was served at the "Poodle Dog" or the Palace Hotel Cafe ever tasted as good as these homely dishes to the tired and hungry people who cross the bay from the city. The great American bean deserves special mention in connection with the San Francisco disaster. It has satisfied more pangs of hunger than any other one article of food. Long live the bean!

Workmen are getting $5 a day for wrecking the ruined buildings. Engines with drum hoists and cables are being used to pull down the standing walls. The use of dynamite has been discontinued.

William R. Hearst suffered a personal loss of more than $1,000,000, through the destruction of his San Francisco newspaper, "The Examiner," and the Hearst building and other property in the down town district. Yet he has given more than $100,000 to the sufferers, and his relief trains from all parts of the country are arriving daily. He will spend $50,000 or $100,000 more if it is needed. Hearst relief camps, Hearst hospitals and Hearst agents administering to the wants of the stricken people are to be seen all over the city, and in Oakland across the bay. The press at large will hardly give him credit for all he has done in this hour of San Francisco's need because he is an editor and has political ambitions, but the people out here know the service he has rendered and appreciate it. Holland S. Reavis.

A Boy's Essay on Hornets.

A hornet is the smartest bug that flies anywhere. He comes when he pleases, and goes when he gets ready. One way a hornet shows his smartness is by attending to his own business and making everything who interferes with him wish they had done the same thing.

When a hornet stings a fellow he knows it, and never stops talking about it as long as his friends will listen to him. One day a hornet stung pa (my pa is a preacher) on the nose, and he did not do any pastoral visiting for a month without talking about that hornet.

Another way a hornet shows his smartness is by not procrastinating. If he has any business with you he will attend to it at once, and then leave you to think it over yourself. He don't do like the mosquito, who comes fooling around for half an hour singing, "Cousin, Cousin," and then when he has bled you all he can, dash away yelling, "No kin." A hornet never bleeds you; but if he sticks you, you will go off on a swell.

I don't know anything more about hornets, only that Josh Billings says: "A hornet is an inflamnible (Josh was a poor speller) buzzer, sudden in his impreshuns, and rather hasty in his conclusions, or end."—Epworth Herald.

GOD IS NOT FAR!

God is not far from any one of us!
The wild flower by the wayside speaks His love;
Each singing bird brings tidings from above;
The bright sunlight His tenderness doth prove;
And men know not His voice!

God is not far from any one of us!
He speaks to us in every glad surprise;
His glory floods us from the noonday skies;
The stars declare His love when daylight dies;
Can men not hear His voice?

God is not far from any one of us!
He speaks unto our spirits morn and night;
To every soul that wills, He gives His light;
Each burdened heart He cheers, and gives His might
To those who hear His voice.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

There should be a Christian paper in every Christian home. There is no higher expression of Christian journalism than The Christian-Evangelist, published in St. Louis.—Chilicothe Constitution.

My wife and I will do the best we can to get as many subscriptions as possible to what we consider the best paper on earth, and will help run the list up to the 100,000 by the designated time.—A. H. Bedford.

The symposium on federation is all right. It is uplifting and will cut out all kinds of yellow journalism which is to be deplored among us as a people of the New Testament doctrine. Yours for the 100,000.—J. C. McArthur.

I have especially enjoyed the Editor's Easy Chair. I consider The Christian-Evangelist the best paper of our brotherhood and my prayer is that the Editor may be spared many, many years to come—Mrs. Margaret D. Ludwich.

Have been here three months now as pastor and have had more than twenty additions. Several are yet to be baptized. The Christian-Evangelist did good work for us in killing all sectarian prejudice in the community.—Wallace M. Stuckey, minister.

I want to add that I am in fullest sympathy with The Christian-Evangelist in the present controversy it is having on the federation question, and I hope and believe that the views it represents will prevail among our brotherhood.—R. H. Bolton, minister.

When I find a church where The Christian-Evangelist is not known, have had the paper sent to some one and some times three or four of the members at my own expense, and I find that it is a good investment for the Cause.—N. Montgomery.

I wish you to continue the dear old Christian-Evangelist. I feel I could not get along without it, as I am not able to go to church any more, being 82 years of age, and having had a stroke of paralysis. The paper is so much company for me.—A. G. Hall.

I thoroughly agree with your attitude and am persuaded that it is the only hope of the disciples. Anything else, especially the spirit of the ———, dooms irretrievably our movement to a mere denomination with the worst sort of sectarian odium.—Charles H. Caton, minister, Terre Haute, Ind.

I wish all the saints in this town were readers exclusively of The Christian-Evangelist, then we would have more Christ lovers and servers, fewer fault finders and doubters. I love you for what you have done in the past, but love you more for what you are now doing.—C. B. Burks.

I like The Christian-Evangelist better all the time. I like its spirit. Keep sweet on the federation question. I take the ——— also, but I do not like the boycott spirit. I do not see how one can read the articles on federation of both papers without being struck with the difference in the spirit they breathe.—S. W. Elam, minister.

I am enthusiastically in favor of federation along the lines now being discussed, and will be glad to see close union with the Baptists. My interest in this is no doubt heightened by the fact that my father and mother are Baptists. However, I am in sympathy with the entire movement for federation.—J. W. Putnam, Northwestern University.

I want to commend you for the clear, liberal, representative paper you are getting out. I feel confident that it represents the more progressive and thoughtful membership of our churches. I always feel safe in handing it to those of other faiths, knowing that it will not misrepresent our great brotherhood.—D. N. Wetzel, minister.

I am as delighted with the course of The Christian-Evangelist in the controversy over federation as I was with the ———, under Isaac Errett, thirty-five or forty years ago, when the organ and missionary society were to be "cast out." I write many letters to the brethren—business and friendly—trying to relieve burdened minds about federation and a "disappearing brotherhood." How sectarian we may become opposing sectarianism!—J. F. Callahan, Noble, O.

Enclosed find $2 to apply to my Christian-Evangelist account. I am pleased with the paper, and do not wish to miss an issue. Success to its workers and Editors. I may not always agree with Brother Garrison, but there is no man whom I esteem more highly, and in my opinion he usually is on the right side of the great questions. Always count me one of your solid subscribers, and if I get a little delinquent remind me of it and I will pay up.—Morgan Morgans, evangelist.

This church is superlatively orthodox, but there are those who understand both the matter and spirit of our loved Christian-Evangelist. Husband and I, with some friends, very much enjoy its visits, and it is passed around every week. God bless Brother Garrison, with all the host of his sympathizers in the real union spirit of the twentieth century manifest in the paper. God is in it, and of course opposers will be vanquished. The sentiments of Brother Terrell, in the last number, are our sentiments.—Mrs. Angie B. Martin.

In the recent discussion concerning federation so often I have left a great desire to thank you and congratulate you upon the Christlike spirit you have maintained during the discussion. We are proud that the Editor of our favorite paper does not lose his temper over the unjust things that were said. How glad we are you do not say hard things, but close the discussion. Life is too short to spend our time in saying hard things about others. My father (J. P. Hieronymus) and I have followed your discussion closely.—Mrs. W. H. Kindred.

I can not lay claim to being one of the oldest subscribers of The Christian-Evangelist, but I have been reading it for the past ten years with increasing interest. Sometimes there have appeared things in it that did not exactly strike my fancy, but I did not quit the paper. I seldom sit down to the table without seeing some things which I do not particularly relish, but I do not stop eating on that account. Here is health, happiness, and length of days to The Christian-Evangelist. Long may she wave, but may she never waver.—J. Murray Taylor, Saginaw, Mich.

I have been a reader of The Christian-Evangelist for twenty years, and acknowledge my indebtedness to the Editor for the help it has been to me. In my judgment The Christian-Evangelist—whether that be a Christian journal or a Christian minister—is, and of right ought to be, infinitely above every method, means, or device that appeals to passion, prejudice, or a sect spirit. While I greatly admire the manner in which The Christian-Evangelist seeks to deal with difficult questions, I am even more pleased when unkind and unjust accusations are passed by in silence. I desire to go on record as among those who do not believe that Brother Garrison, after more than forty years of constant service in the interest of world-wide missions, Christian philanthropy, Christian education, and a pure Christian literature, has the remotest thought of surrendering our plea.—P. S. Olson, Ivanhoe, Minn.

Carl Schurz.

Another of the powerful factors in the making of the republic as it is to-day, in the person of Carl Schurz, the great revolutionist, soldier, editor, senator, cabinet officer and publicist, has just been canceled out of present-day activities by his summons to the real Fatherland, on May 14. Though German born and famous in his native land 60 years ago, history will rank him with the greatest of Americans. Fleeing from the disastrous ending of the German revolution of 1848, he came to America, determined amidst more favorable opportunities to strive for ideal government and a society most helpful to man. His first efforts were for the preservation of the republic itself, and during the civil war, through distinguished abilities, won the rank of major general. When peace was declared for many years he rendered faithful services to his adopted country as editor of the "Westliche Post," of this city, the most influential German newspaper west of the Alleghenies; he served six years as senator from Missouri, was in Hayes' cabinet and one of his most valued counselors. He moved easily from one to the other of the great political parties, but never from his patriotic and benevolent ideals.

Ex-President Cleveland, the Democrat, pays this fitting tribute to the Republican statesman, who first landed on our shores an impoverished revolutionary refugee:

> "I look upon the death of Mr. Schurz as a national affliction. Though he had reached a length of years, and though his activity had waned, he was still a power and strong influence in the life and sentiment of his countrymen. To those who prized high, disinterested patriotism, he continued to be an inspiring leader; to those who loved unflinching moral courage, he was a constant teacher, and to those who aspired to the highest ideals in civic life he was an unfailing guide. His example and lofty career are left to us to stimulate the young to virtuous emulation and to encourage all in right living. Such men can ill be spared, and what they leave to us should be carefully kept as a precious legacy."

Southern Baptists in Convention.

The Baptists of the south have been in session during the past week at Chattanooga, Tenn. President E. W. Stephens, in his annual address at the opening of the convention, said that the past year had been the greatest in the history of the Baptists. He gave the following statistics:

> "The number of Baptists in the world is stated to be 6,000,000, of whom 5,000,000 are in America and 4,000,000 in the south. The number of white Baptists represented by this convention is nearly 2,000,000. The white Baptists of the south own $25,000,000 of church property and have $10,000,000 invested in education. There are 20,000 churches.
> "The contributions to missions and the increase in the value of church property are four times what they were 40 years ago and twice what they were 20 years ago. The receipts for missions during the past year, $315,000, were more than they were from 1850 to 1860. There are now 187 missionaries in the employ of the foreign board, over 700 in the employ of the home board and about 2,000 engaged in state, district and city mission work. The foreign mission work is in Japan, China, Mexico, Brazil, Argentine, Italy and Africa. The domestic mission work is all over the south and southwest.
> "There are in the south 103 institutions under the control of white Baptists. Of them 52 are universities and colleges and 51 academies and institutions. Twenty-nine are endowed in the total sum of $3,036,018. The total value of buildings and grounds and equipment is $6,660,443. Over 1,000 teachers and about 20,000 students attend these institutions."

The practical union of the Northern and Southern Baptists in May last, in St. Louis, has no doubt served to give a new impetus to Baptist progress.

Methodist Creed Revision.

The Southern Methodist conference, now in session in Birmingham, Ala., after considerable discussion on the subject, has adopted a resolution providing for a special commission of five members, one of whom shall be a bishop, which will invite other branches of Methodism to unite with the southern church in the preparation of a new doctrinal statement, such as is called for in the twentieth century. This event marks a new step in the history of Methodism. It shows the restiveness under present creedal statements which characterizes, more or less, all religious bodies using such symbols as the basis of their denominational life. The resolution met with considerable opposition Bishop E. E. Hoss gave out the following statement in opposition to creed revision:

> "I am squarely opposed to the movement. In the first place, it is a movement that means dissension and not peace. In the second place, because it means bondage, and not liberty. There was no demand for it from any part of the church. The Methodist people everywhere were perfectly content and actively engaged in practical work in the extension of the kingdom of God. The prospect is that we shall now have an era of theological disputation that will arrest our other activities and set us by the ears with one another. This is not the worst of it. I am conscientiously opposed to placing any additional burdens of belief. We already have a number of articles setting forth the essential points in regard to which we are in agreement with the Protestant world. As to all other things, we have heretofore enjoyed the largest liberty of belief and utterance. Hereafter, if the present movement goes on, we shall be shut up within the limits of a fresh statement. It is my fixed belief that evil, and evil only, will be the result."

This objection of Bishop Hoss is not without force, but, after all, if these creeds are to be taken seriously as expressing just what the churches advocating them believe revision can not be waived aside on the ground that it is likely to produce "an era of theological disputation." The revision of human creeds is bound to go on as long as human mind remains free to think and the world contiues to progress in light and knowledge.

Boycotting the Revival.

Bishop McCabe and other leaders of the Methodist Church have planned for a world-wide religious revival which is about to begin in Chicago. The labor union has sent a circular to the Methodist ministers of Chicago, saying:

> "We learn that your union of preachers is to hold a revival meeting in Chicago and elsewhere," the letter states. "We regret that organized labor can not join with you in this movement of your union. As the Western Methodist book concern refuses to pay union wages for union hours to its employed printers and has allied itself with the labor-oppressing organization of employing printers, we can not attend your proposed meetings."

All the labor organizations of the city will be notified of the trouble between the typographical union and the Methodist printing concern as soon as the revival starts. The dispatch states that "each local will be asked to recognize the rights of the union in the dispute and to instruct its members not to attend any of the religious meetings on penalty of a fine, which, if not paid, will mean expulsion from the union." It is also alleged that the Chicago Federation of Labor will attempt to make the boycott national, and even international. This is a novel method, to say the least, of enforcing the rights of labor. It is really interference with the rights of conscience and with religious liberty. No doubt there are members of these local unions who are Methodists and who feel it their duty to co-operate with their church in its efforts to save sinners. They have now to choose between the alternative of expulsion from their union or payment of a fine, or violating their conscience. These labor unions, in spite of the good they have accomplished and ought to accomplish, are showing us that human nature among laboring men is very much the same as it is among capitalists, and that there is always a tendency to the abuse of power when a man possesses it. We know nothing of the merits of the disagreement between the typographical union and the Methodist book concern, but we feel sure that this method which union labor has adopted to enforce its rights will not meet with the general approval of the American people.

Senate and Railroad Rate Revision.

The most sensational incident in connection with the proceedings of the Senate which has transpired for some time occurred during the discussion a few days ago of the railroad rate bill. It seems that some time since, when it appeared that the co-operation of the Democrats would be necessary for the passage of the bill pending before Congress, the President had sent for Senator W. E. Chandler, and through him sought to get into communication with Democratic Senators with a view of securing their co-operation. In a speech in the Senate, Senator Tillman, in reporting this interview between the President and ex-Senator Chandler, claimed that the President had severely criticised Senators Knox, Foraker, and Spooner. Senator Lodge got into telephonic communication with the President and secured from him an emphatic denial of the statement that he had criticised the Senators mentioned. This has drawn out a statement from Mr. Chandler practically confirming Mr. Tillman's statement, so that the matter of veracity—which is probably a matter of misunderstanding—is between the President and Mr. Chandler. The essential point, however, is that the Republicans of the Senate seem to have accepted an amendment which had the President's approval on the subject of court review of the decisions of the Inter-State Commerce Commission, limiting its action to two points: (1.) Whether the Inter-State Commerce Commission had exceeded its authority, and (2.) whether the constitutional rights of the carrier had been violated. The President claims that this was involved in the original bill, and that he does not object to having it specified. On this amendment the bill has been accepted by the Republicans of the Senate, and will in all probability be endorsed by the Lower House. The incident has given rise to a good deal of warm discussion in the Senate, in which the President has been charged with backing down from his original ground, which is denied on his part and by his friends. What the country is especially interested in, however, is the enactment of a law that will prevent the present abuses in the matter of railroad charges, and experience alone will tell whether the present bill will meet that purpose.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

IV. The Protestant Era.

6. Features of Catholicity in the Movement.

The following features of catholicity which this Reformation emphasized, and continues to emphasize, must, we believe, enter into any practicable scheme of Christian union:

1. The rejection of all human creeds or formulations of doctrine as binding upon the conscience, or as bases of communion, or Christian fellowship, and the acceptance of the Bible, and the Bible alone, as the only authoritative rule of faith and practice.

2. The distinction between the Old and New Testaments, the latter being the will of Christ, and especially applicable to the Christian church and to Christian life.

3. The abandonment of all doctrines and practices in the church, as having any binding force, which are not clearly authorized in the New Testament. This was expressed in the motto, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent."

4. The disuse of all party names, and the use of such names alone as express the common relationship of all true believers to Christ.

5. The return to the ancient and apostolic creed on which Christ said he would build his church, and which is the only true object of saving faith—the Lord Jesus Christ himself. To believe on him with the whole heart is to possess the true, evangelical, saving faith. He, himself, in other words, and not a set of doctrines about him, or about the church, is the object of faith.

6. Obedience to Christ, in his commandments and ordinances, as interpreted by the best scholarship of the ages, is the condition of admission into his church and of continued fellowship with the whole body of believers.

7. Liberty of opinion in all matters indifferent, or nonessential, or which are not inconsistent with Christian faith or conduct.

This, it will be seen, was an effort to attain to catholicity of faith, of teaching, and of practice. It involved the surrender of names, doctrines and practices, which had been very dear to those who committed themselves to this program of union, and it was a severe test of their sincerity and earnest desire for union. It wrought a revolution in the doctrinal beliefs and practices of the very men who were leaders in the movement. But they were "not disobedient to the heavenly vision."

It is a pertinent question to raise at this point, Are the features above mentioned truly catholic in their nature, that is, such as are believed everywhere and by all Christians? At first thought, it might seem that some of them are not, but we believe a further and maturer reflection will show that they express what all Protestants, at least, either explicitly or implicitly admit to be true. For instance, it may be asked, whether this rejection of all human creeds as binding upon the conscience is not contrary to the belief and practice of those Protestant bodies which have doctrinal creeds and confessions other than the Bible. To this it may be replied that it is a cardinal doctrine of Protestantism, expressed in the very creeds themselves, that the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments constitute the only infallible rule of faith and practice. In rejecting the binding authority of human creeds, therefore, we are in perfect harmony with the Protestant principle and are only carrying it out to its legitimate results.

No religious body in Christendom would claim for a moment that its own creed offers an adequate basis for Christian union. These creeds were never intended for anything more than the basis of denominational union and fellowship. The only creed which all Christians believe, and on which they can unite, is the old creed confessed by Simon Peter on the coast of Caesarea Phillippi—"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God." To believe on him, and to wear his name—that is common ground which all can occupy without any sacrifice of truth or conscience. Of course, obedience to Christ in his commandments and ordinances is involved in our acceptance of him as Savior and Lord. Whatever he commands, the faith which accepts him as Lord will obey. In all else there must be liberty for difference of opinion without interfering with Christian fellowship. There can never be any Christian union without the recognition of this principle of individual liberty in all matters not directly enjoined upon us by the authority of Christ. The meaning of what he has enjoined directly, or through his apostles, is to be interpreted by the consensus of scholarship in the church. If anything be of doubtful meaning according to the world's best scholarship, this should be made a matter of liberty concerning which every man is to be fully persuaded in his own opinion. This assumes that every believer in Christ desires to do what Christ has commanded him to do. Nothing short of this is faith in its New Testament meaning.

This, it would seem, is Christianity reduced to its least common denominator. In other words, it is the "irreducible minimum" without which you can not have a church, or Christianity in any visible or practicable form. On this foundation of faith in Christ, and of loyal obedience to him, has been built the Church of the Lord Jesus, and on that foundation it rests today. There are a thousand things which may enter into the enrichment of Christian life when we have once built upon this foundation, but these things are not to be added to the foundation and made a part of the conditions of entrance upon the Christian life. If this were done, the basis of fellowship would cease to be catholic and many would become Christians without being able to accept this basis of fellowship. This has been the source of our divisions and subdivisions in the religious world. We have not sufficiently distinguished between the things that are vital and essential, which belong to the faith, and the things which are incidental and inferential, which are matters of subsequent knowledge and investigation.

Is It a Step Toward Unity?

In another place we print an article from Brother Lucas, who must now be numbered among our veterans, on the subject of federation. It is a great pleasure to us to note the spirit which nearly all of our elderly men have manifested upon this subject. Their memory carries them back to the earlier days of our history, and they know full well how the unity of God's people was a great, burning passion in the hearts of our leaders.

The only reason why Brother Lucas has "stood in a questioning attitude on this subject" is, as he explains, the confusion which has arisen as to what is involved in federation. He rightly says the "one great purpose of our Restoration movement is to co-operate with any man, or any body of men, that will help us advance our great work of Chritian union where we can do so without the sacrifice of the truth or the liberty that is in Jesus Christ, our only Lord and Master." He asks, "Now, is this federation as you understand it? If so, surelv no one can oppose it." As our readers very well understand, we have never advocated any kind of federation that involved any sacrifice of the truth or the liberty that is in Jesus Christ. For the purpose of federation each religious body must be left entirely free to work out what it believes to be its own providential mission, while co-operating as far as it can see its way to do so, with other Christians in the accomplishment of common Christian aims. There can be no doubt that this working together, as far as we can see alike, is the very best way of promoting a more perfect unity.

Of course, Brother Lucas would have attended the New York Inter-Church Conference if the way had been opened for him to do so, and his heart would have been filled to overflowing with the things which he would have seen and heard. No one in all that conference, no matter what religious body he represented, had the remotest idea that anything said or done by those there assembled would bind anybody else, except as the truth compels men to certain lines of action. All that has been said by certain writers about "binding the churches" is, as Brother Lucas says, "almost ludicrous."

The only question, Brother Lucas says, which confronts him is, "Can I help to answer the prayer of mv Lord for Christian unity by joining the federation host?" None of us would care very much for federation if we did not see in it a step toward that unity for which our Lord prayed. We have no reason to expect that the Lord is going to give us any greater unity than we now have until we use what he has already given us. It is as much a demand of Christ's teaching that we put to some practical use the unity we already possess, as it is to labor and pray for a more perfect union. "He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much: and he that is unrighteous in a very little is unrighteous also in much."

It is not to be forgotten, too, that there are many great and pressing tasks which now confront the church which can be accomplished only by our united action. In this connection the sentiment which Brother Lucas quotes from an old address more than twenty years ago, is well worth studying to-day. We had supposed that we were the pioneer in advocating federation, when we urged it in an address at Richmond, Va., in one of our national conventions in 1894, but we yield the honor to Brother Lucas. He can not afford to go back on his former utterances, and he will not. As we stood together in the old days for the Union of States, so we shall stand together for the union of churches until there shall be "one flock and one shepherd," even as we have one flag and one country. Brother Lucas may feel assured, and may assure his brethren, that if, in the future, there should be any developments in connection with the federation movement which are contrary to the spirit and aim of our movement, that the men who favor it to-day will be the first to repudiate it, and the reasons therefor would be the most effective proclamation we have ever made in behalf of our plea for union. But to turn away from this plan of co-operation while it has all the promise of promoting the very ends we seek to accomplish, would be to advertise our own unfitness for participation, to say nothing of leadership, in this forward movement for the realization of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers.

Notes and Comments.

We regret that the limitations of space compel us to give only part of the address of J. J. Haley, on "Union of the Baptists and Disciples," delivered at the Indianapolis congress. We hope to have space to print the remainder next week, together with the reply of Dr. Colby.

The growth in the Bible school attendance and the increased value that is being attached to the Bible or Sunday-school as an institiution for the systematic study of the Bible, is one of the encouraging signs of the times. This work is fundamental to all permanent advance of the kingdom of God.

The Gospel of Christ is a many-sided remedy for human ills. Sometimes we need the gospel of peace; sometimes the gospel of conflict. Sometimes we need the gospel of industry and enterprise; sometimes the gospel of rest and recreation. Sometimes we need the gospel of civic righteousness; sometimes the gospel of personal purity. Sometimes we need the gospel of independence, in which every man and every religious body must bear its own burdens. Sometimes we need the gospel of federation and united effort, in which we are to bear each other's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ. Let us have no narrow and cramped idea of the Gospel of Christ, which is the divine panacea for all our human ills.

Rev. Dr. Samuel T. Carter has created something of a sensation by addressing a letter to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, which meets May 18 in Des Moines, in which he repudiates the Westminster confession of faith, which he once "believed to be the truth of God," but which he "utterly rejects" now as "setting forth the character of the heavenly Father." He says: "There never was, there is not now, and there never will be, such a God as the God of the Westminster confession. It is an idol of man's invention as truly as any worship in Delhi, Peking, or Africa." He regards the confession as an inadequate expression of the love of God. "I believe," says he, "that the Westminster confession darkens and denies this great love of God, and should not be retained as a confession by any church to-day, and that our church is false to its greatest duty of being a true witness for God so long as it retains this confession." Upon this protest and confession he invokes "the blessing of Almighty God and the kindly judgment of all honest men." It remains to be seen what action, if any, will be taken by the General Assembly concerning this statement by one of its veteran pastors.

The incident cited above illustrates the impossibility of framing a creed for one age that will prove satisfactory for all ages. The average Presbyterian minister of to-day is not excelled by any of his fellow-preachers in exalting the love of God in his preaching, but the creed which was made under other conditions does not fully express the thought of to-day. Hence this conflict between a creed of a former century and the thought and feeling of to-day. The time for the authoritative, unyielding human creed has passed, but the old creed confessed by Simon Peter abideth now, as then, the foundation of the Church, and whosoever buildeth thereon shall not be ashamed.

The evangelistic movements of the Disciples of Christ in Kentucky have disturbed the serenity and peace of mind of Rev. F. M. Thomas, of Owensboro, Ky., who has written an article to his church paper warning his Methodist brethren against what seems to him to be "A Revival of Campbellism" in that state. It is to be regretted that Brother Thomas has allowed that little green-eyed demon to prompt him to write such an article, for we infer from his writing that he is capable of better things, and that he would write more satisfactorily to himself in a different vein. R. H. Crossfield, our minister in the same town, has taken the matter up in his pulpit and has replied to his fellow-pastor, Mr. Thomas, in a very dignified and effective way. If Rev. Mr. Thomas really believes that a revival among the Disciples of Christ in Kentucky is not a good thing for the cause of Christ, and had pointed out, in a brotherly way, the reasons why he thought so, there is not a religious paper among us that would not have published his article and given it due consideration. It takes a long while for even the preachers to find the "more excellent way." We will all find it at last, however, and Satan will have less occasion to rejoice over the use of his tactics by those who are professedly arrayed against him.

The following reply to Brother Frazier has been in type more than a month, waiting for space:

We have received, but mislaid, some questions from Brother E. L. Frazier, asking, as we remember, what would be the effect of federation in the following situations: (1) Where a number of members live in a town in which there is no church of their own, would federation require that they should join another church? (2) In case it was deemed wise by these members to establish a church of their own, would they have to ask consent of the churches in the town to do so? (3) If only pedobaptist churches existed in the town, would that fact be taken into consideration? One statement will answer nearly all these questions: Church federation requires no Christian, of any name or creed, to violate his conscience, or to do aught he does not believe to be right. We can guarantee the endorsement of that sentiment by every friend of federation. As to the first question, we have more than once given our advice in such cases. Where there is no likelihood of establishing a church let such members meet and worship with one of the existing churches as fraternal associates, not taking membership, but being recognized as Christian people who wish to enjoy Christian privilege and bear such part of the expense and work as they may feel able to do, until they remove or a church of their own is established. (2) When the time comes to establish a church, either by the local members or by a missionary board, after duly considering the needs of the place, let the work be undertaken, not as enemies to existing churches, but as brethren of a common Lord, having a dispensation of truth to present to the community. (3) The absence of a church practicing believers' baptism in the town, would certainly be a fact to be taken into consideration in deciding the advisability of establishing another church. It ought to be understood that these local problems are to be worked out in each community according to the needs of the situation and under the spirit of Christ, all seeking to do that which will best promote his glory. Here and there will arise differences of opinion, no doubt, but in such case the rule is to differ in love and let each be loyal to what seems to him to be right. The moment we come to regard each other as allies instead of enemies, all these problems will solve themselves. It is probable that in some localities the sectarian spirit prevails to such an extent as to make local federation impracticable. Sectarianism is the only foe that federation has to fear. But if this be the case in certain localities, that need not interfere with federation in its wider scope, or in other localities where it is possible. This plan of co-operation will have to grow, like every other good thing, as people come to see its benefits.

Editor's Easy Chair.

To travel through the country in the month of May is to witness a continuous exhibition of Nature's beauties. As the train glides along there is an ever-changing and never-ending panorama of beautiful pictures which charm the eye and gladden the heart. Here is a farm with its growing young wheat, a promise of the coming harvest; there is an orchard in blossom, with its prophecy of summer fruit; here is a group of forest trees robed with fresh, young leaves, where the birds are singing and nesting; here flows a meandering stream along whose banks flowers are blooming, and whose winding course is marked by the trees and underbrush which are watered by it; yonder, through the trees, is an opening vista of farms and homes, limited in its range only by the distant horizon or by some intervening range of hills, on which the sunlight falls and which it crowns with a halo of glory; the farmer, following his plow as it turns over the rich soil, the herds of cattle grazing contentedly in the pastures and the happy children playing in the dooryard, give the touch of life to the scene. If a panoramic picture like this were only exhibited once a century, those fortunate enough to live at the time of its appearance would probably appreciate their great privilege; or if it were only exhibited in one spot of the world men would make pilgrimages to it from all parts of the earth. But so prodigal is Nature that she prepares this feast of beauty every year, and almost everywhere where people can live, and makes it accessible to the poor and to the rich. It is sad that so many have no eyes to see and no hearts to appreciate and be thankful for this munificence of Nature in clothing the earth with beauty and filling it with the glory of its Creator.

It was the Editor's privilege to be present during the past week at the Southern Illinois Ministerial Institute held in the beautiful and historic old town of Albion, capital of Edwards county. Away back in the early part of the last century some distinguished English families from the Old World wended their way into the wilds of the new, and settled there in the wilderness, creating a town which they called by the poetic name of old England, "Albion." Many were the struggles and hardships endured by these bold pioneers, even though they were men of wealth and prominence. Our Flowers and our Edwardses are the descendants of these old families which came west to be the founders of civilization in this part of the new world. Edwards county is distinguished for not having a saloon within the memory of the present generation, and, naturally enough, its jail has no inmates. If the whole country could make up its mind to dispense with saloons it would be able to dispense with a large number of its jails, penitentiaries, almshouses and other institutions for the care of the homeless and the unfortunate, as well as the vicious and law-breaking classes of society. It has been 12 years since our former visit to Albion, and many of the old pillars in the church and community then have passed on to the life beyond. The church there, however, under the wise and efficient care of C. C. Garrigues, was never in a more flourishing condition than at present. Brother Garrigues is an Indianan by birth, but after his entrance upon the ministry he spent three years as assistant pastor to Bro. A. B. Philputt in our First Church in Philadelphia. The church at Albion deems itself exceedingly fortunate in having secured him, and his influence has been felt not only throughout the town, but throughout the surrounding country. And herein is a suggestion to all preachers in the county seats, or in other towns, to have a care for the interests of the cause in their county and the region round about. By occasional visits to some weak and discouraged church he can impart new life and hope, and make wise suggestions that will be very helpful to them, especially in the way of assisting them in securing needed preaching and pastoral care. It is easy for a minister in this way to greatly multiply his usefulness and make his church a missionary center for all the adjacent country. So Brother Garrigues is doing at Albion.

As to the institute, it was one of the best, we were told, in the history of southern Illinois. There were probably about 40 ministers present, and visitors outside the town, and these, with a fine local attendance, gave the institute a packed house at each evening session and a good audience throughout the day. We will leave to other hands any detailed report of the institute that may be thought necessary. It will suffice here to state that the brethren had a number of live wires to handle, and considering this fact it is remarkable that there were no greater shocks experienced. It was anything but a sleepy institute. The people had no difficulty in keeping awake. We did not arrive in time to hear all the papers and discussion, but such questions as "Church Federation," "Christian Journalism," "The Holy Spirit in Manifestation," "Is There a Demand for a New Apologetic"? "The Distinguishing Principles of the Disciples of Christ," "Relation of the Minister to Civic Righteousness" and "The Present Phase of the Christian Union Problem" were, of course, all "loaded" and gave rise to a very spirited, but entirely parliamentary and good-natured, discussion. Some of the brethren out of the district who spoke were President R. E. Hieronymus, of Eureka College; A. McLean, president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society; William Oeschger, pastor of our church in Vincennes, Ind., Marion Stevenson, state Sunday-school superintendent, of Bloomington, and the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist. Among the veterans present were our venerable brother, J. A. Williams, of Salem, and W. L. Crim, of West Frankfort, the former having reached almost his 88th year. These men have been a tower of strength to our cause in that region. The well-known preacher and lecturer, L. H. Stine, late of Lawrenceville, Ill., now of Tipton, Ind., presided over the institute and delivered an able address on the first evening on the "Sphere of Brotherhood," which was highly commended. Many of the younger men who were present are preachers of strength and ability, who are doing good work in their respective fields.

Concerning the outcome of all the discussions and addresses it was felt by all that the atmosphere was distinctly clearer, and that the institute had proved an unmixed blessing to the community and to the cause in southern Illinois. As to the subject of federation, it developed there, just as it has in every meeting we have attended, that the opposition is based almost entirely on a misconception of what is meant and proposed by federation, such as that it involves the surrender of our position, or the compromise of our principles, or that we subject ourselves to the authority of some committee or organization, and that it is a substitute for Christian union for which we have contended. We had hardly expected, at this stage of the discussion, to find these objections still urged, but wrong ideas are much more easily sown broadcast in the minds of people than they are removed. The most conservative brethren present, at the close of the discussion, declared they were heartily in favor of co-operation with our religious neighbors to the fullest extent possible that is consistent with our plea, and that involves no sacrifice of conscience or liberty or truth. As we have urged nothing more than this the discussion developed that we were practically together.

In one of the beautiful Christian homes of the town—that of Brother and Sister Bower—the Editor of this paper and his colaborer, George L. Snively, found that gracious sort of entertainment that makes one realize the preciousness of genuine Christian hospitality. Here, in this beautiful old town, is located the Southern Illinois Collegiate Institute, under the auspices of our Congregational brethren, but undenominational in character, and Christian in spirit. At the invitation of Prof. Bince, a leading member of the Christian Church there, we had the privilege of addressing the students one morning, and of meeting personally a large number of them. The school is doing an important work in that part of the state. When we all sang at the close, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," it was with a warm glow of brotherly love and in the blessed hope of renewing this fellowship in the land of eternal youth.

Bishops in Rebellion

By William Durban

Prelude.

Deepest consternation has been caused in England by the tragic intelligence from California. It was hoped at first that further information would show that the catastrophe had been exaggerated. Hundreds of British families have relatives in San Francisco and other cities of the stricken region. Kind friends of my own dwell there, both American and English. Therefore, the calamity seems to be as much for us as for the American people to be a national disaster.

Sir Hiram Maxim, who lives in London, has written to the papers expressing his opinion that volcanic eruptions and earthquakes will continue intermittently until, in some distant future, the earth will swallow the sea and the atmosphere, as the moon long since did. Thus he unconsciously comments on the text, "There shall be no more sea."

An Educational Earthquake.

The two English archbishops and thirty of the bishops are in the attitude of mutiny against this liberal government and its education bill. The minister of education, Mr. Augustine Birrell, is the "lion of the hour." And he is a lion that the prelates and other clericals would dearly like to cage and to muzzle. For he has, in the name of the government, newly come into power, introduced into the House of Commons such an educational measure as ardent sectarian spirits must regard with horror. And all over the land the majority of the Anglican clergy are up in arms, disclaiming, threatening and vowing that they will conjure up hosts of religious rebels against this scheme of national education on undenominational lines.

I greatly wonder at the conduct of these "right reverend lord bishops and fathers in God." For when the last Parliament was dissolved and the recent general election was approaching, these dignitaries of divinity were invited by the primate to pray that heaven would direct affairs so that wise and discreet men should be returned as legislators. Now, this petition was graciously and emphatically answered, for we have assembled at Westminster a genuine witenagemote of wise, advanced and progressive men, who have at heart the interests of the common people. But it seems that the bishops are not, after all, in any sense pleased. On the contrary, all but three of them are exceedingly angry. The bishop of London is calling a great meeting at the Albert Hall, London, to protest against the bill as a sacrilegious measure.

Colossal Inconsistency.

These high church clergy in England remind me of the man who prayed that he might be guided in choice of a wife. He added to his petition the proviso, "But let it be Mary." So it is with the special prayers of our prelates. They entreated heaven, but with a keen reservation in favor of candidates after their own fancy. Let me explain what the Church of England is fighting for. In the first place, the clergy hunger to retain power over the teachers. This they used to enjoy in an outrageous degree. Under the parish system of what were called "national schools," which were really church schools, the vicar or rector was the lord and master of the school teachers, appointing them, managing them and dismissing them at his autocratic will. But this system was liable to shocking abuses. The average schoolmaster was a sort of servant of all work of the dominant cleric, acting often as his organist and choirmaster, and in some cases I have actually known the teacher to be so obsequious as to weed the parson's garden.

Religious Tests.

Another thing the clergy are anxious to retain, besides personal authority over the elementary public schools, is the power of enforcing religious tests. As long as the system could be kept up in full blast the vast majority of the teachers were appointed to their posts as being members of the establishment. A Nonconformist was tabooed and outlawed. When the board schools were set up 30 years ago these came into competition with the church schools and other denominational schools, such as those specially sustained by Wesleyans and Romanists. And gradually a feeling has increased in the public mind that education should be freed from all sectarian shackles and denominational tests. But the whole of the problem involved has recently come to the front with great force. It has many sides. Many questions are being agitated. The papers here are full of discussions of these questions. Is the Bible to be taught in the schools? Is it to be simply read without explanation? Is there to be a brief religious service in the schools? Or are all religious exercises to be prohibited?

The Ultimate Peril.

I am in favor of simple, undenominational teaching in all schools. So are the majority of the English people. But the noisy and arrogant high churchmen are furious at the notion that they are not to be allowed, should Mr. Birrell's bill pass, to impose their creed on the teachers and the pupils in the schools supported by public rates. A great storm is thus in process of brewing. It will be no miniature maelstrom, no mere tempest in a teacup. For the Church of England is a mighty institution, an immense political power, and a tremendous social force. Moreover, the people at large are not prepared for what may become the ultimate resort. Secular education may become the final and only alternative. There may be no other escape from the appalling wrangling of conflicting sects, seeking to grab the people's schools. But the government will surely stand firm. Every facility is to be given to the denominations to impart their particular instruction in homes outside the regular study program. But this does not satisfy the clergy. They are determined to force their view on the nation. So that we are entering on a great conflict. The masses of the people will be bewildered. The House of Lords will probably mutilate the bill. Then the Commons will "send it up" again. If the lords finally trifle with it, the storm will increase to the caliber of a hurricane. My own opinion is that before long the great question of the disestablishment of the Church of England will be forced to the front by the folly of the clergy themselves. We are tending to that consummation through this clerical fatuity, but the clergy can not see it. So they may be hoisted with their own petard.

The Way Out.

How is England to get out of this tiresome tangle? There are three principles concerning education upon which the Liberals are generally agreed. The first is public control. The second is the abolition of religious tests. The third is the responsibility of the parent in the matter of his child's religious teaching. There will never be any peace for this nation until a general understanding is arrived at that these three principles shall be recognized and acted on. Then no particular form of religious teaching will be supported by the state. At present

A FINE MENU

One That Can Be Used In "Food Cure."

A man may try all sorts of drugs to help him to get well, but, after all, the "food cure" is the method intended by Nature.

Anyone can prove the efficacy of the food cure by making use of the following breakfast each morning for fifteen or twenty days:

A dish containing not more than four heaping teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts food, enough good, rich cream to go with it, some raw or cooked fruit, not more than two slices of entire wheat bread, and not more than one cup of Postum Food Coffee, to be sipped, not drank hurriedly. Let this suffice for the breakfast.

Let one meal in the day consist of an abundance of good meat, potato, and one other vegetable.

This method will quickly prove the value of the selection of the right kind of food to rebuild the body and replace the lost tissue which is destroyed every day and must be made up, or disease of some sort enters in. This is an age of specialists, and the above suggestions are given by a specialist in food values, dietetics and hygiene.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

The last four days have been the greatest of our cruise. Wednesday, March 7, we first saw the shores of the Holy Land. As the good ship steamed into the Bay of Acre, a famous spot in the age of the Crusades, we saw before us Mount Carmel, and in the distance on the left the snowy cap of Hermon. A long line of palms stretched along shore on one side and on the other the little city of Caifa, the last refuge of the Knights of St. John, before their Mediterranean wanderings which ended at Malta. Caifa has now 12,000 people and a flourishing German colony which has infused new life into the region round about. Towering above the town to the right overlooking the sea is the point where Elijah's servant saw the cloud about the size of a man's hand. Carmel has a great cloud of sacred story clustering about its rocky heights.

All the town turned out to meet us. The Arab sailors, singing one of their plaintive chants to the oars, quickly landed the pilgrims, and through the dense and noisy crowd we passed, and were soon on our way across the Kishon, which ran red with the blood of the prophets of Baal and with the tide of many battles, and winding around the base of Carmel where Elijah, the most dramatic figure in the Bible, had the victorious contest for the supremacy of Jehovah. "The Place of Burning," where the sacrifice and the slaughter of the false prophets it is supposed took place, is pointed out, and at the point where Jael slew Sisera, Harosheth of the Gentiles, we rested. Beyond lay the great fertile plain of Esdraelon, where Barak and Gideon won their victories, where Saul and Josiah fell and where the Maccabees, the Crusaders, and Napoleon made history. It is a vast meadow, rich as an Illinois prairie, twenty miles in length, or more, and perhaps ten in width, largely owned by one man in Beyrout, who pays his peasant farmers a franc a day and revels in wealth while the poor are oppressed. The people here are beggars in a land which should blossom as the rose, because of the burden of taxation and the hard hand of the oppressor. One can not find more fertile soil, and wheat, barley, grapes, figs, olives and pomegranates yield abundantly. It is spring, and the peasants are plowing, and the fields are covered with tens of thousands of lovely flowers. Our guide said: "We do not cultivate flowers. We do not need to. God gives them." Every moment we were reminded of our Lord's word, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

Who could ever forget the ride to Nazareth on a bright, glad spring day? Who can sleep his first night in Nazareth, whatever may be the comfort of his couch or the weariness of his frame? Who can ride through these absorbing scenes and view the upland mountain-rimmed plain where nestles the city of our Lord's life for so many years, and not be thrilled and silenced? Who can walk the streets, narrow and dirty as they may be now, and thronged with children where he once played as a child, and mingle with the shepherds and craftsmen, vine dressers and tillers of the soil, of whom he in his young manhood was one, and climb the hill which gives the widest sweep of vision in all Palestine, which no doubt was one of his most frequented and most delightful resorts, and not feel nearer to him and most supremely blessed?

There are a thousand things of interest in Nazareth. Beside the strange people and customs, the shops and bazaars and market places, the camels and donkeys, the caravansaries, such as our Lord was born in, and camel trains with which he no doubt sometimes journeyed, there are the Cave of Annunciation and the Kitchen of Mary, the carpenter shop of Joseph and stone slab on which he dined with his disciples and the synagogue in which he stood up to read the Scriptures, and other supposed places associated with him. All of which, however doubtful, have a great fascination for the visitor. Two places there are we may be quite certain about: the fountain on the edge of the village, which has been from time immemorial the one unfailing source of water supply, and the ridge which rises 500 feet above it, known as Neber Said. The fountain is called the Virgins' Fountain and is the center of the social life of Nazareth where women and maidens gather for gossip and fill their earthen pitchers, as they did no doubt in Mary's time. I took one of these pitchers which the women balance so gracefully on their heads, resting on a little cap, and lifted it to my shoulder and it must have weighed 40 pounds. They carry them apparently with greatest ease and without touching them with their hands. The water is clear and cold and beautiful, and though they tell you never to drink the water of Palestine, we did with perfect comfort and confidence.

The other point of certainty is the Hill Top. Who can look from this eminence and not be moved? To the north towers Hermon, snow-capped, 10,000 feet above the sea; the Mountains of Lebanon, the land of Zebulon and Naphtahli. To the west, the blue waters of the Mediterranean were visible with our ship lying in the harbor, plainly seen with the naked eye, though twenty-three miles away, and Mount Carmel and the place of sacrifice, and the valley of Kishon and beautiful plain of Esdraelon. Eastward lay Mount Tabor, and south, Little Hermon, and the Mountains of Gilboa, Samaria and the plain of the Jordan. A dozen famous villages are pointed out. Sepphoris, where Mary's mother was born; Nain, where Jesus raised the widow's son from the dead; Endor, where Saul had his experience with the witch; Megiddo and Jezreel, where Ahab had his summer capital and palace, his Versailles, the scene of revelry and tragedy; for here was Naboth's vineyard, and here Jezebel was eaten by dogs, and here Israelites were defeated by the Philistines and Saul and Jonathan fell. We may hear David sing: "I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan: very pleasant hast thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women. Saul and Jonathan were lovely in and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided." We may look at Nain and hear the touching story: "Behold a dead man carried out, the only son of his mother, and she a widow! And when the Lord saw her, he had compassion on her and said unto her, weep not. And he came and touched the bier: and they that bare him stood still. And he said: Young man, I say unto thee, arise. And he that was dead sat up and began to speak. And he delivered him to his mother." We may look on the broad plain of Esdraelon, famed for great armies, and see kings and conquerors passing over it, from Assyria and Babylon on the east and Egypt on the south, the Israelites coming down from the hill country and binding the Canaanites who dwelt "in the land of the valley" with their "chariots of iron:" Barak inspired by the song of Deborah rushing down from the hills and sweeping away the nine hundred iron chariots of Sisera: the army of Sennacherib, when

> "The Assyrian came down like the wolf on the fold,
> And his cohorts were gleaming with silver and gold,
> And the sheen of their spears was like stars on the sea,
> When the blue waves roll nightly on deep Galilee."

Here Roman fought crusader and Turk, and Napoleon was checked by the English when marching from Egypt by way of Jaffa seeking the conquest of Syria to march on Constantinople and "enter Europe by the back door;" and here in the

TRANSFORMATIONS

Curious Results When Coffee Drinking is Abandoned.

It is almost as hard for an old coffee toper to quit the use of coffee as it is for a whiskey or tobacco fiend to break off, except that the coffee user can quit coffee and take up Postum Food Coffee without any feeling of a loss of the morning beverage, for when Postum is well boiled and served with cream, it is really better in point of flavor than most of the coffee served nowadays, and to the taste of the connoisseur it is like the flavor of fine Java.

A great transformation takes place in the body within ten days or two weeks after coffee is left off and Postum Food Coffee used, for the reason that the poison to the nerves has been discontinued and in its place is taken a liquid that contains the most powerful elements of nourishment.

It is easy to make this test and prove these statements by changing from coffee to Postum Food Coffee.

"There's a reason."

Out of Bondage By S. B. Lindsay

CHAPTER II.

The lengthy quotations from Campbell and Errett prove that the present attitude of "The Christian Standard" and its contributors is wrong, that if the "plea" is being surrendered it is not by those men who talk and write like Campbell and Errett when discussing our attitude toward other religious parties. They also prove that sectarianism is not something we must hunt for in the "sects"—we have plenty of it at home, and our editors must exercise the greatest care and wisdom in their journals, if our brethren are to be assisted in "exorcising" the demon of sectarianism.

If you will now go back and re-read the quotations from A. Campbell, you will be prepared to appreciate the following remarks of Brother Errett, after making the said quotation:

"When it is remembered this was said, not, as has been intimated in regard to similar utterances, when flattered by Protestant parties on account of his able defence of Protestantism, but in the times of "The Christian Baptist," when Baptists and Pedobaptists were alike bitterly opposing and misrepresenting him, it will help us to appreciate the largeness of heart and catholicity of spirit which prompted his labors for reformation. We pause not now to inquire as to the correctness of the position; we quote it simply to show in what spirit—even when most fiercely assailing sectarianism—this remarkable man viewed the Protestant parties, and with what a catholic aim he labored to redeem them from the mischiefs of denominationalism."

I wish the readers of "The Christian Standard" were permitted to feed weekly on such sentiments as those. By all means it should continue to publish extracts from THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, that its readers may at least get a taste of the "largeness of heart and catholicity of spirit" of the fathers, as now expressed and manifested in their "spiritual descendants."

Hear Isaac Errett again: "That the spirit, principles and aims of this movement are genuinely catholic, we have no hesitation in claiming. That there have been no errors or inconsistencies in its advocacy, it would be worse than folly to assert. (This was both history and prophecy combined.) Some one has said that it requires a spice of intolerance to assail intolerance successfully; and it may be that a spice of sectarianism gives energy to successful assaults on sectarianism. But these are the accidents, not the essential characteristics of the plea. It must be judged in the light of its principles, and of the main current of its tendencies; and in this light we hold it to be anti-sectarian and truly Christian." Let us hope that the "main current of its tendencies shall continue along this catholic, anti-sectarian, truly Christian way, until the unity and peace of apostolic times is restored, and the church in a position to accomplish its mission in the world.

What are some of the characteristics of the plea, so ably advocated by Campbell and Errett? Brother Errett sums up our plea thus:

"1. It insists on faith in Jesus as the Messiah, the Son of God, as the only condition of admission to baptism and membership in the church.

"2. It enjoins obedience to Jesus, the Head of the Church, as the only condition of fellowship in the church.

"3. It advocates the union of all believers on these two considerations: Faith in Jesus; obedience to Jesus—thus letting party names and organizations and creeds give place to a spiritual brotherhood which, possessed of whatever diversity of opinion or of practice outside the simple teachings of the New Testament, shall be one in faith and in character as the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ."

"Brief as is the history of this movement, much that belonged to its earliest days has either not been known, or has been too soon forgotten, and needs to be recalled. (Slowly here.) The controversies that afterward grew up on baptism, spiritual influences, etc., have led many to regard it as a sort of relationalistic, materialistic, ritualistic theory, engendered by a narrow, intolerant, hypocritical spirit, and owing its success to a plausible, but shallow exegesis—an enslavement to the mere letter of the Scriptures. There never was a greater mistake."

"We ask the attention of the reader to some extracts from the first documents given to the public by the leaders in this movement. In the Declaration and Address of the Christian Association of Washington, Pa., written by Thomas Campbell, then a Presbyterian, and published in 1809, we have the following avowal of sentiment and purpose:

"Moreover, being well aware, from sad experience, of the heinous nature and pernicious tendency of religious controversy among Christians, tired and sick of the bitter jarrings and janglings of a party spirit, we would desire to be at rest; and, were it possible, we would also desire to adopt and recommend such measures as would give rest to our brethren throughout all the churches, as would restore unity, peace and purity to the whole church of God. This desirable rest, however, we utterly despair of either to find ourselves, or to be able to recommend to our brethren, by continuing amid the diversity and rancor of party contentions, the veering uncertainty and clashing of human opinions; nor, indeed, can we expect to find it anywhere but in Christ and his simple Word, which is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. Our desire, therefore, for ourselves and our brethren would be, that rejecting human opinions and the inventions of men as of any authority, or as having any place in the Church of God, we might forever cease from further contentions about such things; returning to and holding fast by the original standard; taking the divine Word alone for our rule; the Holy Spirit for our teacher and guide, to lead us into all truth; and Christ alone, as exhibited in the Word, for our salvation; that by so doing, we may be at peace among ourselves, follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."—Life of Thomas Campbell, pp. 25, 26.

In the Declaration and Address, published by the Christian Association, we have the following explicit statement:

"It is to us a pleasing consideration that all the Churches of Christ, which mutually acknowledge each other as such, are not only agreed in the great doctrines of faith and holiness, but are also materially agreed as to the positive ordinances of Gospel institution; so that our differences, at most, are about the things in which the kingdom of God does not consist; that is, about matters of private opinion or human invention. What a pity that the kingdom of God should be divided about such things! You are all dear brethren, equally included as the objects of our love and esteem. With you all we desire to unite in the bonds of an entire Christian unity, Christ alone being the head, the center; his Word, the rule; and explicit belief of, and manifest conformity to it in all things, the terms."

Now, if Brother Garrison has gone so far astray, what about Thomas Campbell, and Alexander Campbell, and Isaac Errett?

It seems to me that any person who will in this day of grace read through one issue of "The Christian Standard," and then seriously contend that it is a faithful exponent of the plea as represented by these large hearted and catholic spirited men, is wholly unconscious of how far he has drifted away from original ground.

And to see the deliberate attempt to weekly hold up the men who are the ablest exponents of that plea as false brethren, who are determined to divide the church, lead a party in the direction of denominationalism, surrender the plea, etc., is about the worst manifestation of an unholy and unsanctified discussion of a question on which good men are bound to differ that I can now recall.

Let me assure you that a great many who are expressing themselves in written protests, are nevertheless chagrined and mortified at the turn "The Christian Standard" is endeavoring to give to the discussion, and if it persists it will, without doubt, hear from them later.

An aged disciple asks if it is "a cardinal doctrine of the Disciples that only unleavened bread be used at the Lord's table." Certainly not. Perhaps the majority of our churches do use the unleavened bread, but all do not, and the practice has never been considered vital to the proper observance of the Lord's supper. The bread used by our Lord when the supper was instituted was probably unleavened, and it was also probably barley bread. But there is no specific direction that the bread to be used in this memorial supper shall be unleavened or made of barley.

Can Baptists and Disciples Unite? By J. J. Haley

We publish herewith the paper upon "What Obstacles, If Any, Exist in the Way of Union Between Baptists and Disciples of Christ?" read by J. J. Haley, of the Seventh Street Christian Church, Richmond, Va. We hope to publish next the paper by Dr. Colby, representing the Baptists.

It is a matter of great satisfaction and universal congratulation that the union sentiment has so ripened and matured among the people of God in these latter times that practical steps are being taken in many places to lift the whole question out of the sphere of abstract discussion into that of concrete realization. Alexander Campbell, speaking of Baptist and Pedobaptists in his debate with N. L. Rice, in 1843, said he desired "union among ourselves and union against us." In this significant utterance Mr. Campbell identified himself with the great family of immersionists of which the Baptists constituted and still constitute the vast majority. It is clear that our distinguished reformer, in the larger sense, regarded himself and his brethren as members of the baptized brotherhood of Christians known as Baptists; and if we still regard the great family of affusionists, our Pedobaptist brethren, as being against us, the consummation so devoutly to be wished in their unification is taking place to-day more rapidly than amongst ourselves. The amalgamation of the New Zealand Presbyterians, Canadian Methodists, and the two great branches of Presbyterianism in Scotland, except a handful of irreconcilable "Wee Frees," the organization of the Free Church Federation in England, by which the Non-Conformist brotherhood, including Baptists, has become for all practical purposes, substantially one, are instances to be followed by the drawing together of Pedobaptist churches on both sides of the Atlantic. The Inter-Church Conference in New York, representing twenty-eight denominations, and 18,000,000 of Protestant Christians, has precipitated the union question into the realm of practical politics, without much reference to the old line distinction between Baptists and Pedobaptists, and while federation is not union, it is a recognition of the underlying and fundamental unity already existing among evangelical Christians, and the first practical step toward union.

Family Reunion.

As to oneness among ourselves, in the immersion family, we are making commendable progress toward its final achievement. The triangular and most promising courtship proceeding with such earnestness and ardor between Baptists and Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ is marked by every indication of an early marriage. The writer of this address expects to announce the bans, be present to witness the ceremony, and to take some part in its solemnization if it is only to pronounce the benediction. An ecclesiastical wedding or treble wedding of this magnitude would be one of the most pregnant events in the history of the Christian religion, and I have little doubt of its consummation in the early years of the twentieth century. As far back as the year 1876, during the sessions of our national convention held in Richmond, Va., in the church where I now minister, an influential committee of representative men was appointed to meet a similar committee from the Baptist association, to consider the question of union between the two bodies. These eminent and godly men, on both sides, expressed with great heartiness and unanimity their desire for union, but the attritions of time and the softening and broadening influences of a better understanding of our holy religion had not worn away the dogmatic angularities of a century of strife, as they have in the better day of the present generation. As evidence of this fact, twenty-nine years later in the same city and in the same building, where these negotiations fell through, I was invited by the Baptist Ministerial Union of Richmond and Manchester to address it on the Disciple movement in relation to Baptists. I spoke with quite unrestrained freedom and frankness on the identity of the fundamental principles and purposes of the two bodies and the few superficial differences still remaining and was in no way surprised to hear some of the most distinguished men in the Baptist ministry emphatically reiterate the assertion that there was no longer any justifiable reason for the continued separation of these two great bodies of Christians. When I was asked to take part in this discussion by the honored president, he characterized this proposed interchange of views with representative Baptists as a "unique" feature in the program of the present congress. So it is, as far as this congress is concerned, but a similar comparison of principles always in an irenic and paternal spirit has been taking place in ministerial associations and lectureships, throughout the country for several years, where Baptists and Disciples have any considerable strength. I rejoice in this, for by such means a better understanding, mutual acquaintanceship, and ultimate union are to be secured.

Then and Now.

If the historic circumstances and dogmatic temper of the times made the original rupture between Baptists and Disciples inevitable, present conditions no longer justify the continuance of the separation. Theological issues which were veritable tweedledums and tweedledees, about which men violently contended seventy-five years ago, have passed into innocuous desuetude in these opening years of the twentieth century. Our ecclesiastical forefathers spent much of their time in chewing the sacred volume into pellets to throw at each other's heads. Polemic religion, the proving ourselves orthodox by apostolic blows and knocks now a back number, except in the backwoods, was the order of the day in the church militant of even less than fifty years ago. When our fathers walked abroad in the garden of God instead of plucking "the rich golden fruit in bright clusters pending," they chewed the bark, analyzed the sap, and cut down the limbs of the trees for theological shillalahs. The historic significance of the last thirty-five years has made itself manifest in the reaction against the controversial and sectarian Christianity of the first three quarters of the nineteenth century. Issues that were burning then have ceased to burn; they are scattered ashes and cold cinders now. The dogmatism which Douglas Jerrold defined as puppyism come to maturity has grown smaller by degrees and beautifully less in its power to magnify differences. Questions that constituted a casus belli in the revolutionary war between Baptists and Disciples have passed long ago in happy oblivion to the theological junk heap. Serious obstacles to unity and harmony then have no disturbing significance now. Calvinism as an issue has passed. Baptists as a whole were never very insistent in their Calvanistic proclivities, especially since the missionary denomination began its career and the Disciples never made the negation of Calvinistic opinions a condition of union or a test of fellowship. The creed question, a bone of contention in the early rupture and final separation of the two religious bodies, has passed as a dividing issue. Baptists to-day do not believe in human creeds and are as sound as ourselves on the creed that needs no revision. The celebrated sermon on the law, which did more than any other utterances to fix the stigma of heresy on the teachings of Alexander Campbell, and to sever his connection with the Baptist communion, would not to-day create a ripple on the surface, if preached before the obscurest and most belated association that lead in the condemnation of Professor Whitsitt. No Disciple would think of preaching it and no Baptist would object if he did. The doctrine that the law of Moses is binding on a Christian, under the dispensation of the Holy Spirit, is not insisted on to-day by any denomination known to me. How many fierce and eloquent debates were held on the order of faith and repentance in the old controversial days of our warfare? Sixty years ago, approximately, a small body of Disciples in Jeffersonville, Ind., wrote to Dr. L. L. Pinkerton, a distinguished pioneer preacher of Midway, Ky.:

"Let 'Em Pitch In!"

"Dear Brother Pinkerton: The Baptists over here are teaching that a man can not believe before he repents. Come over and set 'em right."

Dr. Pinkerton replied.

"Dear Brethren: You tell those Baptists in Jeffersonville if they can repent before they believe let 'em pitch in."

Forty years later it occurred to some one that this controversy had lasted long enough without a definition of terms. A little reflection brought the fact to the surface that this inconsequential debate was ridiculous because both parties had been using the leading terms in different senses and that there was no difference in the two bodies on this subject. If the word faith is used in the sense of intellectual persuasion or mental conviction of the truth of Christianity, then faith, of course, in this acceptation of the term, comes before repentance. If, however, we use the term faith in the sense of trust, its more distinctive moral and Scriptural sense, repentances comes first, for an impenitent man can not trust in Christ. Thus it came to be apparent that this old debate, like many others, was a mere logomachy, if indeed it had ever been in the range of psychological possibility, to tell which of these processes came first in the order of time, or was even desirable to know.

The two issues that have survived with more or less vitality as obstacles to union, will not, in my opinion, survive much longer, if indeed the majority of Baptists and Disciples are not already in substantial agreement, in principle if not in practice, concerning them. I refer, of course, to the design of baptism and the communion question. On neither side, as far as I am able to judge, is there any disposition to make a philosophy of baptism for the remission of sins, or a peculiar practice on the communion question a barrier to union, or a plank in the union platform. In thirty-five years of more or less familiar acquaintance with Baptist and Disciple literature, I have never seen a Disciple statement of fundamental principles as a proposed basis of union, with a word in it on the question of baptism for the remission of sins; nor a Baptist declaration of union essentials that included any phase of the practice of restricted communion. There seems to be a tacit assumption on both sides that questions like these may be left to individual and congregational interpretation, and "the process of the suns," that will bring us soon to a harmonizing and satisfactory solution

The Victory in New York

By J. P. Lichtenberger

Charles Reign Scoville, Evangelist.

J. P. Lichtenberger, Pastor.

The Lenox Avenue Union Church of the Disciples of Christ, 41 West One Hundred and Nineteenth street. J. P. Lichtenberger, pastor; Charles Reign Scoville and De Loss Smith, evangelists, has just closed the greatest meeting ever held by the Disciples east of Pittsburg. It began March 25 and closed April 30, with 208 additions.

The church was organized in 1889 by Dr. James M. Philputt and stands in almost the geographical center of the north half of New York city, with a population within walking distance of almost a million people. The writer succeeded Dr. Philputt in September, 1902. During this nearly four years' pastorate it has been our growing conviction that a meeting commensurate with our opportunities and needs could be held if undertaken on a metropolitan basis. It was clear that ordinary methods were inadequate, but ingenuity can devise much. The church is fortunate in having men and women of large vision and dauntless courage. They have been trained to face great problems resolutely. With such men and women great things are possible.

More than a year ago plans began to take shape for a campaign such as had not been undertaken by our churches in the East. Dr. Scoville was the man toward whom our eyes turned as the one to lead it. He consented. Then business began. The church was organized, a personal workers' class conducted, committees appointed and the one business of the church was the preparation for the meeting. Long lists of addresses of friends of our church were prepared and placed in the hands of calling committees under the skillful direction of our pastor's helper, Mrs. Nettie H. McCorkle. Printing and postage bills were large before the meeting began.

The meeting began March 25 with Brother De Loss Smith in charge of the music. Brother Scoville arrived April 4. There were additions from the start. With a few exceptions in the early part of the meeting there were additions at every service. There were 27 added Brother Scoville's first Sunday and 3 his last. The audiences were large. The first one to greet the evangelist was the largest midweek audience ever seen in the church. We had a splendid hearing to the end. The Sunday evening audiences taxed the utmost capacity of the building.

De Loss Smith, Singer.

On Sunday evening, April 22, we went to Harlem Opera House for our service. This is the largest and finest theater in Harlem. It was packed to the roof. Thousands of tickets for this meeting were distributed on the streets at elevated and subway stations by special permission of the city authorities. The street was almost blocked with people before the building was opened. The doors remained open for about twenty minutes until they had to be closed, every available corner being packed. Hundreds were unable to gain admittance.

A great chorus choir of 100 voices, led by Mr. Smith and backed up by Prof. Albertus Shelley's full orchestra, furnished the music. Dr. Scoville was at his best and preached a great sermon. In the after meeting, to which fully 500 people stayed, ten persons stepped out to confess Christ and scores signed cards, giving us many valuable addresses for future work. Hundreds learned through this meeting of the Disciples of Christ and already much good has resulted from the meeting.

The advertising was the great feature of the meeting. No cost was spared. A great political banner, 30x40 feet, was hung by special permit across the intersection of our two principal thoroughfares where tens of thousands saw it. It announced our meetings and had a picture of the evangelist, 4x6 feet.

Too much can not well be said of the part taken by the evangelists. They were the right men. Dr. Scoville is a general. He came with all his determination to see no difficulties, to have no defeat. Always optimistic, courteous and companionable, he went about the business of the meeting with the prayers and help of the people. He was well sustained by a devoted church. Brother Smith won the hearts of all with his first solo and remains a few weeks to assist in our work, while Brother Scoville goes to California.

Much was due to the faithful work of the church. No more loyal people can be found. A few faces and names appear with this story. Many more deserve equally to be mentioned.

Of the many results I suggest a few. For the local church we are greatly strengthened in numbers, holding first place now numerically among our New York churches. We have learned we can do many things which we thought impossible. We have discovered much latent talent. We have opened up new doors of opportunity and feel a new desire to enter.

For our cause in the East we feel a great victory has been won. We have demonstrated, what many have doubted, that great meetings can be held in the great cities of the East. It will mean much for our centennial crusade in the field of evangelism.

As Seen From the Dome.

Apocalypse we are told is to be fought the last great battle of the world which is to precede universal peace—Armageddon—the battle of Megiddo, the ancient name of Esdraelon. Tabor, wooded and green, tells of the transfiguration; Carmel, of Elisha and Elijah; Gilboa, rocky and barren, speaks of the beauty of Israel slain upon its high places; Hermon, lordly and snow-crowned, pictures the eternity of God's promises and the calmness of God's peace. But at our feet lies Nazareth—Nazareth which testifies as to the Life—the Life that was lived there—the Life which is the Light of the World.

This was the place. Here the Life began. Over these hills rambled the Holy Child. Down there at the Virgins' Fountain, the mother came often, leading him by the hand. Nazareth was his home. "And he went down with them and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them. And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man." The Jesus who is the Way, the Truth and the life was Jesus of Nazareth. Nazareth has little beauty. Not one of our Lord's people—not a Jew is to be found to-day in Nazareth. Christians are there. We were received warmly into a Christian home and saw their family life. Moslems are there. Greeks and Latins have their churches and contend for its sacred places. But there was lived the Life, and this makes it sacred. The houses are homely. Every one is a perfect cube—"the length and the breadth, and the height of it are equal." They have as much variety as so many blocks of stone hewn out of a quarry and have no virtue but in their masonry. The people are not handsome nor cleanly, but mostly poor and mean. They pester you. The smallest children cry, "Bachsheesh! Bachsheesh!" until you fairly run wild because of their importunities. But there was lived the Life. It is the cradle of our religion. It was the home of its founder. It has witnessed the beginning of a great history. In the Himalayas there is a stream which flows forth from under a glacier. It may be no more than others which issue from the region of eternal snow, but it is the source of the Ganges, a river which to hundreds of millions is like the river flowing out of the throne of God. So from this little mountain town of Galilee has gone forth the stream which is for the healing of the nations.

Mrs. Mabel S. Bartlett, who organized the chorus.

Hon. Willard H. Olmstead, President Board of Trustees.

"He always kept close to nature," says Renan. It is easy to picture Jesus on this height, the marvelous boy, looking with great eyes upon the boundless plain below, beyond which lay Jerusalem and its great story for him; and off, far off, to the sea, which rolled upon the horizon, emblem of immensity, infinity, eternity, beyond which lay the great world for which he was to suffer. And so in silence and communion with nature and with his Father his soul grew to its immeasurable greatness. He must still love Nazareth. These hills, these poor people, these little children he must still care for tenderly. These that come from the ends of the earth to see the home of his childhood and young manhood because they honor him, he must see them and feel kindly toward them.

"What means this eager, anxious throng,
Which moves with busy haste along—
These wondrous gatherings day by day?
What means this strange commotion, pray?
In accents hushed the throng reply,
Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

Fred L. Lovell, President of Official Board.

FEDERATION ❧ A Symposium

By D. R. Lucas.

More than 40 years ago we were both soldiers of our country, and though our views of politics have sometimes differed since, I do not think either one has ever had a doubt as to the loyalty of the other to the flag of our country. In those years agone we enlisted under the banner of one Lord, and through all the years I do not think that either one has ever had a doubt, even when we have differed in some matters of expediency, about the loyalty of the other to our divine Lord and Master. In view of this, and our life-long friendship, I trust I may freely write to you some things I think about the present conflict over the question of federation. I have been one of those who have stood in a questioning attitude on this subject, wondering whether I understood the import of all that is involved in it, and I frankly confess it has appeared to me to be something of "a tempest in a teapot." I have read all that has been said on both sides, if there be two sides, a fact that is not altogether apparent to me. It seems to me more a war about words than about facts and conditions. I submit the following, in which we all agree, I think:

One great purpose of our restoration movement is to co-operate with any man, or any body of men, that will help us advance our great work of Christian union, where we can do so without a sacrifice of the truth or the liberty that is in Jesus the Christ, as our only Lord and Master.

Now is this federation, as you understand it? If so, surely no one can oppose it. As an individual disciple of the Lord, I am ready to meet at any time and place, any man, or any number of men who desire to discuss the means, or methods, that will help to break down the partition walls that to-day divide those who claim to love my Lord and Master. I am told that you and other brethren were invited to attend the New York conference to confer on the subject of Federation, and that you went. Surely you did right in this. If I had been invited I would have gone as one of the Lord's freemen, for that is the liberty of every Christian. If I had been convinced that the plan proposed would aid in the advancement of the cause of Christian union, I would have agreed to it. Of course, you or I, or any one, can not make a plan binding on any body of men. It is almost ludicrous to me, the fear that something will be bound upon the churches by any system of federation. There is no power that can bind, even a Methodist church as a body, in a question like this. It must all be voluntary in the end, so that the fear that any church will be bound to do something it does not believe to be right is certainly without cause.

One good thing has already grown out of this movement, as it is causing our people to go back and read again what the Campbells and the fathers laid down as the fundamental principles. For more than 40 years I have been presenting this platform. "We stand on the common ground of Protestantism, that in which they all agree, and whenever the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches in any community will unite in the things in which they all agree and lay aside the things about which they disagree, we will go with them." This was Alexander Campbell's idea that a church standing on the common ground of Protestantism, and requiring nothing of any man as an act of faith, or a rule of life, for which we have not a "thus saith the Lord," either in express terms or approved precedent, must of necessity be the Church of Christ at a given place, and not a sectarian body. He accepted the fact that there were persons in all the various sects, who were disciples of the Christ, claiming that these persons ought to all return to the New Testament teaching and practice. That was the main issue of his time and is the main issue to-day. While he lived he hailed with joy every indication on the part of the people of every denomination for a closer fraternity and co-operation in bringing about Christian unity. Whenever invited to preach in a Baptist or Methodist church, he never refused, but rejoiced in the opportunity to teach them the Word of the Lord more perfectly. Whether he would favor the present federation movement or not we can not certainly know, nor is it important that we should, for he expects us to decide this question for ourselves. He has been 40 years in his grave, but the world has moved forward and the present dissatisfaction with a divided Christendom is partly as a result of the words he uttered 100 years ago, and he expects us to-day to meet the questions that arise on our sense of responsibility to Christ, and not to him.

I am only an humble man in the ranks, but am like Paul, a debtor to all men in all denominations who love my Lord, and the only question is can I help them to answer the prayer of my Lord for Christian unity by joining the federation hosts? For all the discussion as to whether the denominational churches are imperfect churches of Christ or not, I care very little, for it is an anomalous condition anyway, and men may honestly disagree about it. How far imperfection invalidates the claim, or how imperfect a body must be to be under the ban of Christ, none of us can ever know, for really it is none of our business, for it is our work to remedy the imperfections as far as we can, and let the Lord, who is somewhat wiser than we are, settle the question of their standing himself. In looking over an old address that I wrote more than 20 years ago, I find these words: "In the great conflict with Romanism and infidelity, Protestanism finds its greatest weakness in its sectarian divisions, and my profound conviction is that Protestant churches must fraternize, federate and fuse into one body in Christ or they will fail. It is time there were many voices crying to the followers of Christ in the wilderness of sectarianism, fraternize, federate and fuse, or fail."

This is still my faith, and so strong is my conviction that there is no ground where there is a possibility of federation, or fusion, but the New Testament of our Lord, that I am not afraid of any issue that may be raised anywhere. I am ready now to meet with any band of men of every Protestant church, fraternize and federate with them in any work of the Christ where we can all agree, knowing as I do that we must do so or the prayer of Jesus for unity or the evangelization of the world will never be accomplished facts.

I have written thus frankly to you some thoughts on the question. In harmony with what you know of the spirit of the men who attended the New York conference, do you think they honestly seek for some method of furthering Christian union and that the proposed method of federation is only a tentative one looking to the future? If our brethren were assured of this fact I think there would be but little opposition. I hope you will write an article along this line.

[See editorial, "Is It a Step Toward Unity?"]

By Oscar Sweeney.

The Disciples of Christ with the whole Christian world stand at the Kadesh-Barnea of Christian union and the world's evangelization. Shall we say, "We are able to go up and possess the land," or shall we turn back to the desert of sectarianism? For three-quarters of a century we have been striving to lead the Christian world out of this desert. Shall we now, of all people, decide to abide therein? If we do, our plea for "union" will be, in the ears of men and angels, as sounding brass or as tinkling cymbals.

Sermons, tracts, debates, books on Christian union will have no weight in the future if we have not the spirit of union at the very dawn of its consummation.

The federation movement is the dawn of the Christian union day. Both movements are world-wide. None recognize so clearly as missionaries the baleful effects of a divided church. So there has long been a practical federation of mission movements. Union through federation is being accomplished in England, Scotland, Canada. Shall we say, as some do, that the federation movement in the United States is devised by the "denominations" for the purpose of swallowing up "our" church? That is a great mistake. The spirit of union or of federation as a step to union is rife in communities that have never so much as heard of "us." The leaders in the federation movement come largely from sections of the country where we are few in numbers and small in influence. No, federation was not invented to get us out of the way. Rather, Christian union is in the air, and the spirit of union in the hearts of earnest followers of Jesus, of every name, sees, in present federation of forces, the means to a glorious end. It will be to our shame rather than to our glory that we "caught a vision" of a united church long before any other religious body if we are not ready now to enter upon its realization. Some seem to fear that in the reckoning up we will not "get credit" for the splendid work we have done for Christian union. That might possibly be so far as men see, but are we, like children, working for credit marks? Will not hearing the tender voice of him who prayed "that they may be one, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me," say unto us, "Well done, good and faithful servants"—will not this be sufficient compensation for all the work that we have done or may do to unite his followers, whether men understand or not?

We are at Kadesh-Barnea. Shoulder to shoulder with all who are assembling on the same camp ground, seeking in love to understand each other and to understand our Lord, let us go forward and possess the land—the world for Christ.

I heartily answer both the queries with a loud affirmative. And I thank God and take courage with every number of The Christian-Evangelist. The hope of our future is found in such advocacy as is found in The Christian-Evangelist and "The Christian Century." Let Brother Garrison plow straight ahead. He is supported by a volume of prayer ascending to God daily.

The Condition of the Christian Churches in San Francisco

By Hiram Van Kirk

In consideration of the condition of the Christian churches of San Francisco we have everything to be grateful for. In church property, of all the denominations which are doing an important work, we have suffered least. This does not mean that we have not suffered much. The chief loss comes in the cutting off of the business support of our members. The loss and present condition of the churches are as follows: 1. The First Christian Church, of which F. S. Ford was pastor, was in the center of disturbance. It was a substantial frame building and suffered little from the earthquake; but it was an easy victim of the fire. It was a touching sight to see Brother Ford and his devoted wife pack only a few of their most precious belongings in a dress suit-case and a sheet and walk out before the fire. Brother and Sister Ford have been in this field nine years. The church, which was in a splendid location 20 years ago, has steadily grown to be in the heart of a downtown boarding section of the poorer sort. Here Brother Ford has been administering to 1,000 or 1,200 people every year, though his actual membership was much smaller, and these lived mainly farther out in the mission district. This fact saved probably one-half of his members, but more than 125 were burned out. Those whose homes are left are, however, without present employment and are dependent upon the General Relief Committee for food, but count themselves fortunate to have clothing and shelter. The First Church was the old historic church of the city. It has been the mother of all the other churches and has had among its pastors Robert Graham, T. D. Garvin, J. H. McCollough, J. J. Haley and others. Brother Ford is proving himself a worthy successor of these men.

2. The West Side Christian Church is situated in the heart of the unburnt district, consequently it was damaged only by the earthquake. Visitors to the late convention will remember its splendid structure, just completed, under the ministry of W. M. White. The damage, while estimated at from $2,500 to $5,000, will not impair its future usefulness. About 25 of the members of this church were burned out. But the greatest loss to this church was the blow to the business holdings of its members. We trust, however, that Bro. R. L. Cave, the present pastor, will be able to go on with his work. This church is now in a district teeming with population. Its work should be crippled in no particular. If the local congregation should not be able in the present stress to meet the conditions of their mortgage, aid should be given to them.

The mission churches of the city were unhurt, as they were well on the outskirts and not in danger at any time. But the business support of the members was cut off, as in the case of the others. Bros. L. E. Scott and O. B. Ireland are doing splendid service in these fields, and should be sustained.

On the east side of the San Francisco Bay the buildings were unhurt. However, as Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley furnish the residences of many business men and employes of San Francisco, the support of these churches suffered as did the others, and the strain comes hard on these churches to care for the increased population which is crowding to this side of the bay. Alameda, with a building long outgrown, was on the eve of the erection of a new structure. This much-needed effort is now prostrated and help must come from the outside if this noble church is permitted to seize her opportunity. Oakland meets in a rented hall and has just bought an expensive lot and now feels crippled in its task of sacrifice in paying for it. Berkeley has just occupied its commodious building, and owes largely to the Church Extension Society.

Besides the cities around the bay, Santa Rosa and San Jose seem to have suffered most. In the latter city the First Church was completely destroyed. It is hoped that a union will be made between this and the Central Church and a new structure be erected at once. Further than these two, the writer has not heard.

Frank S. Ford, who lost his church and all his property in the San Francisco disaster.

"The Pacific Christian," edited by W. B. and G. K. Berry, lost its entire property. The paper, however, has already appeared as a four-page sheet. This damage is quite as great to our cause as that of any one of our churches.

I have given a plain statement of the facts in the case. It shows that we have much to be grateful for in the losses to our churches and brethren. So far as we know no lives of our membership have been lost. But we have gone through trying times. We feel closely knit together by a common tie of suffering and enjoy a fellowship in Christ far sweeter than ever before. We know that in a short time the city will be rebuilt. Before us lies the greatest opportunity for missions and evangelism in the history of our brotherhood. In the old city we came late. We had just won outside recognition and were started on a career of eminent success. In the new city we can "get in on the ground floor," take our places among the leading religious bodies and plant the cause in this gateway to the Orient so as to tell on generations unborn.

Perhaps your fathers, brothers, sons, will come. Brethren, help us to hold our pastors to our churches and to be at home to receive our own and God's own as they come to us.

Can Baptists and Disciples Unite?

of them. In the present state of ecclesiastical opinion and evolution there is a rapidly diminishing difference between Baptists and Disciples on these points. When Alexander Campbell said in his debate with McCalla, that Saul's sins were really pardoned when he believed, and formally when he was baptized, he was a member in full fellowship of the Baptist church. These exigencies and extreme tendencies of controversy, and perhaps the influence of minds more dogmatic and legalistic than his own, drove him to a more radical statement of the problem, but in later life, as clearly evidenced by the Luneburg letter, a literary fragment of scarcely less historic importance than the Declaration and Address of his father, he reverted to the earlier view, if not to a more spiritual conception of the relation of baptism to the remission of sins. When Isaac Errett inserted the word assurance into the proposition, and it became current and valid coin in the realm of Disciple terminology, the old question of dispute between Baptist and Disciples on the design of baptism was virtually settled. If there is any issue worth contending over between the proposition of baptism for the assurance of remission of sins, and baptism as a declaration of remission, I am unable to see it. If the baptism of a penitent believer is for the tangible assurance of salvation, the salvation is already enjoyed, already exists at least, and the assurance must be conveyed in the form of a declaration to that effect. It is indisputable that the New Testament does connect baptism and the remission of sins, and there are two conceivable ways in which this may be done, and concerning these, Baptists and Disciples are agreed. Water in both Testaments and in all religions stands for purification. All religious ordinances involving the application or use of this element necessarily symbolize inward and spiritual cleansing, and this cleansing of the soul from the defilement of sin is an element of moral character, and a condition of salvation. What baptism stands for is literally and absolutely in order to the remission of sins. This opinion can not be intelligently controverted. The greatest conceivable blunders in the interpretation of religious phenomena is the failure to distinguish between a symbol and the truth symbolized, and to affirm that the one is necessary to the other. This is a species of Levitical Judaism that should only survive as an interesting relic in the limbo of a theological "Curiosity Shop."

The other fact that connects baptism with remission is its association with the authority of Christ in the form of obedience to him as Lord of all. Submission to Christ is Christianity. Obedience is the fundamental condition of salvation. An act that involves the recognition of Christ's sovereignty, and subjection to Christ's will, an act which relates itself to Christ's authority as a practical expression of allegiance and loyalty to him, whose right it is to rule, has a moral relation to the remission of sins. He has become the author of eternal salvation to all those that obey him, and baptism, by the appointment of Christ, is one, at least, of the initial and assuring acts of obedience as we enter the way of life. Baptists and Disciples, I think, are agreed at this point. In reality, there is not, and never has been, any practical difference between these two peoples on the relation of Baptism to the remission of sins. We hold in common that a baptized penitent believer is a saved man and a member of the body of Christ, and on what additional point is it necessary that there shall be agreement?

(Concluded next week.)

Our Budget

—Good reports are coming in from both the foreign and home missionary offerings. Keep them up until all the churches are heard from.

—The Sunday-schools throughout the country are all getting ready for Children's Day, the first Lord's day in June. That is a great annual festival for the children.

—The period of college commencements will soon be upon us. Let all who can attend these commencements do so and encourage our schools in their great work of educating our young men and women and in training candidates for the ministry and the mission field.

—Now that we are coming to see that federation is an agreement among those who accept Jesus Christ as Lord to work together as far as possible without violating conscience in promoting the kingdom of God and in bringing about a closer unity, differences on this subject are rapidly disappearing, and we are coming to be of one mind and one heart.

—Since the air has become clearer, and it is seen that no one among us is ready to abandon the principles of the Reformation, but are only anxious for opportunities to make them tell for Christian unity, let disputations give place to practical methods of co-operation, and the vigorous prosecution of all the lines of our missionary, educational, benevolent and evangelistic work.

—The Assistant Editor is absent for a few days in the Ozarks on a fishing and hunting expedition, securing a little much-needed and well-earned rest, and laying in a fresh stock of ozone.

—The churches in St. Louis are all prospering, and are looking forward to the simultaneous campaign in the autumn with interest. The Union Avenue Church reported about 30 additions during the past month at its regular services, most of them by baptism.

—Be patient with us about the publication of articles sent in. We are receiving two or three times as much matter each week as we can publish, and we are bound to postpone some things for later issues. Much of the matter left over is important, too, and we regret we can not give it immediate publication.

—John A. Stevens, state evangelist of Louisiana, is in a meeting at Ruston in a large tent, establishing a church that is to entertain our next convention in that state. A letter from him is held over until next week.

—A telegram from T. A. Abbott, corresponding secretary of Missouri, says: "Southwest convention gave $1,000 for the permanent fund." This is good news. Brother Abbott is making a heroic effort to secure a sufficient amount in pledges toward this fund to make sure a conditional pledge of several thousand dollars. Let the brethren of Missouri see to it that he does not fail in his efforts.

—J. T. Boone, pastor of the First Christian Church, Jacksonville, Fla., has had a severe illness from which he is just convalescing. Bro. S. M. Martin has just concluded a great meeting there which he was not able to attend. There were 119 additions during the meeting which lasted 50 days. Brother Boone will take a month's vacation for his recuperation with his mother in Tennessee.

—The Christian Church at Peoria, Ill., will have its annual fellowship banquet May 18.

—C. T. Bentley, formerly of Harford, Cal., is temporarily supplying the pulpit at Pomona, Cal.

—As illustrating the changeable weather conditions we have experienced recently, a postcard from Lockhart, Texas, says: "96 in the shade yesterday. A man wore an overcoat to meeting this evening, and it rained."

—C. H. Pierce, formerly of Hiawatha, Kan., Washington, Kan., and Bethany, Neb., is now permanently located at Medford, Ore. He was hitherto a minister of the Gospel, but is now engaged in the real estate business.

—E. G. Hanna, Lawrence, Kan., inquires whether the statistics of "The Churches of Christ," given in our issue of April 19, page 492, include the churches sometimes called "anti"? Our understanding is that they do.

—A. J. Williams, Vinita, I. T., reports the church there in a prosperous condition, and that the new house will be completed this summer. Notwithstanding many untoward conditions the church is greatly prospering.

In the spring—that is the condition of thousands whose systems have not thrown off the impurities accumulated during the winter — blood humors that are now causing pimples, boils and other eruptions, loss of appetite, bilious turns, indigestion, and other stomach troubles, dull headaches and weak, tired, languid feelings.

Hood's Sarsaparilla removes all these humors, cures all these troubles; renovates, strengthens and tones the whole system. This is the testimony of thousands annually.

—The chapel of the new South Main Street Church, E. H. Keller, minister, Los Angeles, Cal., will be ready for services May 17. The Southern California Preachers' Association will hold its next meeting, the first Monday in June, in this chapel.

—Since the last reports nine have been baptized at Bolengi, Africa. A. F. Hensey and his associates are planning to make quite an extended evangelistic tour. They hope to visit some new points where the missionaries thus far have not been able to go.

—Bro. F. A. Mayhall, of this city, recently delivered his lecture on the Bible at Hannibal, Mo., and Brother Marshall, the minister, and the local press speak of it in very high terms. Brother Mayhall is delivering this lecture for the good of the cause wherever he may be invited.

—The faculty and students of Texas Christian University, Waco, Texas, will support Frank H. Marshall next year at Christiania, Norway. Most of our colleges are now in line supporting their own missionaries on the foreign field through the foreign society. The college people can be depended upon to lead.

—The church at Plymouth, Ill., has just burned its mortgage. The $7,000 property is now all paid for, and the brethren want a good preacher. Colmar will take half-time. Write D. E. Wade. The building was dedicated a year ago. Judge Scofield and N. E. Cory were present on both these auspicious occasions.

—W. C. McDougall, until recently principal of the College of the Disciples, St. Thomas, Ont., has just started to India where he will have charge of the educational interests of our church in Calcutta. Every interest committed to the oversight of this Christian gentleman and scholar can not but greatly prosper.

—At Matanzas, Cuba, there have been 40 confessions. It is not likely that all of these will be baptized. These confessions were the result of a series of meetings lasting one week, in which Angel Godines, of Havana, did most of the preaching. Since then there have been four more additions.

—The time for the high school commencement address approaches. Brethren, spare us the announcements! About a thousand of our preachers are annually selected for this role in different parts of the country, and the publication of their names in our columns would take up a great deal of space which, we believe, can be given to news that is more vital.

—The Albion (Ill.) "Journal," in speaking of the baccalaureate sermon recently preached by Bro. C. C. Garrigues before the high school graduating class, says: "He held his audience two hours with a masterpiece of eloquence never surpassed on a similar occasion in this city. This was the sentiment of men of mature age who for over 50 years have listened to discourses of this character in our town."

—Hickman, Ky., is enjoying a good meeting in which several have already taken their stand for Christ, among the number being the editor of the city paper, who is also a prominent lawyer, and two young lady daughters of the wealthiest citizen of Fulton county. The Martin family are the evangelists at Hickman, in whose recent Kentucky meetings about 250 have been added.

—Ward Russell has closed his work at Florence, Colo., where he has been for a little over two years and a half. The membership has been increased by about one-third, lots have been purchased, and a frame house erected. The stone foundation and part of the brick for a new building have also been purchased. Brother Russell leaves on account of the health of his father, and hopes to organize a church at Mabank, Texas.

—Miner Lee Bates, of East Orange, has been called to the First Church, 323 West 56th Street. It is probable he will accept and assume pastoral duties in the fall. We congratulate the church most heartily, and rejoice that we are to have Brother Bates as a co-worker in Manhattan. In ability, spirit and culture Mr. Bates is one of the choice men of our brotherhood.—"The Disciple," Lenox Avenue Church, New York.

—The churches at Rialto and Colton, Cal., are without regular pastors, and desire to co-operate in securing the services of a wide-awake young man to preach for the two churches. Address Dr. D. B. Crediford, Rialto, Cal. Bro. H. E. Wilhite, pastor of the San Bernardino Church, is supplying for them at present. Brother DeForest Austin, of Bethany, Neb., has just closed a successful meeting with the Rialto Church.

—Charles M. Fillmore, of Cincinnati, has prepared a lecture on "Mother," which ought to be of great interest. He recently gave it with decided success at Portsmouth, O., when he was assisted by Miss Ida Mae Hanna, who sang selections illustrating points in the lecture. Brother Fillmore is the author of the song, "Tell Mother I'll Be There," which has been sung around the world, and which has been used with great effect by Mr. Alexander in the reecnt Torrey-Alexander metings.

—In a letter from Dr. James Butchart, medical missionary at Lu Chow Fu Hospital, under the auspices of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, he writes: "There is no doubt a great deal of uneasiness among the people, but so far as we can see it is simply the leaven of change and progress producing what seems unavoidable ferment, and we are hoping for eventual good. Our work in the hospital has been the largest of any year yet, in spite of the feeling among the people, and we have had larger operations than ever before."

—Christian College, Columbia, Mo., has just received a gift of $25,000 for the erection of a new chapel, conditioned on the raising of $25,000 endowment, and the payment of a small indebtedness remaining on the present buildings. Mrs. W. T. Moore, the President, and the trustees are quite confident these conditions will be met, and that without much delay. This new chapel will complete as fine a college plant as can be found anywhere in the west. We congratulate the institution on this new feature in a series of successes that has amazed and delighted its friends.

—We have received "The Proceedings of the Inter-Church Conference on Federation." It is a large volume of nearly 700 pages, including the index. It contains, besides the business proceedings, all the addresses that were delivered at the Inter-Church Conference. This is the book which the brethren ought to purchase who desire to know what was the spirit of that great gathering of Protestant Christians, and to understand what is proposed by church federation. The volume sells for $2, and we shall be glad to fill any orders which may be sent to our office. Fuller notice will be given later.

—Brethren who attend the South Kentucky convention, which meets at Murray, May 21-24, will find a handsome new building which has been the great task of the brethren there in the past two years. It has cost $16,860. G. H. C. Stoney began, a few weeks ago, the third year of his ministry with this church. Not only has the house been provided for, but the offerings for missions, etc., were more than doubled last year. The membership is about 225. All entertainments at the convention will be free, and those expecting to attend should write at once to Brother Stoney, or to Carlisle Cutcher. A large attendance is expected.

—The "Dallas News," Dallas, Tex., prints a strong sermon of M. M. Davis, pastor of the Central Church in that city, on "Rightly Dividing the Word," which will be good food for the converts who have recently been brought into the church, not only in his own congregation, but in the city, under the auspices of the union meeting. This view of the progressive revelation of God to men, adapting itself to men's growing needs and to the different ages and dispensations, is one that has proved exceedingly useful in establishing faith and in giving an intelligent understanding of the Scriptures.

—The Ministerial Association of Eureka College begs space for the folowing announcement: Pres. J. W. McGarvey, of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., will deliver the following lectures under the auspices of the Ministerial Association of Eureka College, May 28 to June 1: "Should Isaiah be Sawn Asunder?" "Daniel in the Critics' Den." "The Virgin Birth of Jesus." "Of What Church Should I be a Member?" "The Organization of a Congregation." Conference each afternoon. A cordial invitation to attend is extended to all who may be interested in this course of lectures. The committee consists of C. C. Sinclair, E. E. Boyer and Ira L. Parvin.

—Herbert Yeuell, now at Winston-Salem, N. C., recently delivered a lecture for the benefit of our brethren in San Francisco and sent the proceeds—$82—to Bro. E. W. Darst, of Berkley, Cal. Bro. Hiram Van Kirk, of Berkley, has been appointed by the brethren in and about San Francisco to receive funds, and the American Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati, has asked that all funds for the relief of San Francisco be sent through their board, and this board will no doubt communicate with Brother Van Kirk as the representative of the brethren in the west. Many of our churches in St. Louis raised large collections for the relief of San Francisco, and reported through the general fund subscribed in the city for the relief of the sufferers.

—Bro. B. B. Tyler and his wife have arrived in Denver safe after a journey of 18,000 miles, only 45 minutes late, and report themselves in splendid condition. On their way from New York Brother and Sister Tyler spent a day in Cleveland. Concerning the condition of his brother, J. Z., Brother Tyler writes that, "Physically he is as helpless as a baby, but his mind is as clear as it was when his physical health was perfect. In spirit he is buoyant." He is fortunate in having a company of young ladies to read books to him, which he enjoys very much. After all, it is better to have a disabled body with a buoyant and hungry mind, than a perfect body with a mind dead or dormant.

—W. Remfry Hunt writes: "Mrs. Elliott I. Osgood has quite a triumphant send off in leaving Chu Cheo, Anhwei province, China. Dr. Osgood is remaining a few months longer. The Central Christian Church in Chu Cheo made fine banner and scroll presentations. The farewell meeting was as beautiful as it was impressive. Their seven years' service has been full, fruitful and rendered with unswerving devotion. An incident insignificant in itself, yet speaking volumes, has been indelibly written on the minds of the neighbors in Chu Cheo. Seeing a chance to blackmail "cash" on carrying the sedan chair with Mrs. Osgood and baby Eleanor, anxious to catch the boat at Chu Cheo, the coolies deliberately delayed, whereupon, at a given signal, five of our stalwarts, members and friends, shouldered the sedan and did a scoot for the riverside. We got a move on us that time!"

Home Again.

Our cruise ended April 11. L. L. Carpenter and wife, B. B. Tyler and wife, J. K. Hester and J. S. Haddock and Mrs. Showers returned on the Oceanic on April 11. C. S. Medbury, Dr. Irving Griswold, Mrs. Johnson, Judge and Mrs. Haymaker and Mrs. Power and I spent two weeks in England, and left on the Baltic April 25, reaching New York May 3. Our pilgrimage was a great success throughout; no accidents, no rough seas, no failure in connections, no illnesss, no disappointments. We were greatly blessed with good weather and with good fellowship all the way.

Onr stay in England was specially pleasant. Brethren Williams and Morgan and others in London showed us many courtesies. Our brother, Thomas Burnell, of London, mayor of Shoreditch, was specially helpful. I found Henry Varley in London as much alive to our Lord's work as ever. He preached at West London Tabernacle on Sunday, April 29. His many friends in America will be glad to know of his good health and vigorous labors at three score and ten. I am not sure but there is a wholesome note for us in this little message from him at this juncture in our religious affairs.

> London, April 21.—Dear Mr. Power: Our mutual friend, Mr. Burnell, was with us last night, and we were speaking of you, and I was glad to hear of your memory touching my visit to Washington fully 20 years since. I am glad that you are here, and rejoiced to know that you preach at my old sphere at Notting Hill, where for 18 years I was enabled to teach and preach Christ Jesus the Lord. What a ministry it is, praise the Lord! not as the "fashion of this world that passeth away," but "Jesus Christ the same yesterday and to-day and forever." "Thou art the same and thy years never fail." We hear of the ideal, but here is the real, and the endearing. I am with my beloved wife, just back to the homeland from Australia, intending at least one more protracted campaign in the furtherance of truth and righteousness. I know nothing to compare with this, where Peter, speaking to the astonished Jews (Acts 3:25), said: "Unto you first, God, having raised up his Son Jesus, him to bless you in turning away every one of you from his iniquities." London and Washington need a real and living faith in the risen Son of God. I am preaching at the W. London Tabernacle on Sunday, 29th, and have promised to give an address at the noon prayer-meeting on Monday next (23d). This is a real, live prayer service; about 200 gather. It is held at 185 Aldersgate street, close to the general post office. If not engaged, I think you would enjoy F. B. Meyer's address, Monday evening, 6 o'clock, at the City Temple. It is the first of the Baptist union meetings. It will be the president's message. I hope to be there. Kindest regards. Yours sincerely, HENRY VARLEY.

What we need is to quit useless speculations and idle discussions of things indifferent and preach the Gospel of Christ. I am amazed at the great volume of Vesuvian eruption in our press during my absence. I do not presume to add my voice to the confusion, but I would ask if there are not others and more important issues that claim attention, and I would venture to suggest that all our editors use as an editorial for their columns 1 Cor. 13 chapter.

We were royally welcomed by our brethren in Liverpool. Hughes and Moss, Pratley, Coop and Wrathall, and others of the saints came together in Upper Parliament Street Church, representing Chester, Liverpool, Birkenhead, Southport and Saltney and gave us a greeting and farewell that greatly cheered us on our journey. We shall see a generous delegation of these English Disciples with us in 1909. The Lord richly bless them!

The Vermont Avenue Church has done well during my absence. Our brother, Z. T. Sweeney, won the hearts of all, and had large audiences of the excellent people that throng Washington during the winter. He did us great good, for which I am profoundly grateful. It was charming to return home when the dogwood is in its glory, the lilacs blossoming and the whole city a paradise of beauty. Greetings to all the brethren. F. D. POWER.

Important.

A number of churches have written to us, saying that they have taken the May offering for home missions and have sent the money to California, and asking us to give them credit for an offering to home missions. It is obviously both unjust and unwise to hold the home board accountable for funds which it does not administer. In accordance with the policy of the board, all offerings from churches, individuals or societies, must be remitted to our office if credit is to be given upon our books.

San Francisco.

The American Christian Missionary Society hastens to the help of the churches in and around San Francisco. As soon as the extent of the calamity became known, the home board wired the California brethren assurances of immediate and liberal help, and at once set in operation every agency that could minister to prompt and permanent relief. The board is now working in harmony with the local relief committee, which consists of the pastor and two elected members from each church.

It is specially requested that all contributions of money, clothing or food for the relief immediate necessities should be sent direct to Hiram Van Kirk, 2230 Dana St., Berkeley, Cal. All contributions of money designed for the re-establishment of the cause, the rebuilding of churches and the support of preachers, should be sent to Secretary Van Kirk direct and its use designated, or sent to the American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O., and marked for use in re-establishing the cause in San Francisco.

The American Christian Missionary Society is determined to enter upon the rehabilitation of the cause in the great western metropolis with all the resources at her command and with an energy befitting the task. We realize that this is the hour to strike, and that a policy worthy of the plans of an indomitable public spirit and the building of what is to be the most remarkable city in the New World, must be both broad and aggressive.

To this end we beg the brotherhood to come to our help in putting to an open demonstration the power of our plea in a field where we may enter upon as nearly equal terms as have ever presented themselves to us. This is the opportunity of the age. Let us make such proof of our ministry in California as shall bring all the world to realize the potency of our every contention. Let us speed to the help of our brothers; let us hold up the cause in California. But above all let us, upon the ruins of the great city, erect a demonstration of our fitness to administer the trust of reuniting a divided church and presenting to a sin cursed city only power to save the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

To do this work, in addition to the tremendous tasks that weight the resource of our home board, will, of course, require a special fund, as in the case of Jacksonville, Fla., and Galveston, Tex. We appeal to our brethren now for contributions to this fund. Other religious bodies are receiving gifts in the thousands. We have many among us of equal ability. We appeal for the large gifts that we might be enabled at once to inaugurate a wise and far-reaching strategy for the taking of this great city. We appeal for special gifts from individuals, churches, schools and societies. Responses to Galveston and Jacksonville were generous and prompt. Shall our appeal for San Francisco—the greatest need in American history—be any the less generous or prompt? Offerings should be sent direct to the American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A., building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Iowa Ministerial Association.

The Iowa Christian Ministerial Association has just completed its first session as a separate institution from the state missionary convention. It was held in Des Moines, the day sessions in the East Side Church, of which T. J. Dow is pastor, the evening services in the Central Church, of which H. O. Breeden is pastor.

The attendance was good; the questions considered were among the most difficult and important of all those that now try the mettle of the ministry; the freedom of discussion was excellent; the spirit of frank and courteous criticism was almost perfect; and in it all good will and cordial feeling were supreme. A cultured and educated gentleman, who for many years was a teacher in higher educational institutions, a Congregationalist, remarked that he had attended many ministerial meetings of the kind and that this was the best of all.

C. C. Morrison, of Springfield, Ill., was the visiting lecturer. He delivered four addresses, all touching the question of Evangelism. His subjects were stated as follows: "The Effect Upon Evangelism of the Modern Way of Thinking," "The Apparatus of Evangelistic Preaching," "The Criterion of Evangelistic Success," "Evangelism Among the Disciples: Its Distinctiveness, Its Power and Its Limitations."

Under these heads he showed how the scientific and critical spirit of the day demands a different presentation of the same old message, how present methods are demoralizing and bring little else than superficial and fleeting results, how our standard of success is material and should be made spiritual, how we came to be an evangelistic people, how we have been so powerful in evangelism, and how we must change to better methods if we are to achieve the best results.

His first three addresses were negative criticisms of present methods and standards, and provoked much discussion, favorable and unfavorable. But the last address was more constructive and met universal approval in its high and spiritual ideals for evangelistic work.

The work of Mr. Morrison was superbly done. The addresses were in fine literary form; his manner of expression was very felicitous, clear and vigorous; and his spirit and purpose were ideal.

There were five other addresses delivered: "The Art of Presentation," by F. L. Moffett; "Public Worship," by G. B. Van Arsdall; "Organization of the Forces of the Church," by H. O. Breeden; "The Preacher's Attitude Toward Civic Reform," by S. H. Zendt, and "Our Centennial," by W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg, Pa. All these addresses were good and helpful, and worthy of extended notice herein if time and space permitted.

There were also book reviews by the following persons: Dr. D. R. Dungan, Prof. H. G. Plum, of Iowa City; J. K. Ballou and H. D. Williams.

A notable feature of the meeting was an address near its close by Dr. J. Everest Cathell, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Des Moines, on the question of Christian union. He greeted his hearers as brothers in Christ, laid down the Scriptural doctrine of a united church, denounced the quadrilateral basis of union, pronounced in favor of the unilateral basis of Christ alone, pointed out some things to be done to bring union, and closed by bidding us Godspeed. He expressed the conviction that union when it comes will be at the sacrifice of all existing church organizations. He also said, "How union will be accomplished, God only knows." Concluding his address he made an appeal for two customs in the church, the public reading of God's Word and kneeling in prayer as the only form that preserves reverence and humility. Immediately after the address Dr. Dungan led the assembly in prayer, all kneeling. It was an occasion of deep feeling, not soon to be forgotten by those who entered into its spirit.

The officers of the association deserve the gratitude of all our preachers in the state for planning and carrying out this meeting of so great profit to all concerned. As an expression of this gratitude the old officers were re-elected, with one exception. The officers now are: Percy Leach, president; B. F. Ferrall, vice president; F. W. Collins, secretary and treasurer; G. B. Van Arsdall, member of executive committee; S. H. Zendt, member of executive committee.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Clark County, Ind.

The work in Clark county, Ind., has been most satisfactory the past week. One year ago our congregation called Morgan E. Genge, formerly of Maine, he conducting services here on all except the second Sunday, which is devoted to Bethany. Brother Genge has done a wonderful work here and will get a handsome advance in salary this year. He signalized his introduction to southern Indiana by holding a protracted meeting here, which resulted in many accessions, among them some of the most prominent men of the town. He was elected president of the county association, and the result has been most gratifying. He has visited many of the weak churches, and at Memphis, where decay had been marked, held a meeting, with 33 additions. The Memphis church which had been destroyed by fire will now be rebuilt through his efforts. The societies of Charlestown have been reorganized and strengthened; electric lights have been installed in the church, and the debt practically wiped out. The labors of Brother Genge have worked largely for the spiritual as well as the material upbuilding of the Clark county churches.——Bro. Fred R. Davis, who preaches at Milltown and Milford on alternating Sundays, and whose residence is at Charlestown, has been a great help to us.—Carl Brayfield, Cor. Sec. County Association.

The Great Meeting at Connersville.

The recent meeting held by Evangelist Scoville and "the Kendalls" with the Central Christian Church at Connersville, Ind., is one of the great meetings of the brotherhood. It is noteworthy in the number and character of additions, in the great spiritual uplift it gave to the entire city, in the promptness with which the new members have taken hold of the work of the church and in that it has placed the church first in a city that has been a Methodist stronghold from its founding, there being four M. E. churches in this city of 8,000. If the number of the members at the beginning of the meeting (424 resident members) and the duration of the meeting be considered, this will be found to be one of the greatest, if not the greatest, meetings ever held by our people. In the face of the worst storms of years the membership was doubled the twenty-third day of the meeting. It appears that the time was just ripe. The church was prepared and was in expectancy for months. There has not been a semblance of division in the organization for 12 years. In less than three years it has paid $23,000 toward its building. The revival really could not be held off, and broke loose before the evangelists arrived with 24 additions, which are not included in the count of the meetings, and have not been reported. The total additions for the five weeks and three days of the meeting were 660. The Sunday-school was raised from 200 to 650. The last collection was $47.28. The regular church attendance is the largest in the city. The prayer-meeting attendance is 216. The cash voluntary offerings of the meeting were $1,196. At the reception given at the close of the meeting the new members subscribed $1,300 to the current expense. The daily papers commented on the lack of patronage of the saloons and the scarcity of drunks. The county jail was empty at the close of the meeting, a thing which had not happened for years before. One man, through his lack of patronage, took his wheel of fortune and left town. A bartender and the man who drove the brewery wagon were baptized. A Saturday night service has been started, and men who formerly spent the evening carousing in the saloon, are now praising God in the church. A new singing evangelist was discovered in L. V. Hegwood, our choir leader, and Brother Scoville predicts great things for him in the future. The work of the evangelist, Chas. R. Scoville, can not be too highly spoken of. He is a master in all things that pertain to evangelism. He never fails on a meeting because he never fails in a single service. Each blow beats back the enemy. He never allows anything to draw him from the divine plan. P. M. Kendall, who led the chorus of 90 voices, has great ability as a director, and is known to the writer as a high type of Christian evangelist. Mrs. Kendall did a work with the children in Bible training that is showing to-day and will count for the Master through two generations. The members of the church were loyal and helped in a large way to glean the field. To-day they are rejoicing with an exceeding great joy. —Jas. C. Burkhardt, Pastor.

Baltimore Letter.

Bro. Edward B. Bagby, of Washington, recently closed a fine meeting at the Christian Temple, resulting in 52 additions. This makes more than 200 names that have been added to our roll since the temple was opened, January, 1905. Most of these were grown persons and most of them came by baptism. We are in the midst of a great field. Our Bible school has an enrollment of nearly 500 and the temple has taken its place among the living link churches, supporting Miss Edna P. Dale at Wuhu, China. We have a Chinese school connected with our temple school, and our people are deeply interested in the Mongolians. The temple seminary has had 50 students this year and the work has progressed with satisfaction. Our commencement exercises will be the second week in June.——Randall Street Church recently had a rally service. The debts on that property amounted to $5,711.50. These were reduced in the last two months to $4,500 and the Church Extension Board loaned that amount of money, so that the property is secure. Bro. J. N. Pickering, a deacon in the temple and a lawyer, is the chairman of the committee on the re-establishing of that work. He has been preaching there since February, and in that time he has had seven baptisms, three by letter and one by statement. He is having good audiences and we are hoping that he will continue as permanent pastor, for the work has the most hopeful outlook had at any time in its history. The walls have been frescoed and all the wood work painted and the little band of faithful people there are cheerful and happy. On last Lord's day Brother Pickering baptized a Methodist preacher. Our other churches here are likewise forging ahead, and we are looking for this to be the best year in the history of the Disciples in Baltimore City.—Peter Ainslie.

Columbus, O.

At the meeting of the ministers of the Churches of Christ good reports were presented. The five congregations added about 100 since January 1, about half being by confession and baptism. C. A. Kleeberger resigned the work of state Bible school evangelist in order to accept the work at Chicago Avenue. He has been with the church one month and already signs of revival in all departments are seen. Walter Mansell has been at West Fourth Avenue almost six months and he is enthusiastically at work in one of the best fields in all Columbus. He conducted a meeting in January, in which there were something like 60 additions; the Bible school is by far the largest school among us in the city. Brother Mansell has received the heartiest welcome from us all. The Franklin Avenue Church disposed of its location at the corner of Ohio and Franklin avenues, and moved about a mile southeast, where it will have a most inviting field. Plans are drawn for a new building to cost about $20,000. Brother Dodd is leading his excellent people into constantly enlarging activities. He is secretary of the City Pastors' Alliance and is growing in favor with all the people. At Linden Heights Brother Warren has been in the new building erected there at a cost of about $8,000 for three or four months, and that congregation has almost doubled its membership in both the church and Bible school. Brother Warren did so much work on the house himself and watched things so carefully that he saved the brethren about $2,000 in the cost of the house of worship. Ours is now the strongest body in that beautiful suburb. The Central is now meeting in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, having given up the old house at the corner of Third and Gay the first of the year. We hope to have one of the most artistic and commodious buildings in the city. It will take almost a year for its completion. With the removal of the Franklin Avenue Church southeast and the Central's removal to Twenty-first and Broad streets, there will be a better adjustment of our forces in the city than ever before, and we are satisfied this change will be beneficial to our cause in Columbus. There is the most hearty good fellowship among our five congregations. We are as one church with five places of worship. The ministers are brethren indeed.—Walter Scott Priest.

Kentucky.

A very successful meeting, conducted by R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, assisted by LeRoy St. John, of Terre Haute, Ind., as singer, has just closed with 151 additions—88 being by confession. The meeting lasted two weeks, and from the first the attendance was most satisfactory. The most notable service in point of attendance was that held at the Union Tabernacle, when 2,000 persons were present. Mr. Crossfield has returned to his home and Mr. St. John has gone to assist in a meeting at Cadiz, after which he will sing in a great tabernacle meeting at Nashville, Tenn.

A Good Word from McPherson, Kan.

McPherson has had a great spiritual uplift, as a result of the union revival meetings recently held by Rev. French E. Oliver. The Christian Church did its part and did it well and received its reward in 110 additions, 77 having already been baptized. We baptized 56 one afternoon, 46 of them in 30 minutes. The strongholds of sin toppled and fell, and as a result some of them suspended business. Many men who had been given over to their idols of wickedness came out on the Lord's side, confessed Christ, and are now trying to undo years of sin. The churches worked together in perfect harmony. The church buildings are all crowded. We find ours too small and already steps are being taken to double our capacity and build Sunday-school rooms and other necessary conveniences. We have been here two years and a half and found so much to do we have bought us a home; we have found our work pleasant and the people loyal and true. Since moving we have been solicited to take other work several times at advanced salary, but our work here is just beginning. I am preaching each alternate Sunday afternoon at Groverland Station, eight miles southwest, where I organized a congregation of 17 charter members April 22, and we have bought lots and moved a church building from three miles west. Workmen are repairing it and we will soon rededicate the building. Additions are frequent. The spirit of peace prevails.—W. A. Morrison.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

H. Mohorter, the new secretary of the National Benevolent Association, was present and made a few remarks relative to his new work.——G. A. Hoffman, Maplewood, reported the destruction of his home by fire early Sunday morning. His loss was about $1,500, exclusive of many articles whose value can not be estimated.—F. N. Calvin.

Illinois.

The last notes left us at New Orleans. Contrary to original plans, I decided, while so far south, to visit Cuba. Here my only daughter, Mrs. Melvin Menges, has been, with her husband, doing missionary work for seven years. My good boys generously provided the ticket. So Saturday afternoon, March 24, found me on board the Excelsior of the Southern Pacific line. The steady old vessel of 35,000 tonnage, measuring 324 feet in length, turned her bow down the Father of Waters, which here is a full half-mile wide and from 150 to 200 feet deep. She gracefully passed down the long line of docks, and the great steamers from many lands. We passed the barracks and the half-finished monument that marks the battleground of the memorable victory of Gen. Jackson over the English in 1814. For more than 100 miles, guided by a special pilot, we moved down between the sugar plantations, venerable with age. The river is low, but still the levees which confine the river for many miles to its channel seem to rise but little higher than the water level. The country in many places resembles our vast prairies of the north, skirted in the distance by the cypress swamps. Some places seem to be great irredeemable marshes. The deposits from the river constantly extend the mouth out into the shallow waters of the gulf. The waters are about as opaque at the mouth as at St. Louis. Special efforts have been necessary to keep a channel open deep enough for ocean steamers to enter. Various deltas have been formed by the river breaking through old boundaries. About 8 o'clock we passed out of Eads' channel into the open gulf. The swing of the old ship told us that he had changed waters. No more sights to see except the wild, restless wastes of water. After a tired day, the pleasant stateroom furnished the restful retreat and a night of delightful rest, "rocked in the cradle of the deep." Sunday morning broke upon us bright and clear, making beautiful sunbursts of the whitecaps that were made plentiful by a strong east wind. While getting ready for breakfast, I was seized by an unaccountable dizziness. I opened window and door, and managed to get fairly dressed. It was apparent the fishes must be fed. I had paid many bills in advance, but to give the sea my breakfast before I had eaten it myself seemed rather arbitrary, and harder to be delivered than any bills I had formerly paid. But there is no choice, no pleading, no philosophy, that will stand off the inexorable, so I fell in line with nearly all on board and was seasick all the rest of the journey. Monday, about 10 a. m., we sighted the highlands of western Cuba, much to our delight, and two hours later we passed beneath frowning Moro Castle into Havana harbor, in full view of a beautiful city of near 300,000 people. It was October 28, 1492, that Columbus entered the same harbor, nearly 414 years ago. The friendly natives which he found on the island, now nearly extinct, called the island Cuba. Efforts were made to change the name to Fernandina, in honor of King Ferdinand, and to Santiago, in honor of their patron saint, and to Maria, in honor of Jesus' mother, but all to no avail. The spot where Columbus is supposed first to have worshiped is marked by a pretty little chapel and statue. He visited the island in 1494 and again in 1502. Havana was taken by the French in 1538 and again in 1554, and by the English in 1762, but Spain has had almost continuous possession until, through the good offices of the United States, it became independent.

Tobacco and sugar-cane began to be cultivated about 1580 and have proved to be the great sources of wealth, although considerable gold, copper, silver and coal are mined in the eastern part. The soil for the most part is red and capable of a high state of cultivation and suited to most all tropical fruits and vegetables. The island is south of the Tropic of Cancer, south 130 miles of Florida. The air at present is delightful as a day in June; but the long-continued heat of summer is said to be oppressive.

Cuba is 730 miles long, of varying width, containing 43,319 square miles. The coast is shallow and dangerous, but there are many good harbors. The eastern portion is mountainous, the highest point, Mt. Cobra, attaining 7,670 feet. The rivers are necessarily short and small. The formation is coral, which some upheaval in the long ago has lifted out of the sea. Volcanic influences are frequently seen. The winter is called the dry and the summer the wet season, although some rain falls throughout the year, about 40 inches annually. Frost appears only in the mountains and snow is unknown. Pasture lands are plentiful and there are valuable forests of mahogany, Cuban ebony and cedar. The population of Cuba is probably near 2,000,000 people of great variety of color, nationality and intelligence. Catholicism was the only recognized religion until recently, and education was greatly neglected, only a small proportion of the people being able to read. Since the independence, matters are changing very rapidly. Protestants are now found in all the principal towns and cities and reasonable progress is made by the people. The cathedrals are gorgeous, with fresco, pictures, statues and altars. People come in, bow before the images, cross themselves, use holy water and pass out, seeming to be happy.

At once, on arrival at Havana, I took the train for Matanzas, 53 miles east. The fare is the same as in the United States, although the track and equipment is far behind our great lines—about as ours were 30 years ago. Mr. Menges, after three years' work at Havana, with his family, was sent by the foreign board to Matanzas to open up new work. That city has about 40,000 population of average people. Catholic influence, of course, predominates, but many are dissatisfied with its ways and are willing to hear the preaching of others. A general indifference in religious matters makes the work very difficult. In nine days I felt I had a fair view of the situation. On Friday night Mr. Menges baptized three men, on Sunday one woman obeyed the Gospel and Sunday night two others made the good confession. All were people of mature years. The Sunday-school numbered 96, in ages about as is usual in the United States. It is the largest Sunday-school in Matanzas, although the Methodists and Baptists have been at it much longer than we, and the Congregationalists about the same time. There is good fraternal spirit among them all. My daughter teaches a Sunday-school class of about 20 young women; Mrs. Hill a class of younger girls; Mr. Hill a class of young men. Mr. Menges has the Bible class. A Cuban woman teaches the younger boys, and another native has the infant class. They expect soon to organize a teachers' meeting to prepare much-needed teachers. My daughter meets three classes of women during the week. I went with her to some of these meetings. I never saw a deeper or more respectful interest than these women showed. They asked questions and told freely of their difficulties. Some of them were truly pathetic. Mr. Menges besides preaching on Friday nights and on Sundays, preaches every two weeks at Cidra, a town of 1,000 people, where he has already baptized a number of people. He also preaches every two weeks at Union, some 20 miles away, a town of 5,000, with no Protestant church nor even a resident priest. It is a weathly community with two railroads. Twenty are now ready to obey the gospel. If some man or woman of means would furnish $2,500 to put up a suitable chapel at Union it would doubtless be a fitting and useful movement. A thousand dollars would build a chapel at Cidra. Bro. Roscoe Hill and his good wife speak the language readily and are doing fine work for the Master. Brother Hill has a school of about 25 boys and has just opened a school for girls. He has been there about a year and a half. They are full coworkers in every way.

I had but a short time at Havana. Brother McPherson and his excellent wife are hard at work. Four were baptized at the close of Endeavor service Thursday night. They have fine help in Brother Godinez, a native Cuban preacher. Brother Peckham, late of Hiram, O., and Miss Meldrum, of Buffalo, N. Y., have charge of McLean College. They have about 50 pupils; enrolled attendance about 33. The mission includes three Sunday-schools, four places of meeting. Wish I could speak more of the great work being done in Cuba, I have been a contributor in my small way to foreign missions since the society was organized and I wish I could put ten times as much in as I have.

these blessed workers were trained in Eureka College; should I cross into Jamaica I would find four more; in Australia I would find Bro. Howard, the general evangelist of the island, who in five years has brought more than 1,200 people into the churches. Six Eureka children are in Japan, some in China and Africa. So in both hemispheres and on both sides of the equator we could appropriately write Illinois notes, if the fruit of Eureka College, scattered around the world, is worthy of mention. May the Lord bless our scattered children and raise up friends to make Eureka College still a greater power in the world and multiply the number sent out to carry the banner of the cross to the ends of the earth.—J. ## Cincinnati Letter.

Spring opens upon very successful work in Cincinnati and vicinity. The Sunday-school revival was taken up in most of our churches, and everybody is hopeful for gratifying results. The contest idea seems to be prevailing in many sections. The Fourth Street school in Covington challenged Newport for a contest, and the same was accepted, and now these schools are hard at work to see which will be stronger in three months. Carthage and Camp Washington have been contesting for some time. Lockland and Fairmount are already half way through a three months' contest, and both schools are thriving. The new church at Columbia is having two schools, one in the morning and the other in the afternoon. These are also contesting. Much interest is being taken in starting cradle rolls and home departments that all the church membership may be enlisted in the Sunday-school work.——A men's league has been recently organized in the Mt. Healthy Church. A number of men not members of the church have joined it. The Newport church has a men's organization of about 75 members. It is a fraternal organization. The members pay initiation fees and dues, and in case of sickness benefits are paid. The church at Lockland has a men's organization which has proven a great benefit to the church, as well as the individual members. Its primary object is the spiritual development of its members.——R. W. Abberley recently held a meeting at Lawrenceburg, Ind., for J. D. Garrison; 27 were added.——George A. Miller entered upon his thirteenth year at Fifth Street Church, Covington. The twelfth year, he says, was the best year in his ministry there.——Brother Thompson, the new minister at Richmond Street, is starting in with much encouragement. All departments of the work are taking on new life.——J. L. Hill, pastor at Central, recently addressed the Evangelical Alliance on "Sunday Observance."——The writer is in a meeting in the new church at Columbia. This is a hard field, but the Gospel is God's power to save all who believe.—W. G. Loucks, Station R.

J. Ewart Rains, of Downs, Kan., has located at Lexington.——C. F. Martin resigned at Waco and has located at Overton.——R. D. McCance has been in a short meeting at Elwood. The results have been very good.——W. B. Harter has resigned the Greenwood work and goes to Lead, S. D.——C. V. Allison closed his work at Cozad March 25 and goes to Mound City, Mo. There have been 14 additions during his year there.——Brethren please take note that the corresponding secretary's address has been changed to 541 North Twenty-eight street, Lincoln. Phone L 1878.——The meeting at Palmer held by N. T. Harmon, of David City, resulted in 13 additions. The meeting is reported as very beneficial to the church otherwise.——The church at Bartley now has R. W. Miller, of Genesee, Idaho. The church will paint and paper its house.——T. A. Lindenmeyer has been holding a good meeting in his home church at Falls City, assisted by the veteran singer, R. A. Givens, of Denver.——H. T. Sutton lectured on missions at Ord and a large mission study class was organized. The C. E. gave a fine program and took an offering for the orphanage at Damoh. The church is contemplating a parsonage. Oscar Sweeney is the pastor.——Frank E. Janes and wife have been in a promising meeting at Sheridan, Wyo. The church needs a good man to locate. It has a nice building and a congregation at peace. Brother Janes is available for meetings. Address at Fremont, Neb.——The state evangelists closed a meeting at Gering, with 35 additions to last report—all adults but one; season stormy, but most successful meeting; church will be in fine shape for a preacher to follow.——H. E. Motter, pastor at Craig, was burned to death in a gasoline explosion in his home. He was lighting a fire with gasoline and the explosion resulted. It was a sad ending to a useful life. Brother Motter was highly esteemed, both at Craig and Wakefield, where he was just closing half-time work. Suitable resolutions were ordered drafted by the state board at its last meeting.——The convention of district No. 1 was a decided success. It was largest in point of numbers and was enthusiastic from the start. Every session is reported as most earnest. The new corresponding secretary is Bert Wilson, of Humboldt. The next convention goes to Verdon. The reports from active churches show good work and growth.——The state secretary spent Lord's day, March 25, in Alliance. The brethren secured an unused church and at the Saturday evening service 35 people were present, and on Lord's day morning about 75. Nearly all were members of the Christian Church. The communion was spread. Elder Geo. Harmon, of Auburn, presided. The services were delightful. We have an earnest company of brethren and sisters there and an organization will soon result. Alliance is a town of over 4,000 people. The next Lord's day was spent at Norfolk. Final plans were laid for a permanent organization and funds will be raised for a lot and a tabernacle form of church house erected. A fine location has been chosen. The effort to unite the Baptists and our brethren on a Scriptural basis has not resulted favorably. This is a serious disappointment. A very few people were allowed to prevent it.—W. A. Baldwin.

Mishawaka, Ind.

The spring convention of the Indiana Christian Missionary Society of the first district convened with the church at Mishawaka. It was voted one of the most successful conventions ever held in the district. Seven have united with us since March 1. We have just burned a note held for two years against the church. We are so far out of all debt. Every department of the work is prospering. The Bible school has more than doubled in enrollment and attendance. We preach weekly to full capacity of the audience room. The attendance at prayer-meeting averages 150.—Edward O. Tilburn.

To our objecting parents we might repeat his words to his own: "My dearest parents, grieve not at my absence, for I am engaged in the best of services, for the best of Masters and on the best of terms; but rather rejoice in having a child upon whom the Lord has conferred this honor."

When, in September, 1816, the young missionary was ordained, Dr. Waugh gave him this solemn charge: "Go, dear young brother, and if thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, let it be with teaching poor sinners the love of Jesus Christ; and if thy arm drop from its shoulder, let it be by knocking at men's hearts to gain admission for him there."

"One Williams does more to confound infidelity than a thousand Paleys." "He sought souls as early as most men seek gold. He lived, planned, suffered and at last died because he loved the souls of men. To such a man all the race is under the most weighty obligation; his usefulness, his sincere piety are an inspiration, as if an angel shook his wings."

Ere he had long been in the South Sea Islands he organized a missionary society and King Pomare was elected president. He instituted trial by jury, taught the sanctity of the home, introduced fruit culture and covered the islands with florescent beauty. They killed him, it is true, but his blood became the seed of the church that has transformed those savages into kings and priests unto God and made them free and citizens of heaven.

Williams has proven that where there is a will there is a way. He had not the advantages of early education, yet his Narrative of Missionary Enterprises in the South Sea Islands is one of the classics of our literature and has been called "the second Acts of the Apostles." He also published the New Testament in the Raratongan language. God will always so supplement the weakness of those of willing hearts as to enable them to prevail in the power of their combined might.

"Lord, if it is not thy plan and will that I become a missionary, then tear the wish with all its roots out of my soul," was an oft repeated prayer of young Williams, before he was eighteen years of age, that reveals the intense earnestness of his desire to carry the light to those bowed down in the darkness of heathendom. Love made his heart so dauntless that no sea was wide enough nor any indifference disheartening enough to permanently separate him from a life of consecrated usefulness, a martyr's crown and an immortality of glory.

John Williams, born at Tottenham, England, in 1796, was apprenticed to a blacksmith. This apprenticeship was not a prediction of a great missionary career, but under the providence of God it was an indispensable preparation for the peculiar work he was to do. There he acquired that marvelous mechanical skill that enabled him with scarcely any shipbuilding appliances to build the famous missionary sailer, "Hawier," with which he traversed far southern seas and kindled the beacon light of the Gospel on many an erstwhile gloomy island shore. It teaches our youth that if their hearts are on fire with a passion to serve God and save men, no matter where their lives are cast, there is a school in which they may prepare for distinguished usefulness.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

THE LORD'S SUPPER.—Luke 22:7-20.

Welcome, ye hopeful heirs of heaven,
  To this rich feast of Gospel love!
This pledge is but the prelude giv'n
  To that immortal feast above.

How great the blessing, thus to meet,
  According to our Savior's word,
And hold, by faith, communion sweet
  With our unseen, yet present, Lord!

And if so sweet this feast below,
  What will it be to meet above?
Where all we see and feel and know
  Are fruits of everlasting love?

In sweet communion: The promise of heavenly communion (Matt. 26:20-30); disloyalty even at the Lord's table (Mk. 14:17-21); providential preparation for its institution (Lu. 22:7-13); communion humility (Jno. 13:12-20); early services (Acts 2:43-47); Pauline ethics (1 Cor. 11:20-33); to be kept in memory and honored in practice (Heb. 10:19-25).

Even more sacred than the inn in which he was born, or the storied hills of the annunciation, or Gethsemane, in which he suffered, or the cross on which he died, is that upper room wherein he instituted the memorial supper. Elsewhere he had freely loved and served others, but here he has the delicate task of asking others for memorial tribute unto himself. But even here he was serving, for the self-ennoblement of the service is greater than the glory we can give unto him.

Doubtless the Lord arranged this service in part for his own strengthening against the awful trial of next day's cross. This is his mute, but beautiful, testimony to the power of Christian fellowship to sustain us under the clouds and amidst the crosses of life. Let us so love one another that every troubled heart may feel that in the fellowship of the brethren is a well-spring of comfort and help that will make us all more highly prize our fraternal relationship in Christ Jesus.

When Paul, the great Christian logician, says, "wherefore," it is well for the world to pause and ponder well what follows. None other of these "wherefores" is more significant than when he said to our Corinthian brethren, "Wherefore, whosoever shall eat the bread or drink the cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner shall be guilty of the body and the blood of the Lord." Hereafter even the most careless of us will see the necessity of approaching communion with clean hands and pure hearts.

In view of the Savior's tender appeal to do this "in memory of me," it seems strange that Paul or any other preacher should feel obliged to exhort disciples against forsaking the assembling of themselves together about the broken loaf and the symbolic cup. We all need refreshing for the heavenly journey, and nowhere else does the heart naturally become so receptive of grace. Carelessness with reference to the invitation to this earthly communion will greatly imperil our presence at the heavenly banquet.

The presumption of Satan goes beyond all belief. Even to that hour of heart to heart communion between Jesus and his apostles, which we would expect all alien and sinful spirits to flee as unclean night birds would the brilliant festal hall, he comes in the person of apostate Judas and leaves baleful shadows cast by himself. Let us not hope for exemption therefore. Guard well thy thoughts or even into the home circle and sanctuary, yet, to the communion altar itself, he will follow to divert your thoughts from holiness and fill your heart with evil suggestions.

the nation is not prepared for this simple and easy settlement of all difficulties.

Who is Mr. Birrell? He is one of the most interesting of living personalities. He is the son of one of the most popular of Baptist ministers of the last generation. The Rev. C. M. Birrell preached for years at Pembroke Chapel, Liverpool, now the scene of the exceedingly popular ministry of Dr. Aked. The Rev. F. B. Meyer was in those days the young assistant pastor for a short time of C. M. Birrell. Hugh Stowell Brown was the other leading Baptist in Liverpool, and visitors from America to the great city on the Mersey were generally anxious to hear Brown and Birrell. Thus our minister of education was brought up under deeply religious auspices. He is a religious man and is anxious to conciliate all parties. A barrister by profession and also an accomplished literary man, Mr. Birrell is the right man in the right place in his official capacity. But on him has devolved a crucial legislative task. His consummate ability renders him well fitted to fulfill the obligations involved in it.

FEEDING THE FIVE THOUSAND.

—Mark 6:30-44.

Memory verse, 41.

Golden Text.—My father giveth you the true bread from heaven.—John 6:32.

Jesus had sent his disciples out on an independent tour after giving them instructions (Matt. 10). The account of this first apprenticeship in preaching and healing is very brief (Mark 6:12, 13). We do not know whether they had many converts, but they preached repentance, healed the sick and cast out demons. When they returned to Jesus, it was doubtless in a worn and weary condition. The excitement of a new work, especially one of such striking character and involving the use of miraculous power, would naturally carry them beyond their strength. Jesus gave them no miraculous renewal of vigor, but told them to come and rest. This miracle of re-creation through vacation and recreation is a perpetual one, open to every man who can have access to a mountain or a lake or a desert or a bit of blue sky anywhere. It is part of the duty of a worker to learn how to rest most effectively. The more important the work the more necessary the rest.

The reference in Matthew (14:12, 13) indicates that this retirement into the wilderness came immediately after Jesus learned of the death of John the Baptist, and presumably soon after that event.

Jesus began the day by consideration for his disciples, whom he knew to be in need of rest. He twice showed compassion for the multitude, once when he saw their hunger for the words which he could speak, and again when he observed their physical need of food. Neither need obscured the other. He took into account the whole man, body and soul. His mission was not merely to save souls, but to save men. Man is primarily a spiritual being, and his primary needs are truth and love. But in his present estate he is also a bodily being and he needs food, shelter and the conditions which make for health. A well rounded Gospel in its application to the actual world takes account of all of these needs, as Jesus did.

The constant surprise of the disciples at every new exercise of the Master's power may seem strange to us. They had seen him cure the sick at a word. They themselves had done the same through his power and in his name. They had seen him heal the demented. They had seen him even raise the dead. Why should they not take it for granted at once that he could feed the multitude? Their apparent surprise is only an illustration of a larger truth. The mind of man can never fathom the divine love and wisdom and power. Taught by experience, we may learn that God is good, but we may not hope to know how good he is. By the very nature of the infinite, it must be that it shall contain constant surprises for us as we see its beneficent workings in our own lives and in the on-goings of history. Eternity will not be long enough to bring all the divine perfections and powers to our comprehension.

How beautiful the scene when this vast concourse sat down, quiet and orderly, in the grassy place near the lake. Already they were deep in the spell of the wonderful words to which they had been listening, those "many things" which the Master had been teaching them. So, thoughtful and expectant, they sat down to banquet from the hand of one who, through the years of his ministry, seldom had a crust of bread of his own except through the bounty of his friends. Jesus was a habitual recipient of hospitality. But he could give it also. And it was like him to dispense his hospitality when there was real need of it and not merely in the way of paying social obligations to those who had entertained him.

Then there was the lad who had the loaves and fishes. We could not afford to spare him from the record. Matthew, Mark and Luke do not mention him, but Jesus does (for this is one of the few incidents recorded by all the evangelists). The lad had a very scanty store, but he held the key to the situation, for his little happened to be exactly what the Master needed. Oh, happy boy! What a memory to carry down to old age, of that day when the Great One called him in the presence of that throng, and took and used so wonderfully those poor provisions which he offered. He must have wished that it were more. He was ashamed to offer so little, not enough for the twelve even, not to mention the crowd. But it was enough, as every little is enough when it is all that we have to offer and it is freely given. It is ours to furnish the paltry loaves and fishes; the Master's to multiply and distribute them. Ours to bring without shame the small resource or petty power that is in our hand; his to make it fruitful and serviceable for the blessing of thousands.

Who Are They?

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Allow a plodder in the ranks to inquire, not for an editorial answer, but to pass along to the reader a line of thought in the writer's mind, Who are the writers who have recently filled so many pages of one of your contemporaries with vicious attacks on church federation and its advocates? I have been a reader of most of our church papers, from the "American Christian Review" down to date; have attended a good many national and other conventions, and learned many prominent names among us, but recognize very few of those writing in your contemporary.

What are our best known pastors and evangelists, the officers of our various national and other boards, our substantial business men, our college men and consecrated women, saying and doing about federation? I wonder if they are not, like us common people, quietly studying the question and watching developments to learn whether or not the Lord has chosen this method to bring his people together, while deploring the unseemly spectacle which this tirade in a great representative journal must be making to the religious world of the people who sprang from, and have always justified their efforts by, the plea for Christian union.

As Others See Us.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I am much interested in the symposium you are publishing giving the views of your membership regarding federation with other churches in Christian work. The fact is your people are doing it grandly now in your hearty co-operation with the Christian Endeavor movement. To my mind there is nothing more significant of your attitude and catholicity than that while the Methodist people have their Epworth League, the Baptists their Young People's Union, and a few years ago an unsuccessful effort was made by a small minority of the Presbyterians to establish a Westminster League, the membership of your church remained steadfast Christian Endeavorers.

It follows, I take it, that your membership will cordially endorse the action of the directors of the Winona assembly at Winona Lake, Ind., last autumn, when they formally took action prohibiting the building of any denominational church on Winona grounds. Instead they organized the Winona Federated Church.

Members of other churches desiring to unite with this church do so by letters of commendation, not dismissal, from their home churches, retaining their membership in their former home. When persons joining the Winona Federated Church on confession of their faith leave Winona they receive letters of dismissal to the church of their choice.

Already there are near twenty different denominations represented in the membership. Cordial commendation of this action by prominent ministers and laymen of a large proportion of the leading evangelical denominations is very gratifying to the Winona directors.

How I Was Cured of Anti-ism.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

In the words of one of the illustrious dead, "Let us have peace."

Now let's have a few quotations: Prov. 16:24: "Pleasant words are as an honeycomb, sweet to the soul, and health to the bones."

Prov. 17:9: "He that covereth a transgressor seeketh love: but he that repeateth a matter, separateth very friends."

Prov. 17:14: "The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water; therefore leave off contention, before it be meddled with."

Prov. 18:19: "A brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city; and their contentions are like the bars of a castle."

Prov. 18:24: "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly: and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

I have read some of the controversy in the papers, and am satisfied, in my own mind, that the foregoing precepts have not been followed to any great extent. Now, just come to reason; that is the better way to settle this question. I was considerable of an anti myself, but I happened to be at the Detroit convention, and the Christian Church building had had a ruinous fire, so nothing could be done in it to amount to anything. But lo, and behold, these Gentiles came to our relief. The First Presbyterian and Methodist houses opened their doors and said, "Come in and occupy; we are not afraid we will be defiled by you." I thought that was good, but still I was not convinced; thought may be that was just put on for the trial. But when Sunday came these Gentiles gave up to the Jews (the Pharisees). Now comes the real thing: Brother Power preached in a Presbyterian church in the morning. I was anxious to see the outcome; but what was my surprise to see the minister come in, arm in arm with Brother Power, and gave the finest introduction I ever heard. He didn't say "Rev. Power," but this is "Brother Power," pastor of the Garfield Memorial Church at Washington, D. C., so many years pastor, and lots of other good things; among the rest he had one house servant for over a score of years. That wilted me! Just think of them giving up their cushioned pews to those that don't want to have anything to do with them? Then, at night, the same courtesy was extended to Brother Garrison. The preacher came in side by side, introduced him, saying: "This is Brother Garrison," not doctor or reverend, but simply Brother Garrison, "Editor of The Christian-Evangelist." No Gentile about him. Well, Monday night it was my lot to hear Brother Small. The same brotherly courtesy was shown him. His subject was, "Union." He described the happy effect that would take place when all would march side by side, keeping step, and when they got on the old sectarian bridge, all stepping together, the old bridge would break; then he would get his Presbyterian brethren in the water! It looked to me they enjoyed it, all right. That took all the anti out of me! But we pride ourselves on our baptism, which is all right in its place, but there are other things that are right, too—the spirit of Christ in these people that we don't want to federate with. Seems as though some of us have the other spirit instead of Christ's spirit. They say "we have nothing to give up." I think we have lots to "give up!"

Watson, Mo. Chas. H. Carpenter.

DULANY.

Tabitha C. Dulany, wife of William H. Dulany, entered into rest at her home in Hannibal, Mo., April 11, 1906, aged 79 years and 9 months. She was the daughter of the Rev. Anderson Woods and his wife, Elizabeth Harris Woods, and was born in Boone county, Mo., July 9, 1826. Her father was a prominent preacher of the Baptist Church, and in her early youth she was converted and became a member of that church. She was married December 27, 1842, to Martin Bodine, of Paris, Mo., and of this union six children were born, three of whom survive her—William and Ashby Bodine and Mrs. William Ownby. After her marriage to Mr. Bodine she united with the Christian Church, and was a most loyal and devoted adherent to the faith of the Disciples. Her husband died February 21, 1856, and on November 20, 1862, she married William H. Dulany. To them was born one son, James Garland Dulany. This son, her aged husband, her other children, her stepsons and stepdaughters, three sisters and many relatives and friends are left to mourn her loss. Before the infirmities of age came upon Sister Dulany she was an active worker in the church, and after her retirement from its activities she was solicitous always concerning its welfare. She possessed a happy, cheerful, hospitable disposition, which made her many friends. Her sympathies were always with the poor and unfortunate and she was ever ready to respond to all calls made upon her for charity.

As she and her aged husband walked the pathway of life together their solicitude for the comfort, each for the other, was a beautiful example of the sacredness of the marriage tie. Sister Dulany had her share of the ills and trials of this life, but her faith in the Lord was so complete that she passed peacefully away into the spirit life with a beautiful smile on her countenance. Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, for henceforth, yea, sayeth the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them.

GRESLIN.

David Greslin, of South Haven, Kan., died February 5, aged 67 years. P. H. Guy preached the funeral sermon.

GROSS.

After a year's sickness, Samuel J. Gross passed away April 14, 1906, at the age of 73 years. He was baptized February, 1853; married Cynthia Haven, June, 1860. He was intelligently and deeply interested in the Disciples of Christ.

Boston, Mass. A. L. WARD.

HOLLOWAY.

Sarah Susan Hill, born January 7, 1836, in Lincoln county, Ky., died March 29, 1906, aged 70 years, 2 months and 22 days. At the age of 9 months she was brought by her parents to Missouri. At 13 years of age she united with the Church of Christ at Middletown, Montgomery county, Mo., under the preaching of Elder Jacob Coons. On March 21, 1858, she was married to Brother William M. Hollaway, Elder Timothy Ford officiating. Three sons were born to them, one of whom died at 4 years of age; one is now married and lives at DeSoto, Mo. She leaves her husband, two sons and three brothers to mourn her loss, but while bereaved relatives and her host of friends mourn for her, we realize that the loss is purely our own, as all are resting assured that as sure as there is a reward promised for faithfulness, our sister has gone to share that reward. She was ever faithful to her family, true to her friends, loyal to the church, and loved its service. Sunday, March 18, was the last time she was permitted to meet with the Lord's people in public worship. As the writer was leaving the house of God on that day she clasped his hand and with radiant face and the tremor of earnestness in her voice, exclaimed: "We have had such a blessed service today." Soon afterward she was taken to bed with pneumonia, from which she had suffered several attacks, and in spite of loving care of friends and the skill of the attending physicians who had cared for her through her previous attacks, her body sank peacefully to rest. God, whom she served, will do what is right; more than we can ask or even think. Before her death she was heard to murmur, "The way is clear for me." By the rule of ethics laid down by our Savior, "By their fruits ye shall know them," we feel this to be true. May we each one who remain so number our days as to apply our hearts unto wisdom. She remembered her Creator in days of her youth, and at last fell asleep in hope of a glorious immortality.

McKRIN.

Mrs. Thomas McKrin, one of the oldest Disciples of Brooks county, W. Va., was called to her last rest on March 27. She came into the kingdom early in life, under the preaching of old Brother Teagarten. She leaves a husband and two daughters to mourn her loss, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Jeppie Oretha Robertson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Robertson, Corning, Ark., after eight years' service in the Master's kingdom, aged 22 years. She was a sweet Christian girl and loved by all who knew her.

TRIPPLETT.

Mary Triplett, of Terre Haute, Ind., died April 15, aged 67 years. She had been a member of the Christian Church the greater part of her life and was prepared to meet her God. She was buried at Old Union Cemetery, near Jasonville, Ind.

WILLIAM PEARSON.

WATKINS.

Mrs. Grace Gafney Watkins, wife of Bro. F. C. Watkins, of Winfield, Kan., departed this life on February 16, 1906, at the early age of 25 years. Truly it may be said of her, she has gone to enjoy the reward of her labors. She became a member of the Christian Church at the age of 12 years, and ever remained a true and faithful member. She was one of God's noblest workers, having perfect faith and confidence in the ultimate triumphs of the Gospel. The church loses in her one of its most active and energetic members, having from the beginning of her church life occupied positions of honor in some department of the church work. While Sister Watkins remained but a brief time in this world, hers was a beautiful and fruitful life. The greatest tribute that can be paid to any can be paid to her. She has come, lived and gone, but the impression her sweet life has made upon those who knew her best will remain forever.

"There is a calm for those who weep;
The storm that wrecks the winter's sky
No more disturbs her deep repose.
We can only say, God's will be done,
  And a friend indeed is He—
A refuge in the storms of life—
  An anchor on life's sea."

Suffer in Silence.

BY LOWELL M'PHERSON.

Soul of mine, suffer in silence,
And do thou be uncomplaining,
Let whatsoever may betide.
God still lives; so ever cherish
Most profoundly the unfailing
Promise that His grace doth provide.

Dost not, soul of mine, remember
Christ in that desert place apart,
Tempted days and nights together
At all points of weary nature
Of mortal man with pained heart,
How He trusted His own Father?

Dost not, too, my soul, remember
That in that terrible trial
In human nature's awful test,
There was no changing confidence,
No fearing, not one denial
Of God at Satan's subtle jest?

O, soul of mine, lest thou forget
In times of great temptation,
Keep in mind that great victory
In God's strength won so truly and Crowned with angels' ministration,
And now writ in sacred story.

Yes, my soul, be ever mindful
That, tempted in all points as we,
The Christ of history ever won
And will ever victories win
By the will of Gethsemane—
"Not my own will, but thine, be done."

Now be thou trustful, soul of mine.
Has ever Heaven's promise failed?
Submit thy ways unto the Lord.
In weakness He may be thy strength,
In times of danger, thou assailed,
Protected art. Thou hast His Word.

Then, soul of mine, keep thou thy gaze
On Him who can be thy wisdom
In times of folly, and thy Light
In times of darkness; in sorrow,
Consolation. In the freedom
Of Thy will keep His in sight.

The Bronze Vase.

PART II.

CHAPTER V.

The morning after Raymund received the letter from Rhoda, he saw the carriage leave the Omer mansion at an early hour. When it returned he caught sight of an elderly lady sitting in the back seat, slight of form and bright in colors. He had no doubt it was Nelsie Loraine's governess just from the city. In the afternoon, as Baby lay asleep and Raymund sat on the front porch studying his algebra in the November sunlight, he was surprised to see the tall, cold presence of Mrs. Omer approaching the ornamental iron fence. She called the youth in a formal tone and he went to his side of the fence.

"Raymund," said Mrs. Omer, with a brief glance at him, and then looking far away, "I understand you would like to study Latin and French. If that is the case, you may follow me."

"I should like it very much," said Raymund, "but shall I bring Baby with me?"

Mrs. Omer started and looked at him coldly. "Certainly not. I will have my black woman watch after the child. Certainly not! You may come now, if it is your desire. I do not think it best, but Mr. Omer insists that you should have the opportunity. I can not see, Raymund, what good Latin and French will do you. You are a helpless orphan, Raymund, and so is your sister. I think it would be better for you, and better for the world, if you were satisfied to earn your bread with manual labor. In the condition of life that you must fill, there is place for very little ornament. I have seen too many"—she looked at him rather sternly—"too many, Raymund, who, though poor, miserably poor, had been filled with high ideas by an education which kept them restless and discontented all their lives. I think it my duty to speak these words, though they may hurt. I speak the truth, and I owe it to you, and to the world." She looked at him more kindly as she continued, "What do you expect? Look at Tom and Fred. What good would French and Latin do them? It would only make them unhappy. The higher education, my poor boy, is for the rich, or at least for those who have means. Of course, everybody should be taught to read and write. You know how already. Now, if after all I have felt it my duty to say, you still want to take up these superfluous studies—studies very befitting Nelsie Loraine, but entirely out of place in a helpless orphan with whom I sympathize, however, sympathize deeply, Raymund—you may follow me."

Then without looking to see if she were followed, Mrs. Omer turned her back and with a stately tread walked toward the large brick mansion. Raymund turned red and white by turns. He swallowed hard and clenched his fists in a mental struggle. He longed passionately to educate himself; but he shrank from accepting a favor so ungraciously offered. Mrs. Omer marched to the steps of her porch, then looked casually over her shoulder. There stood Raymund behind her, ashamed, shrinking, yet determined. Perhaps the most difficult steps he had ever made toward an education were those taken in following the unsympathetic figure of Mrs. Omer.

"Oh, very well," said Mrs. Omer, discovering him and turning away with a face of cold displeasure. "Come, then."

They crossed the porch, traversed a spacious hall, and entered a room back of one of the parlors. It was a large room with a "cottage window," a bay window, and a diamond-shaped window of red glass. There were shelves of handsomely-bound books, and several tables, one in particular that pleased Raymund—round and very massive, occupying the center of the room. It was mahogany and beautifully polished, so was a dainty desk with a leaf that pulled out to be written upon. Little boxes for papers, drawers of different sizes, a lower shelf to hold magazines, and several upper shelves for books. The leaf of the desk was drawn out, now, and upon it rested one arm of Nelsie Loraine. She gave Raymund a pleased look. He was introduced to the governess, whose name was Mrs. De Fer. Mrs. De Fer was a little, gray-haired lady, very energetic and bright, with quick unexpected movements and unexpected smiles. She was plainly of French origin, but she spoke English almost perfectly. The slight accent that made her speech different from an American's, was not sufficiently pronounced to be singular.

The room was handsomely furnished, and the dresses of the two ladies and the girl seemed to call attention to Raymund's poor attire. The boy was painfully conscious of the contrast, but he shouldered it as one of the crosses he must bear. He had but one suit of clothes beside his overalls, and it was almost threadbare. No matter how brave of heart and resolute of will an orhpan may be, when clad in such garments and finds himself in a scene of richness and luxury, he can not meet those of a superior wealth on an equal plane. He can not be independent in his movements, free in his speech, easy in his demeanor. He feels that those about him hold themselves far removed from him; and though he may not feel that they are any better for their fine clothes, the knowledge that they believe themselves so, if it does not convince him, must in a sense overawe him. For instance, while Mrs. Omer with crossed hand sat by the "cottage window" watching the governess to see that she did her work well, it would have been impossible for Raymund to deport himself with Nelsie Loraine's ease. Indeed, Nelsie Loraine was bent upon learning just as little as her mother would allow, and learning that little in the easiest way known to the science. She found the hour of study extremely irksome. The sight of books did not thrill a responsive chord in her heart. With Raymund it was altogether different.

The books that smiled from the shelves filled him with vague longings. The sight of the huge mahogany table, covered with paper and books and inkstands and little trays of pens and pencils, pleased him more than the view of a beautiful picture. He found Latin delightful. Pennae meant "a pen." Of course it could have meant nothing else; it almost seemed as if he had known that all his life. But pennae meant "of a pen," and it meant "to or for a pen," or it just meant "pens;" or it meant an exclamation, as if you should shout out in astonished admiration, "Oh, pens!" And pennae meant all those dfferent things! How were you to tell when it meant one and when it meant more than one? There must be rules to regulate every particular kind of pennae. Raymund was anxious to find out what the rules were Nelsie Loraine had no curiosity about pennae.

"Mrs. De Fer," she said, "isn't' there some easy way to get this without learning these Latin multiplication tables?"

Mrs. De Fer laughed gaily. "It is the declensions that you speak of, is it not?" she said. "I am much afraid there is no other way at all, but to learn them, each one."

Nelsie Loraine pouted, but her mother spoke up: "Be firm, Mrs. De Fer! If it has to be learned to get Latin, keep my daughter to it; for Latin she must know!"

"I will be firm," said the little lady, smiling at Nelsie Loraine. "She must get it like Raymund. Raymund is one very thorough."

"It's all right for him," said Nelsie Loraine, drumming on her desk, "maybe he will teach it some day. I'll never be a school teacher, you know. I want just as little of all this as will get me through."

Mrs. De Fer said yieldingly, "you may skip all the very fine print in the next lesson."

"Now, Mrs. De Fer," said Mrs. Omer, pressing her lips together, "if the fine print is necessary, I will see that Nelsie Loraine gets every word of it. My daughter has her way in almost everything, but when I make up my mind she does not try to disobey me. I am determined that she shall have a showy education befitting her means. And, Mrs. De Fer, I have employed you at considerable sacrifice; and I must insist that you be firm!"

"I will be firm," cried the other, nodding in a most determined manner and then smiling at Raymund. "The fine print is really not essential; fine print is the work of boys rather than of girls. Raymund will learn all the exceptions; it is not necessary that Nelsie Loraine learn them."

Nelsie Loraine seized her pencil and began to scratch out all the fine print in the next lesson with very heavy lines, remarking, "I'll get this much of my next lesson, right now!"

The French lady laughed a light, high-toned, pleasant laugh, and smiled at the unresponsive Mrs. Omer. "Your daughter is such a girl!" she cried; "such a girl!"

Mrs. Omer looked at her stonily but did not answer. She wanted no French lady smiling at her. The French lady must learn that she was a "leader."

The French lesson, which immediately followed the Latin lesson, was much easier. It was almost pleasant to the girl, and it was quite delightful to the boy. Mrs. De Fer taught them to talk in French, and when they had learned certain sentences, she would show how the same words looked when spelled; and very curious they looked, with a host of unnecessary letters. Just to think that "Shivaree," something they had heard of all their lives, was spelled "charivari!"

The lesson hours were much the same, day after day. Mrs. De Fer was always trying to smuggle Nelsie Loraine some bit of information without paying the taxes of study and memory. Mrs. Omer was always present with sharp, watchful eyes, like a custom-house official, with the exhortation to the governess to be firm; and Raymund was gradually and surely going far beyond the mental pilgrimage of Nelsie Loraine. But Raymund was not occupied entirely with study and the care of Baby; already he had begun to plan to make his birthday party a success. It did not check his enthusiasm that it must be given in the Hands' House, for Raymund felt more at home there than in the splendid mansion, on account of his clothes. At first he thought the girl must be his only guest, but gradually a plan formed itself in his mind. He induced Tom and Fred to share in the enterprise, and he wrote a note to Jack Bellfield to come out Sunday, if he could find a horse to borrow; that he had a very important scheme on foot, and he needed the help of the minister's son. What Raymund's birthday party scheme was, and how Jack was to help in the entertaining of Nelsie Loraine will be unfolded in the next issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

The Quietus of Miss Jerushy.

By Charles Frederic Goss.

Miss Jerushy had been the direct or indirect cause of the dissolution of every pastoral relationship in the Wallingford Presbyterian Church during a quarter of a century. Why those 12 or 15 able ministers of the Gospel and that congregation of pious and sensible people had let this meddlesome old maid upset all their plans and destroy all their prospects, nobody could tell. Perhaps the reason lay in the essential goodness of Miss Jerushy's heart, for her devotion to the church was never called in question. It was this very zeal, no doubt, which made it impossible for her to put up with mediocre success. When, therefore, a new minister began to fall short of perfection, her righteous soul would swell with indignation. At first, she would berate the minister himself, and then, if he did not make good, begin to stir up the membership. The symptoms of Miss Jerushy's going on the warpath were unmistakable—the war paint, feathers, tomahawks and ghost dances of Indians finding a counterpart in her plain black Sunday bonnet; shiny, brocaded dress; faded green parasol, and wild dashes into stores, residences and church sociables.

Whenever the congregation observed these goings-on, it knew that within a short time there would be another preacher's scalp suspended at Miss Jerushy's belt. Educated in an eastern school and reared upon the Shorter Catechism, the Westminster Confession of Faith, Calvin's Institutes, and above all, the English Bible, Miss Jerushy was a formidable critic, and more than one of the most cultivated of all this series of clergymen had confessed that when he felt her little black eyes riveted upon his face, his ideas would vanish like a covey of quail. By these persistent assaults upon its peace the church had been gradually divided into warring factions. Good neighbors and faithful friends were separated by suspicions and misunderstandings. Occasionally, some elder or deacon had taken it upon himself to remonstrate with Miss Jerushy, but without success. Once or twice a preacher, more belligerent than the rest, had tried to organize a rebellion against the tyrant; but had met his Waterloo.

Living entirely alone in a tasteful cottage upon a generous income, Miss Jerushy was rigid in her self-denials, generous in her benefactions and scrupulous in her dealings and had acquired both influence and power. Had it not been for the facts that her wig was never quite straight upon her head, nor her spectacles upon her nose, and that her gold plate was loose in the roof of her mouth, she would have presented an attractive, as she did an imposing, appearance.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
2712 Pine Street - - St. Louis, Mo

For the first six months the last minister in this long procession which had filed so rapidly through the church, succeeded in avoiding all the ordinary pitfalls into which his predecessors had stumbled. At the mature age of 50 years he was pleasing in person, tactful in methods, resourceful in emergencies, and Miss Jerushy had actually begun to think that the ideal man had arrived; but one Sunday morning a single sentence of his sermon not only contained a grammatical error but a theological heresy, and Miss Jerushy once more went upon the warpath.

To the astonishment of the congregation and even of the session, the Rev. Joseph Rowland Gill was not disturbed. The information of the outbreak reached his ears on Friday morning, and in the afternoon, having called upon his elders in rotation, he went straight to Miss Jerushy's cottage. Very few people had ever succeeded in traveling that pathway from the gate to the door without attracting the attention and undergoing the scrutiny of the lynx-like eyes of its occupant, but it so happened that on this eventful afternoon Miss Jerushy was so absorbed in an argument with one of her neighbors over the unsound theology of the minister, that she did not discover his approach until she saw him standing on the porch.

The sudden vision of the kindly countenance of this very man whose influence she was trying to undermine, abashed and bewildered Miss Jerushy so completely that she committed a great sin and (what some people think is infinitely worse) a great blunder.

"I will not see him! You will have to tell him I am not at home," she exclaimed to her companion in a voice of suppressed emotion, and plunging into the parlor closet, shut the door.

If Miss Jerushy was bewildered by the minister's sudden appearance, her guest was not less so by this unexpected command. Hurrying to the door, she repeated the words of her hostess, but with a tell-tale face which the Rev. Joseph Rowland Gill was too keen an observer not to see.

"Well, I will just step in," he said, coupling the suspicions aroused by the woman's manner with a certain scuffling sound and the violent slamming of a door, as if some one in the house were trying to escape. Mrs. Lasher backed nervously into the parlor, seated herself stiffly on the edge of an old hair-covered lounge and beckoned the visitor to a chair.

"I am sorry that Miss Jerushy is not in, but as my business is very important, I will wait," he said, looking keenly into the flushed face of his hostess.

Mrs. Lasher did not reply. The situation was too terrible to admit of clear thinking by such slow wits as hers. Her naurally dull countenance became absolutely vacant.

"She will not be gone long, I presume?" the preacher asked.

"I—I don't know," Mrs. Lasher replied.

"You are waiting for her yourself, no doubt."

"Yes—that is to say—I was—I mean am; but I must be—be going," she stammered, trying in vain to overcome a feeling of paralysis in her limbs.

"It will be unfortunate if I can not see Miss Jerushy to-day," the minister continued, "as she stands in a very critical position in the church. The session is about to take an action that is of the utmost importance to her, and I called to forewarn her of the danger she is in."

Confident belief that Miss Jerushy's ears would hear these ominous words had led the Rev. Mr. Gill to make this brusque announcement in a loud tone of voice, and its effect was instantaneous. The weak under jaw of the terrified Mrs. Lasher dropped perceptibly, and there was a sudden sound on the other side of the closet door as if somebody had uttered an inarticulate expression of wrath.

The minister pretended not to hear, and addressing himself to Mrs. Lasher in the most impartial and unconcerned manner, said: "You see, Miss Jerushy has come to be a public nuisance. She has driven more than a dozen ministers out of this church in the last quarter of a century, and when I accepted the call it was upon an express agreement that if she became cantankerous again the session would try her for conduct destructive of the peace of the church, and if necessary, suspend her from its membership."

This cold, matter-of-fact statement took Mrs. Lasher's breath away, and her two fat hands rose up in a gesture of despair.

"I tell you this," continued Mr. Gill, "because you are a friend of Miss Jerushy's and may be able to influence her. You are quite sure that she is not at home?"

Mrs. Lasher's agony had become all but unendurable. The perspiration stood in great beads on her retreating forehead.

"It's terribly hot, she said, wiping it away with her handkerchief.

"I thought the day was chilly," the minister replied.

"Oh, no! You are mistaken—I am burning up—I must get some air—and besides, I must be going home," she gasped, rising and moving unsteadily towards the door.

"Very well. Good-by. I will wait. It is extremely important that I should see Miss Jerushy. I shall try to point out to her how very unpleasant it would be to lose her membership in the church and be made an object of public scorn. I shall trust you to do the same. If you meet her, tell her that I am waiting."

By this time Mrs. Lasher had passed gaspingly through the front door, but seemed scarcely to find enough air to breathe in the whole outside world.

After she had gone Mr. Gill smiled toward the closet door, at which he also made a significant gesture with his forefinger, as much as to say, "The Lord has delivered you into the hands of the enemy, Miss Jerushy."

Clasping his palms under the skirts of his coat in the most complaisant attitude known to man, and whistling a Christian hymn tune, the preacher began to pace the room, thinking to himself, "It won't do any harm to give her plenty of time to think."

There can be no doubt that Miss Jerushy was making good use of a few brief moments, which seemed more like aeons. The predicament in which she found herself was horrible. She had told a lie and involved a neighbor in its endless complications. She was imprisoned in a closet whose limited supply of air she had already breathed over, several times. If she should permit her captor to go, she would undoubtedly die of strangulation, for there was no inside knob on the lock! If she should make her whereabouts known and appeal for release, the mortification of facing a minister of the gospel with a lie upon her conscience would certainly kill her dead! Perhaps she had better die! A church trial — condemnation — suspension — excommunication! It was horrible!

If Miss Jerushy had been out in the daylight, with plenty of fresh air to breathe, she might have risen above these dangers and fought her way to victory. But in that dark closet with that constantly diminishing supply of oxygen and the preacher pacing the floor outside, she lost her nerve. The bold and terrible charge to which she had listened struck home. She saw herself through the eyes of her neighbors and her friends.

Suddenly the minister heard a sob.

"What's that?" he asked, pretending to be surprised.

"It's me," said a faint voice, guilty of its first and only grammatical error.

"Where are you?"

"In the closet."

"I thought you were away from home."

"I'm stifling! Let me out!"

The minister opened the door, and the figure which emerged was scarcely more than a shadow of the resolute and haughty Miss Jerushy. Throwing herself into a rocking chair she put a black broidered handkerchief to her eyes and wept.

"I'm sorry," she said at last, in an almost inaudible voice.

"That settles it," the minister replied, being a man incapable of vindictiveness.

"I'll be good."

"Nobody can be better, when you do your best."

"And there will be no trial?"

"None!"

"And—you—won't—tell?"

"Not I! But how about Mrs. Lasher?"

"I'll—take—care—of—her."

Miss Jerushy's conversion was regarded by the public as a mysterious and even miraculous occurrence, and the facts were never known until she told them herself after Dr. Gill had completed a successful pastorate of ten years and been honorably retired. She made her confession on the day when a united people gave him a house and lot to pass his days in, and thus lightened the gloom of the occasion with a tale that set the tables in a roar.

Little Whimpy.

BY MARY MAPES DODGE.

Whimpy, little Whimpy,
  Cried so hard one day,
His grandma couldn't stand it,
  And his mother ran away;
His sister climbed the hay-mow,
  His father went to town,
And cook flew to the neighbor's
  In her shabby kitchen gown.

Whimpy, little Whimpy,
  Stood out in the sun
And cried until the chickens
  And ducks began to run.
Old Towser, in his kennel,
  Growled in an angry tone,
Then burst his chain; and Whimpy
  Was left there all alone.

Whimpy, little Whimpy,
  Cried and cried and cried—
Soon the sunlight vanished,
  Flowers began to hide,
Birdies ceased their singing,
  Frogs began to croak,
Darkness came; and Whimpy
Found crying was no joke.

Whimpy, little Whimpy,
  Never'll forget the day
When his grandma couldn't stand it,
  And his mother ran away.
He was waiting by the window
  When they all came home to tea,
And a gladder boy than Whimpy
  You need never hope to see.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Antoinette Thompson, Pittstown, N. Y.: "I am writing on Easter Sunday. We have some of your Arkansas rains here to-day. I suppose there will be a great disappointment in regard to wearing Easter hats." (Yes, we sent our rains out of the state for that day, but I'm sorry they went so far north. It was beautiful here, bright with sunshine, although there was a mean Missouri cold chill on the air. We wore our light Easter hats, and wrapped up the rest of us in warm things.) "As Easter offering, I am sending $1 to be divided between Drusie and Charlie. If I was young enough, I would join the Advance Society—but I can't memorize as well as I used to. I am interested in 'The Bronze Vase,' and the Av. S. letters. I was glad to see your picture in The Christian-Evangelist, but you didn't look so jolly as I expected. You must at that time have had the care of Charlie and Drusie lying on your mind. I imagined you an unusually cheerful man. But in the picture I thought you looked a little sad." (You are very kind to term my expression sad. I think mean is the right word. I seem to have just found out that Felix has rubbed a lot of hair on my nice Sunday clothes, and I am wondering how to get it off. Because you can't brush it off, nor blow it off, and you can't leave it on. I didn't know that picture was going to be printed. I suppose it was just lying in the office and they thought it would make "The Bronze Vase" look more mysterious to stick it in, as they didn't have any flower to put in it. I don't look like that picture, anyway. I have cleared away all that mustache, and the ground it shaded so long has been exposed to the sunshine and rains of Arkansas, and the criticism of friends, till you wouldn't know it for the same place. But how can I be taking up the time talking about mustaches, when there are so many letters to publish? Let's get on!) "My home is in Pittstown, N. Y., but this winter I have spent at Troy, N. Y., where I had the privilege of attending a good, live, working church." (I am glad those Christians of Troy are Trojans.) "I appreciated it all the more as our church has all gone down." (Strike some rock? Any of the congregation escape? Are they all drowned?) "I can't content myself living without a church; we have only three or four active members left." (It is a terrible thing to be caught in a storm out at sea! I tell you, when a church is about to go down, it takes a mighty active member to escape to land! Do you know many churches spend most of their time trying to keep afloat? They are covered with barnacles, and half full of water, and they have sprung a leak or two. And the crew is so busy at the pumps, and in getting the lifeboats ready, that they have little time to attend to the business for which the church-ship was built.) Lura and Lela Marksbury, Naomi, Mo.: "We are interested in the Av. S. orphan, and send you $1." (This was sent December 18, 1903. Of course the money has long since been used for our orphan; but this is the first time it has been acknowledged. And ever since then Lura and Lela have not been writing to ask "Why don't you print our letter? Why don't you acknowledge our dollar? No, sir, they haven't said one word! Blessings upon their heads!) Lillian Zimmerman, Glen Allen, Mo.: "I send you 50 cents for Charlie, 50 for Drusie." (Of course this sounds prosperous to the reader; but it was 3 months ago.) Mrs. Ataline S. Stokes, Carthage, Ill.: "I fear the Av. S. orphan and missionary are not so well remembered as they should be, so will inclose $1 for them, and wish it could be much more." Benton City, Mo.: "I send $1 for Drusie, $1 for Charlie's education fund—may heaven's richest blessings rest on them and the Advance Society." Mrs. S. A. Penn, Wellsville, Mo.: "I send $1 for Charlie, $1.25 for Drusie. The Lord will surely bless the work of the Av. S. May he richly bless our missionary Drusie, and our boy Charlie." Spircy, Kan.: "Inclosed find a small gift to help in the Av. S. good work, $2.50 for Drusie, $2.50 to help educate Charlie." (Ha, ha! $5 in this letter! Quite a movement forrids, hey, friends?) S. F. Snoddy, La Monte, Mo.: "Find inclosed a little draft for our missionary sister, Drusie. God's blessings be upon the Av. S. work of saving souls." A Friend, Springfield, Mo.: "Enclosed find $1 for Charlie, $1 for Drusie." J. M. Myers, Jefferson, Kan.: "Find inclosed $1.50 for Drusie, and 50 cents for Charlie's educational fund, and may God bless the Av. S. in its good work." (Most of the money acknowledged above has been received a long time, and there are $2 yet to be acknowledged; but now I want to give you the rest of Drusie's letter, begun two weeks ago.)

Drusie R. Malott, South Chih-li Mission, Tai Mingfu, North China: "Last year I wrote you about our New Year's day. This year, Chinese New Year came on January 25. As usual, China took a holiday—even the postoffices were closed. There was a stream of callers all day to wish us hsin hsii (happy heart). Each was dressed in the best he could buy, rent or borrow—mostly rented. I scarcely recognized our teachers! Perhaps it would interest you to know how we learn the Chinese language. It seems to me the ideal way to study." (Then let's hear it! for if there's any fun in the way to study, we want to get it out.) "Each missionary spends two hours daily with the teachers, at least. The teachers go from room to room, having but one pupil at a time. First, the beginner must learn the Sound Table to become familiar with the sounds, just as we learn our vowels and dipthongs. Next comes the Tone Table. For example, the word, ch'ing in one tone means please, or to invite. In another tone it means pure, or clear. In South Chih-li we have four tones; I am glad I am not in the North, where they have eight! One of my duties is to oversee the teachers. We have four teachers, and 24 missionaries, so it takes some thinking to arrange the study hours for all." (Just think what difficulties Drusie has undertaken! To learn what a Latin word means is bad enough, like dux, which every Latin scholar knows has no connection with the pond. But if you had to learn what dux meant in one tone, and how it meant something different in another tone, and something else in a third tone of voice—say f-sharp, why! it would be enough to make a Samson pull out his hair in despair! I'm glad Latin is dead, so it hasn't any tones at all. English has its tones, but we are not taught them in school; they just come to us, some how. For instance, when your mother says, "Come and bring in some wood now," you answer, "All right, I'm coming!" That is one tone. And when some bare-legged boy with one suspender cries, "Hi, Jimmy! come on and go fishin'! I've got dandy bait!" You say, "All right, I'm coming!" That's another tone.) "You ask if I come in contact with the Chinese. You ought to be here and see! The man who helps in the office is a Chinese. His name is T'ang Wang Pin (pronounced Bin). And he is the man who prayed 18 years for a

"The Garrison Library"—Alone With God, 75 cents; Heavenward Way, 75 cents; Half-Hour Studies at the Cross, 75 cents; Helps to Faith, $1; The Holy Spirit, $1, and The Christian-Evangelist, $1.50, all prepaid for $5.

Just Benj. Franklin's "Gospel Preacher" is the college from which many of our most effective preachers have graduated into careers of distinguished usefulness. These two volumes and The Christian-Evangelist one year, to our preachers only, $2.75.

Among the week's lists of new subscriptions we note 10 from North Eaton, O., Robert B. Chapman, minister; 6 from Irvington, Cal., J. H. McCullough, minister; 5 from New Windsor, Colo., E. J. Harlow, minister; 5 from Brockton, Mass.; 4 from Philadelphia, Mo., J. E. Rhodes, minister; 10 from Forest Avenue Church, Buffalo, N. Y., G. B. Wraith, minister; 3 from the Dalles, Ore., C. C. Curtis, minister; 5 from Albion, Ill., C. C. Garrigues, minister; 12 from Bowman Street Church, Danville, Ill., Andrew Scott, minister; 27 from Paris, Ill., Finis Idleman, minister.

We gladly acknowledge our indebtedness to our preachers for their part in the rapid increase now being made in our circulation. It is gratifying indeed to have constant assurances of the sympathy and co-operation of our loyal preachers in our efforts to hasten the fuller coming of the kingdom. A recent letter from one of the best informed and poised ministers in Ohio, says: "Fully 90 per cent of the preachers of this state are in hearty accord with you." An unsolicited but very creditable report from Indiana gives substantially the same ratio, and we believe these states are at least representative of all in the Union. For this we thank God and press on. We would have pressed on anyhow, but we rejoice in this almost universal fellowship of our brethren.

missionary. In answer to his prayer God sent our director here. Our dear little cook, who was blessedly converted last year, was a Mohammedan. Then there are the laundry boys and the sewing women—such workers! for there is much work to be done in outfitting the missionaries and keeping them in order. Let me assure you that a missionary has very few moments for such labor, with these thousands of perishing souls pressing upon him. Besides these workers, there is a constant stream of women and children each day to 'see' and 'to hear the doctrine.' They are not afraid, and are very frank in making remarks about us to each other, and make good use of their hands, eyes and feet. By the way, we should be glad to have some Sunday-school cards and papers from time to time. Perhaps several of the Av. S. members could get their school to volunteer to send us their left-over cards and papers. The cards might be used to interest the Chinese children, to induce them to come to the Chinese meeting. So, we could not use any papers or cards that are soiled or torn; but otherwise we would be glad to have them. As the inland postage amounts to considerable on papers and packages, perhaps you can think of some plan to keep it from being too heavy." (If the friends of the Av. S. have any unused Sunday-school papers, that is, unsoiled and untorn, and if they will send direct to me, I will forward them to the China mission, paying all postage from this point. Or, if you prefer, you can send direct to Drusie, if you are willing to pay the postage. Each quarter there are almost always Sunday-school papers and quarterlies left over in good condition, which are of no farther use to the school. Why not send them where they may help convert the Chinese? Also pictures or engraved cards. If you will send to me I'll see that Drusie gets them; or, if you will pay their way to her, I assure you she'll make good use of them.) Here are two letters from the Christian Orphan Home of St. Louis, which tell their own story. No. 1 is dated April 28: "Charlie has grown so rapidly that his crutch is entirely too short for him. To piece them out would cost 75 cents, and then they would not be very safe. We can get a new pair for $1.50, and would you feel like using any of the Av. S. money for this? We are ashamed to ask for it, but our Home has been very short of funds all winter. Since January I have not been able to pay all bills of actual expenses, but hope to catch up with the Easter collection." (Ashamed to ask? And I was so proud that we could reply with a check!) "We certainly appreciate what the Av. S. is doing for Charlie. Since our new matron came, she thinks there never was a much finer boy than Charlie." Letter No. 2, is dated May 2: "We have just received your letter inclosing check for $1.50 for Charlie's crutches. We sincerely thank you for this and in return wish you and the Av. S. all the good things of this world." (I don't know what the Av. S. has of the good things of this world, but a neighbor has just brought my family onions and lettuce, and strawberries are only 10 cents a box, and there is to be a basket ball match at the college campus this afternoon between two teams of Arkansas girls, and I have a quarter in my pocket, so I'm all right!)

What a Little Girl Did.

The city was putting water pipes through the street in front of a modern suburban home, and the little daughter of the house became very much interested in the process. The ground was torn up, and muddy coats and grimy shirts disfigured the trim fence. The gang on duty were a hard-working, harder talking and exceedingly thirsty lot of men. A little girl, Hetty, by name, watched them from the house with absorbing attention. It was cold autumn weather, and their voices were sharp upon the still air. One noon the child came to her mother in great distress.

"They are passing a black bottle around, and one man is talking very loud and saying wicked things."

"Perhaps they are drinking; you had better keep away," replied the cautious mother.

Hetty's face grew quite sad, and that night she prayed for the "poor man who drank while laying the water-pipe." A little before noon the next day she approached her mother timidly.

"What do you wish, my dear?"

"Please, do you think I may make some coffee for the men, mother? I think they would like it."

Then the thought flashed through the lady's mind: "There are many to sell them beer and none to sell them coffee."

"Why, there are nearly thirty of them," she said aloud. "I don't think I can afford to give all of them coffee."

"Oh, mother!" exclaimed the disappointed girl.

"Well, if you are disappointed, you have enough money in your bank," said the mother. "You can go to the grocery store and buy coffee and sell it to the men at 2 cents a cup. If they want coffee at all they would rather pay for it."

To the grocer's then the child flew. "It ain't any use," said the grocery man, promptly. "The men will have their beer. They wouldn't take coffee if you gave it to them."

"I shan't give it," said Hetty. "I'm going to sell it."

And sell it she did.

At first the rough men were greatly surprised at the girl's steaming pail and her pretty, business-like manner; but soon they bought and drank, and smacked their lips. Some of them declared that hot coffee like this was "better than beer."

The girl-peddler soon had all she could do. She took another girl as partner the next day, and was successful beyond her sanguine hopes. The neighborhood was all alive with interest in the new venture; but the most surprising thing of all was that the oaths and rude language were now seldom heard upon that street. A new gentleman seemed to have been born in the spirit of these rough men. Their foreman declared that from the time the little miss came he never had a better gang of laborers under him. He, too, had found it possible not to swear at his men.

But, too soon the men passed on up the street, and Hetty could no longer serve them; but the incident which took place in an eastern town recalls the fact that we, by thoughtfulness and attention, can find little ways of serving and benefiting others that will make both them and us happier and better. It is because of our indifference that it is not done.—Youth's Companion.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

Not only must our benevolent and missionary interests be mightily developed between this and the Pittsburg convention if we would render an account creditable to the great people numerically that we shall then be, but our educational interests as well. Theoretically, at least, we have been committed to the cause of Christian education from the beginning of this Restoration movement, but not yet have we given to the church an institution of learning as superior to others as have been our plea, our evangelistic methods and other factors of success under Christ that are almost peculiar to us as a people.

We sincerely hope that all the expectations of President Rowlison and his colleagues with reference to the conference call printed below, and Hiram College, may be more than realized. We commend this "Hiram idea" to other school men. Let us strive to present the very best of educational facilities to the youth of our churches and multiply the number of young men who will in our schools try to make of themselves workmen that need not to be ashamed.

A Centennial Call to Conference and Prayer at Hiram.

Believing in the announced objects to be attained in the century movement of the Disciples of Christ, a large number of ministers heartily unite in calling a meeting for prayer and conference regarding these special efforts of our people.

The main objects to be reached, as suggested by the century committee, are: to double our membership by 1909; to increase our annual missionary offering to twice the present amount; to lift all church debts, and to endow our colleges. Each of these objects is worthy of the best efforts of a great people; but to attain them will require the utmost devotion and consecration on the part of our ministers. Yet all will no doubt most heartily join in the movement. Feeling that God is urging us to consecrate ourselves in a united effort to accomplish the above-named results, we are calling the ministers of Ohio and contiguous territory to meet at Hiram College, Aug. 5-12, 1906, that we may unite in a week of prayer and conference to gather strength for these great enterprises.

While glorying in our prosperity, we must never forget that our real strength is in the Lord. Our very successes should humble rather than elate us, for "To whom much is given, of him shall much be required." While nearly half of our churches are without the services of trained ministers—"as sheep having no shepherd"—surely our Master's command is most imperative that we "pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth reapers into his harvest." While more than half of our churches make no contribution toward the evangelization of non-Christian peoples, we must most searchingly "prove our work." What will so bring us into adjustment with the will and purpose of God as a season of prayer and conference with our brethren? What will so emphasize these needs and at the same time so unite and blend our lives in one great purpose as this? For it is not a heterogeneous mass, but an organized and disciplined army that is effective in all great undertakings.

In general, the following program will be carried out:

Sunday, Aug 5—A day of spiritual fellowship in prayer and sermon.

Monday, Aug. 6—Conference on evangelization.

Tuesday, Aug. 7—Conference on the Sunday-school and other church agencies.

Wednesday, Aug. 8—Conference on Christian education.

Thursday, Aug. 9—Conference on systematic giving.

Friday, Aug. 10—Conference on missions.

Saturday, Aug. 11—Recreation.

Sunday, Aug. 12—Closing sermons and consecration services.

Each day a morning and perhaps an evening hour will be given to prayer and admonition. There will be a forenoon and afternoon conference each day with a strong leader, and ample time will be given for free discussion. Special groups of members of the conference may be organized to consider a few phases of church work not emphasized by the program, though this should be done in such a way as not to detract from the central object of the meeting.

Hiram is an ideal place for such a gathering. Her college halls are already sacred because of her service to the church. It is never oppressively warm here. That we are 1,270 feet above the sea indicates that we are more elevated than many a resort in the eastern mountains.

At a very moderate cost entertainment will be furnished members of the conference in the college dormitories, where most excellent meals will be served. Ample means of physical recreation will be open to all. Many have heartily given their approval of the conference and indicated their purpose to attend and we now send this appeal broadcast to all our ministers. Tell us what you think of the idea of the conference. Suggest ways by which we may enrich the program. Tell us that you will be present.

This plan originated with the faculty of the Bible department of Hiram College, which consists of the five names subscribed below. Necessarily the correspondence will fall upon them. Address all letters and inquiries to one of them, or to the college office, and they will be given immediate attention.

"Let there be a holy convocation unto the Lord."

C. C. Rowlison, E. B. Wakefield,
B. S. Dean, G. A. Peckham,
E. E. Snoddy.

Centennial Propagandists.

Wishing you success in your campaign for one hundred thousand subscribers, I am sincerely yours.—J. O. Newcomb, Hiram, O.

I enclose money for the renewal of my subscription to The Christian-Evangelist. In this day you must not think the "best heart of the brotherhood" is turning from you, for it is not.—E. B. Wakefield.

You can rely on my doing all I can to get a copy of The Christian-Evangelist in every home of our people. Yours for the one hundred thousand mark.—Edward Owers, minister.

Enclosed find $1.50 for the renewal of The Christian-Evangelist, the soul's inspiration. At no period within my knowledge have the Christian churches so prospered and been so full of divine power.—"Praise the Lord."—Mrs. J. L. Anderson, Harper, Kan.

I do not know how to thank you for your magnificent message on Christian union. You have helped to give Southern Illinois her greatest Institute. May our Father give you many years and much strength and grace for this great work to which you are addressing yourself.—C. C. Garrigues, minister.

Please find money enclosed for the subscription of two Methodist preachers who agree to read the paper if sent free to them, so we take them up. I do not know whether they are in the Kingdom or not. They are worth saving, and if honest no doubt will be saved. There is, however, a better road than the one they are traveling.—Geo. W. Gillaspie.

The brotherhood should be proud to have such an exponent as The Christian-Evangelist and should give it loyal support. I join hands with The Christian-Evangelist family in its campaign for an enlarged hearing. I like those words, "Excelsior," "Plus Ultra," "Ich Dien," and this seems to be the spirit of The Christian-Evangelist.—Frederick A. Mayhall.

When weary with regular pastoral work, I find it a source of comfort and strength to take up The Christian-Evangelist and read its editorials and the Easy Chair. Brother Garrison lifts me above fault-finding and heresy-hunting, and enables me to go among the people and love them better. It is hard enough for me to love and justly credit the people of other religious bodies for their work without a paper to stir within me a bitter enmity against them. May God bless you, for I feel you are leading us on, as a church and as individuals, toward perfection.—W. H. Knotts, minister.

Current Events

The President and the Senate.

The controversy which has developed between the President and Senators Chandler and Tillman is an unfortunate and unfruitful sort of argument. Mr. Tillman, apparently desiring to destroy what little harmony exists in the Republican ranks on the railroad rate question, so that its condition would match that of the Democracy on this subject, repeated in the Senate some uncomplimentary remarks which the President is said to have made to ex-Senator Chandler about Senators Foraker, Spooner and Knox. The President, through Mr. Lodge, denies that he made the remarks attributed to him. Mr. Chandler says he did. So there you have it. Mr. Tillman's evidence adds no weight for he professes only to repeat what Mr. Chandler told him. It is the President against Chandler. One or the other of them lacks either veracity or accuracy in his report of the conference. We may take our choice. It is no use to argue about it. It is, of course, perfectly obvious that there are some Republican Senators who are not in sympathy with the President's rate making program and who would gladly defeat it, and it is equally evident that he can not therefore regard them as his helpful allies. But Mr. Roosevelt has seldom done anything in such bad taste as to tell Senators of the opposite party that he had entirely lost confidence in their colleagues of his own party.

The Real Question.

These personalities are of no real importance to the public, but they have given occasion for a clear re-statement of the President's attitude toward the pending Hepburn bill and its many amendments. This is stated in a letter from the President to Senator Allison and one from Attorney General Moody to the President, both of which have been read in the Senate. The substance of the matter is this: The President favors the Hepburn bill as it stands, without amendment. This bill declares what courts shall review the findings of the commission but does not specifically grant jurisdiction to these courts nor define the exact scope of the jurisdiction. It was believed that the language of the bill clearly implied the granting of jurisdiction and that all danger of the bill being declared unconstitutional would be avoided if no attempt were made to limit the ground of review. On both of these points amendments have been offered which the President considers unnecessary but unobjectionable. The first, known as the Allison amendment, specifically declares that the courts named shall have jurisdiction only of two questions: first, whether the commission has exceeded its authority, and second, whether the constitutional rights of any person have been infringed.

The Reply of the Douma.

The Czar's address from the throne at the opening of the Russian parliament was rather a feeble and disappointing utterance, expressing good intentions but in the most general terms. The assembly with difficulty refrained from expressing its disapproval. It refrained in order that the reply of the parliament to the Czar's address might come with greater force. The first draft of this reply has been submitted to the Lower House. After expressing gratification for the Czar's' promise to uphold the new institutions by which the people have been called on to co-operate with the sovereigns in legislation, it proceeds with some very urgent recommendations. The first is for amnesty to all political prisoners. The establishment of a ministry responsible to the people is declared to be essential to the successful co-operation of the people and the Czar. There must be an immediate repeal of the special laws placing portions of the empire under martial law and in state of siege, and an end of all arbitrary process against persons and property. There should be legislation guaranteeing such privileges and immunities as are included in our "bill of rights." All citizens should be given equal rights before the law. The rights of the peasantry and the wrongs of the working class especially need consideration. Popular education must be encouraged. The needs of the separate nationalities and races within the empire must be met and their reasonable demands granted. The tone and temper of this document, its conservative yet fearless utterance of democratic principles, encourages one to believe that Russia is more nearly ready for popular government than we had supposed.

Conference. Waterways

A two days' session of the Congressional River and Harbor Committee, together with the executive committee of the National River and Harbor Congress was held in this city last week. Their deliberations and the undoubted results of the conference are most significant, not only to the Mississippi Valley, but to all America, and will undoubtedly greatly affect the struggle of the nation for the commercial supremacy of the world. The movement contemplates not only a deep water route from the lakes to the gulf, but also the transforming of the unruly Missouri and Ohio and their tributaries into great commercial highways. Congressman Randell, of Louisiana, argued this would righteously and naturally settle all railway rate legislation and relieve the people from the tyranny of ruthless stock manipulation. Congressman Davidson was greatly applauded when he declared that money now building our great battleships could be more advantageously invested in good waterways for the development of our inland resources and commerce. It was asserted that Germany's commercial supremacy in Europe is due almost altogether to an advantage of one-fiftieth of one per cent per ton per mile in freight rates on her canals and rivers, while statistics were submitted showing that railway transportation costs the producer and manufacturer six times as much as that carried "in bottoms." One purpose of the conference was to create a public sentiment demanding an appropriation of $50,000,000 annually for a term of years for the scientific and systematic development of our internal waterways. It is believed that notwithstanding the certain opposition of the "railway forum," this will be done. No other material enterprise would contribute more to the general prosperity of the American people or the commercial greatness of the nation.

An Important Decision.

The United States Supreme Court has decided that a state may forbid a foreign corporation to do business within its borders without giving a reason for such action. The case has an important bearing on the right of states to exclude insurance companies. The decision was rendered in a test case arising from a statute enacted by the Kentucky Legislature authorizing the insurance commissioner of that state to revoke the license of any foreign insurance company which removes a case from the state courts to the federal courts. The Supreme Court held, in substance, that, while the right of such removal from state to federal court is a constitutional right, the right of a foreign corporation to do business in a state is not a constitutional right and can be revoked with or without giving a reason. The statute in question does not, therefore, invade any constitutional right. It merely presents an alternative. The corporation may, if it pleases, stand upon its right to a trial in a federal court. But if it does so, the state may also stand upon its right to revoke the license of such corporation. This decision should help in Missouri's fight with the big insurance companies.

Brevities.

The Democratic state convention of Rhode Island has taken the unusual course of nominating an Independent Republican as their candidate.——Ex.Governor "Bob" Taylor, whose habit it was to play a tune on his fiddle before making an address to the voters, has obtained a decisive majority over Senator Carmack in the recent primaries of Tennessee in the race for the senatorship.——A general strike of skilled workmen, involving some 500,000 men, is feared at Berlin and other German cities. The demand is for a minimum wage of $5 a week.——As a result of certain remarks by Bishop McCabe the Chicago Federation of Labor is said to have decided to boycott the religious revival planned by the Methodist bishop.——The British House of Commons has passed the coal mines bill, the purpose of which is to reduce the hours of work gradually until an eight-hour day is enjoyed by all in 1909.——The Ferris wheel, the wonder of the Chicago and St. Louis expositions, is now scrap iron, having been toppled over by a blast of dynamite as the easiest way of removing it.——Ex-Senator John B. Henderson and his wife were recently converted to the temperance cause. The effect of that conversion was seen last week in the entire contents of their wine cellar being poured into the street gutters in Washington. The owners would neither sell nor give it away, and resolved to destroy it.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

IV. The Protestant Era—Period of Reunion.

7. Have We Been Loyal to Our Own Ideal?

It is one thing to have a great ideal, and quite another thing to be always loyal to and consistent with that ideal. If this be true of the individual, how much more true is it of a religious movement, with its thousands and tens of thousands of advocates and adherents, having different temperaments, varying degrees of culture and widely differing religious antecedents and environment? It must be confessed, at once, that while the greatest leaders of the movement throughout its history have kept steadily in view its catholic spirit and principles, and in their teaching and practice have adhered to the same with as great fidelity as is given to mortals, large sections of the brotherhood have, at different times, and in different places, been swayed in their spirit and teaching by ideals and motives which, to the extent they have prevailed, have been subversive of the chief aim of the movement. This has been true of every religious reformation in history, and the Disciples of Christ had no right to expect immunity from such divisive tendencies. We would gladly drop the curtain over these pages of our history, were it not for the useful lessons they may teach us in avoiding similar errors in the future.

The most distinguishing feature of the movement, and one which entitles it to rank as a Christian union movement, is the distinction it has always drawn between faith, which is personal confidence and trust in a personal Savior, and matters of opinion or inference, as we have already pointed out. But, strange to say, it has been just at this point where there have been most frequent failures to live up to the high ideal. Instances of this failure are to be seen in the fierce opposition that was at one time waged against the use of instrumental music in public worship. This custom was held by some good brethren to be a violation of the principle, that Where the Scriptures speak we speak; and where the Scriptures are silent we are silent." This was of course to confound mere matters of method, or of expediency, with matters of faith and loyalty to Jesus Christ. To conceive of the New Testament as a Christian law-book, entering into the minutiæ of worship and of service, is to misconceive the very spirit and genius of Chrisitanity, and to ignore the wide gulf which separates it from Judaism; and yet one of our strong points has been to emphasize the dispensational lines, and to bring every item of Christian faith and practice to the test of the Christian dispensation! It is an illustration of how people sometimes fail to follow out their own premises to their legitimate conclusions.

The same erroneous method of reasoning has been applied to the Sunday-school, to missionary organizations, to certain methods of observing the Lord's Supper, to the Christian Endeavor Society, to postures in prayer, to church architecture, and many other incidental things relating to mere methods of work and of worship. In some instances local churches have been rent asunder over the organ question, and sister congregations have been alienated from each other because of the different ways of doing missionary work. It is easy to see, of course, how utterly inconsistent with any claim of catholicity of position or spirit, for our movement, have been these divisive ideas and practices. And yet there are well-meaning people devoted to these doctrines and practices with a zeal that is in inverse proportion to their knowledge of church history and of the meaning and breadth of the religious movement with which they are identified.

But there are other ways in which we may be disloyal to our high ideal. This ideal implies that Christianity consists, as it does, of faith in and devotion to Christ, and is pre-eminently a spiritual religion; that it is a life, rather than a system of doctrine, although it involves sound doctrine. And yet it has often happened that in our preaching and teaching the chief emphasis has been laid on things that are external, rather than on things which are internal and vital. Obedience to an external command, like baptism or the Lord's Supper, has sometimes been taken more as a test of loyalty to Christ than general conformity to His teaching as relates to conduct and character. We have not always given first place to things of first importance, and godliness and prayer, with purity of heart and life, have often received less emphasis than doctrinal accuracy and a correct pronunciation of the shibboleths. Sometimes the spirit of humility and of teachableness is not exemplified to as great a degree as might be expected of those who claim to be simply learners of Christ. It must be admitted, too, that sometimes the zeal for party success has apparently been greater than the desire for the unity of God's people.

These departures, here and there, from the divine ideal which we set out to realize are the natural results of defective education and training, of imperfect spiritual development, and, more even, of divisive teaching and preaching by false leaders, and have done much to prevent unity among ourselves, and hence to hamper our work in commending Christian unity to others. But it has never been otherwise in history. Every great cause has had to win its way to success and final victory not only through the opposition of its enemies, but over the mistakes of its friends. Perhaps this opposition and these mistakes of short-sighted friends, may be the very means of developing more clearly the strength of the righteous cause. But whatever the causes, and whatever the sad results of such failures, it is comforting and reassuring to know that these faults are seen and recognized more clearly to-day than ever before, and that the great body of both ministers and members are moving in the direction of greater loyalty to our divine ideal, and are giving a more practical illustration of what is involved in our plea for Christian union.

A Book for the Times.*

The book containing the proceedings of the Inter-Church Conference in New York City in November last, together with the addresses delivered on that occasion, the plan of federation proposed, list of delegates, committees, officials, etc., which has been eagerly looked for by thousands, is a volume of nearly seven hundred pages, including full indexes, press comments, etc. It is pre-eminently a book for the times. It would have been well if the book could have been issued earlier, or if the discussion among us on the subject of federation could have been postponed until this book was in the hands of those who care to know the spirit and meaning of the great religious conference in New York City. It will go down in history as one of the most remarkable religious gatherings in the history of the Church universal. The record of its proceedings, together with its great addresses, is an invaluable contribution to the literature of Christian union. Glancing through this volume we are impressed afresh with the significance of some of the great utterances to be found in these addresses. We select a few at random:

> "For my part, while I have a measurable love for my own denomination, I have always called myself Christian before Presbyterian; and I have always held myself as a Christian minister, before I counted myself as a Presbyterian pastor; and the name Christian to me is first and dearest. To-day we all have something of that feeling in our hearts, and there is a method of formulating it. Shall we not find it? If we will look for it, it will come to us."—Dr. Henry C. McCook, p. 68.

Some one has called the proposed basis of federation a creed—the very thing which the Inter-Church Conference set itself to avoid. On this point read the following statement:

> "I wish to emphasize this one thought, that if we avoid what seemed to me the practical error of the Evangelical Alliance, and instead of rallying round those fundamental doctrines by formal statement of them, in which I suppose nineteen-twentieths of all in this convention and those they represent would agree; if instead of that we leave those matters to take care of themselves, and do the work which God has called us to do, this federation convention will have successors, and will command respect and arrest attention; and in some near to-morrow people will say not only 'How those Christians love one another!'—that is a good thing to say—but 'How those Christians are doers of the word!' "—Bishop Foss, p. 71.

Dr. A. B. Leonard, corresponding secretary of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, said:

> "There are a great many things on our hands in this country that very greatly need attention, and need the united attention of the great Protestant denominations. There is no one question > upon which we need unity of action more than in the great temperance reform that is moving forward in this country. The churches of America can abolish the saloons of America. I dare to say that the saloons in this country are here because the churches have not been united in their effort to cast them out of our civilization. Federation and co-operation will do much in this direction."—p. 72.

Dr. Samuel J. Niccolls (Presbyterian), of St. Louis, said:

> "There must be some definite center of unity or the plan will have no cohesion. I am sure from what I have heard in this conference that we all know what that center is; it is none other than the person of Christ and his supreme position as the Lord and Savior of men. * * * Our union is in him. We can not afford to put him in the background with our various creeds and denominational distinctions and beliefs. * * * We must lift up the standard of Jesus Christ, the divine Lord and Savior of the world, and whoever follows any other banner, I, for one, can not go with him for the accomplishment of the evangelization of the world. Surely, brethren, we can see that the spirit of oneness in Christ is increasing in power. The great heart of the Church is yearning for its larger realization."—pp. 84, 85, 86.

One of our own representatives, referring to the evil of divisions, said:

> "My brethren, Demos is waking! He looks upon much of this state of things as belonging to the paganism of the priesthood. The people are tired of our differences; let their leaders confess and forsake their sins, and the great multitude of Christendom will join hands. Educate the masters is a needful word. Are we ever tempted to forget that we are Christians? Let us return to the spirit of Christ. Do we ask the kingdoms of this world to dissolve their armaments, to decree that there shall be no more war? Let us see that in the kingdom of the Prince of Peace the drum-beat of civil conflict is hushed. Do we speculate about a universal language, and so predict the unity and co-operation of the human race? Let us, who have our speech ordained of heaven, all speak the same thing and preserve the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Do we desire for our King that he may have the heathen for his inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession, and that the kingdoms of this world shall become his kingdom? Let us pray, with him, that all his people may be one that the world may believe."—F. D. Power, pp. 479, 480.

We could fill this whole number of the paper with extracts equally pertinent and potent; but we only desire to give a few sample statements to create a desire for the full meal which this volume furnishes. It ought to go into the libraries of all ministers of the Gospel and all others who are interested in the greatest movement of our day—the movement for the unification of the Church of God. The reader, of course, will find statements here and there that do not measure up to his ideal of unity. What else could be expected? It will be noticed, however, that the great theme of discussion in this volume is Christian unity, and federation is looked upon only as a means to bring about that end. That God intends to use it for that purpose we can not for a moment doubt. This volume itself, if we are not mistaken, will give a new impetus to the union movement throughout the Christian world. The book has been put at a price that forbids any margin of profit to those who handle it, but this house will take pleasure in furnishing it to any of our readers at the regular price.

Notes and Comments.

The brethren in Missouri have been behind their brethren in some of the other states in the creation of a permanent fund to be invested, the interest of which is to be devoted to carrying on the work of missions within the state. They are coming into line, however, and Brother Abbott has, for a year or two, been giving special attention to the raising of a fund of $20,000 for this purpose. He is now on the "home stretch," striving to complete it before the Hannibal convention. This should be done, by all means. Do not wait for a personal appeal from Brother Abbott. Send to him for one of his blanks, and fill it out with such amount as you feel you can afford, and you will thus have a permanent investment that will go on preaching the Gospel in Missouri long after your personal work is finished. The sum ought to be increased to $50,000, and no doubt will be later, but at present the immediate effort is to secure $20,000, and this, we understand, will make good some liberal pledges which are conditioned upon the raising of that amount. We bespeak the co-operation of the brethren in Missouri with our corresponding secretary in this worthy enterprise.

The brotherhood in Missouri should be looking forward with deep interest now to their annual convention which meets in Hannibal June 15-20. The church at Hannibal, through its pastor, extends its invitation elsewhere in this number and there is every reason why there should be a large and general attendance from the churches in all parts of the state. These annual conventions have much to do with the progress of the cause in its different departments throughout the whole year. There are some preliminary preparations for the convention that should receive attention at once. All churches having made no offering to the work should do so before the convention meets. The interests of our cause in the state require a great convention at Hannibal. It is especially desirous that all sections of the state be represented. It will be a time of great fellowship, of inspiring addresses and sermons, and we trust of wise planning for the future. Let the preachers throughout the state call the attention of the churches to this meeting as a part of their business, and the importance of sending a delegation to represent the church in the councils of their brethren.

There is no event in the year, unless it be Christmas, to which our children look forward with more interest than Children's Day. It has become permanently fixed in the calendar of the Sunday-school year. The June roses do not bloom more naturally than do the offerings of the children for world-wide missions bloom out on the first Lord's day in June. Nor are June roses so sweet in their fragrance as the incense of praise and gratitude which rises from the hearts of the little ones, as expressed in their free-will offerings and their Children's Day exercises on the first Lord's day in June. While these united offerings from the little hands and hearts make no inconsiderable part of the sum total of our gifts for foreign missions, the greatest value of the day, perhaps, lies in its educational influence in preparing the future church to regard missions as its chief work and the main reason for its existence Let pastors and church officials, therefore, see to it that the day be properly observed and that the children have the right of way in the order of proceedings for that day. If it be true that any of the churches have been diverted from their offerings by any reason, see to it that the children, at least, have a fair chance to make good any shortage in the work of their seniors.

We have still on hand a good deal of matter for the symposium on federation. We promised our readers in the beginning that we would give this subject a fair and impartial hearing. We believe they will agree that we have done so. Nearly all the matter we have on hand unpublished is favorable to the kind of federation we have advocated; none of it is opposed to that kind of federation, but a few are questioning whether we are not going to be hampered by it in the planting of new churches, and that in the face of repeated explanations that federation offers nothing but its counsel, when asked for, and this would only be in doubtful cases, and that, at last, it is for every church to decide what its duty in the premises is, and to act accordingly. It would seem, therefore, that unless there is some one ready to offer some objection to the federation that is proposed, namely, the free and voluntary co-operation of churches that hold to the Lordship of Christ, as far as it is possible without sacrificing conscience or liberty, in the promotion of the kingdom of God, in the manifestation of such unity as exists, and in cultivating a more perfect unity, the discussion might as well be closed. It is now apparent to all who have watched the discussion that differences of opinion have been based almost exclusively on different interpretations of federation, and that, as defined by its friends, there is little or no objection to it. The discussion has done good in clearing away misapprehensions, in emphasizing some truths that needed emphasis, and in calling attention to the position and teachings of the leaders of this movement on the subject of Christian union. We are grateful to those who have contributed to our columns for the spirit of the discussion, which has been fraternal and free from objectionable epithets. We shall shut out no one who has a new or important thought to express on this subject, but we hope soon to be able to devote the space which we have been giving to this discussion to other topics which are crowding upon us. We shall have something to say next week, perhaps, in summing up the results of the discussion.

Editor's Easy Chair.

A few nights ago, being in rather a restless and anxious mood, we waked from a light slumber and found that it was yet night. A silence so profound reigned within and without that we could distinctly hear the beating of our heart. Have you ever noticed how the little difficulties and burdens of life which in the daytime do not trouble you, loom up in the night season and take on much larger proportions? How swiftly the mind, at such a time, surveys life, past and present, and even seeks to penetrate the future! But on this particular night, while thus ruminating, the cheery song of a bird floated out upon the stillness of the night and filled all the air with its liquid notes. This prima donna of the air was singing its song to a sleeping world, and yet it carried a message to one waking and listening heart. This bird, we reflected, had neither storehouse nor barn, and knew not where its breakfast was to come from, and yet its little heart was so full of gratitude that it broke the solemn stillness of the night with its song of praise. Almost any bird can sing in the bright sunlight, as it flits from bough to bough with its fellows, but it must require a superior breed of the bird kind to sing its song in the night. It does not require a large amount of faith for one to be grateful in the day of prosperity, when the skies are clear, and the future looks fair and promising; but he who in the night of adversity or of sorrow can lift his song of gratitude to God for his goodness and mercy has attained to the faith that is as precious as it is rare. If we who profess to be followers of Christ can only rejoice and be glad in the light of prosperity, and have no inner vision that pierces through the darkness of the night to the light of the coming day, what do we and are we more than others? Blessed is he to whom God "giveth songs in the night."

It is one of the paradoxes of life that more real joy and gladness come out of a life full of burdens and sacrifices, borne for others and often circumscribed by hard conditions, but loyal to a high sense of duty, than from the care-free lives of those so situated that they may minister unstintedly to all their desires and who make it their supreme aim in life to enjoy themselves. The reason for this fact which no one can fail to observe, is that man is a great being and has too large a moral capacity to be satisfied with the superficial things of life. True happiness can only spring from the depths of the moral nature, and the magic touch which opens the fountain is the consciousness of duty faithfully done. It is, therefore, a great compliment to our human nature that true and abiding happiness can only be found in paths of righteousness and of unselfish service to humanity. He who finds the real joy of life in fellowship with God, in loving service to his fellowmen, has an unfailing source of happiness, and no matter how hard the storms of adversity may beat upon him, he can rejoice in God. Writing from his prison cell in Rome the great apostle said to his brethren: "Rejoice in the Lord; and again I say unto you, rejoice!" Paul could not have written thus without having had a joy in his heart which was wholly independent of his material condition and outward circumstances. A greater than Paul, of whom it was said, "He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," said to his disciples: "These things I have said unto you that my joy may be in you and that your joy may be full." This was the joy of doing his Father's will and ministering to others. To such as have tasted the sweetness of this joy how poor a substitute is the joy of the world that withers and dies at the touch of adversity! To those who have opened these inward fountains of perpetual peace and joy God "giveth songs in the night."

It is a happy event in the life of a church when its whole membership gathers in a social way around the banquet table, with its invited guests, to become better acquainted with each other, to eat together, and listen to inspiring music and speeches. It was the good fortune of the Easy Chair to be at the annual banquet of the church in Peoria on Friday night of last week. It was one of the best managed and most successful affairs of the kind we have ever attended. What was a little exceptional in this banquet was that the whole ministerial association of the city was invited to be present, and they were nearly all there. Much credit is due to the general chairman, J. A. Harmon; to the toast master, Dr. Collins; to the pastor of the church, Harry Foster Burns, and all the ladies of the church for their wise management and hearty co-operation in this social function of the church. The visiting ministers, with the local pastor, and the invited speaker of the evening, were seated together about a large, round table, while the other guests completely filled the large basement of the church. On being introduced the Easy Chair remarked that he had not had so good an opportunity for missionary work for a long while, as was afforded by the presence of all these preachers sitting about him, and he addressed himself to the subject of Christian union. They not only listened with patience to the address, but took occasion to endorse it in very hearty terms afterwards. One of the visiting ministers remarked that it was the first time in the history of Peoria, so far as he knew, that any church had ever invited to a banquet the entire ministry of the city, and complimented them upon their breadth of fellowship and spirit of enterprise for so doing. It was a very delightful occasion in every way and one which reflected credit upon all concerned. It was a pleasure to us to witness the great growth which this church has made in numbers and in its moral influence in the community, and to have a pleasant little visit in the home of the young pastor and his wife, situated on the bluffs overlooking the city and the river. Brother Burns we found to be deeply ingratiated in the good will of all the people, and is leading the church forward in a way that is highly satisfactory to all the members.

The Easy Chair hears conversations while traveling on the railroads or on the street cars, which serve to show an amazing lack of religious knowledge. In this last instance they sat on the opposite side of the aisle in a chair car, man and woman, chance acquaintances, having just met on the train. He: "I don't take any stock in the churches. My wife does, but I propose to think for myself." Now his appearance did not betray any excessive thinking. On the contrary, we should say that a preacher's most difficult task in his case would be to get him to do a little clear, sober thinking. How many poor souls are deluded with the idea that their thinking is keeping them out of the church, when it is the lack of thought that is the chief trouble! This man's conversation revealed the fact that he was in total ignorance of the meaning of the Gospel and the mission of the church. She: "That's the way with me; I think if we go according to our conscience we will not go far astray." And yet, on listening to her remarks, we were not impressed with her conscientiousness. She confessed, indeed, that she often did what she knew to be wrong, and felt guilty for it. He, priding himself on his thinking, was wandering in the maze of ignorance concerning God and duty. She, leaning on conscience as a guide, without the Gospel, was condemned by it and was under the condemnation of sin! That Christ's death for the sins of mankind had any relation to their spiritual needs, they neither seemed to have the remotest idea. They were of one mind in opposing foreign missions, on the ground that there are plenty of heathen in this country—a fact which their conversation seemed to confirm! But we felt tempted to inquire why they should object to having the Gospel sent to heathen lands, seeing that they did not need it! Yes, indeed, we do need the preaching of the gospel of redemption from sin through the cross of Christ, even in our own land, where so many are in the bondage of ignorance and unbelief.

Every Christian an Evangelist

By Chas. Reign Scoville

"Do the Work of an Evangelist."

Christ alone can save the world, but Christ can not save the world alone. Realizing this, just before leaving his followers and this earth—the inhabitants of which he came to save—Jesus gave this definite and positive command, "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Some one has said, "If Christ is to be your partner, then make large plans for your life." The program of Jesus is the salvation of the world. "As the Father hath sent me, so send I you." This divine personal command, coming direct from the throne, ought to stir every item, every atom, and every power within the church.

It is said that when Jesus returned to heaven from his earth mission, ten thousand times ten thousand sang his praises as he ascended the throne, and then there was made a great silence, and an angel asked him to tell them how the coming generations were to hear the story of redemption and be saved through his blood. The Master replied, "I have chosen twelve apostles and they shall go and teach all nations. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." "But," said the angel, "these apostles will pass away, then what?" "They shall have gained other disciples, who shall go on, going and growing, and thus in every generation the Gospel shall be preached to every creature." "But, Master," said the angel, "Suppose they should prove unfaithful?" Then it is said that, with a sad expression, the Savior put his pierced hands over his wounded side and said, "I have made no other arrangements."

A stranger once approached a lighthouse keeper and said, "How do you save the lighthouse during a storm?" The keeper promptly replied, "I am not here to save lighthouses, but to save ships."

"Thou must save another's soul
If thou wouldst save thine own.
Heaven's door is closed
To him who comes alone."

Our own personal responsibility is so vividly told in Ezekiel 3:17-21, that no one is without excuse. God plainly says that if the wicked die in his iniquity, unwarned, his blood he will require at our hands; but if we go faithfully and warn him, though he die in his iniquity, we have delivered our own souls.

The great commission is just as specific, "Go ye," that means you, "Preach the Gospel to every creature," that means those with whom you are associated every day. It is time for us either to do what Jesus says, or cease calling him "Lord." If he is our leader, let us follow where he leads; if he is our commander, let us obey his commands; and the command to "Go," is just as definite and specific as the command to be baptized. "Be thou faithful unto death and thou shalt receive the crown of life."

In this very city where I am now seated (New York City) there are only 331,000 Protestants connected with the churches (eight and one-fifth per cent of the population) and by authentic statistics, there are 1,071,000 Protestants unattached, i. e., living here without church homes, prostituting their time and talents for two worlds; dead both to the life that now is and the life that is to come. I can conceive of no sadder spectacle. The soldiers of Jesus have broken ranks and grounded arms; the great city is being lost. From the very throne of the Omnipotent comes the command of the everlasting Master, "Son! Daughter! go work in my vineyard to-day!" Go to byways as well as highways—remember we are to preach the Gospel to every creature.

"I said, 'Let me walk in the green fields,'
He answered, 'No, walk in the town';
I said, 'There are no flowers there '
He answered, 'No flowers, but a crown.'

"I said, 'But they are all strangers,
And friends will miss me, they say';
He answered, 'Will it be better in heaven
If I should miss you, or they?' "

Accepting Christ changes our relation to our fellowman as thoroughly as it does our relation to God. He was "the light of the world, and now he says, "Ye are the light of the world." He poured out his Spirit upon "all flesh" and "gave to every man his work." We owe it to the world to testify against its sin; we owe it to Christ to testify to his power to save; we owe it to our friends and to all without God to tell them what to do to be saved. As Whateley has said, "If our religion is not true, we are bound to change it; if it is true we are bound to propagate it." This is an age of illustrated literature and cartoons. Men read through the cartoons what they will not take the time to read on the printed page. "Ye are living epistles, known and read of all men." Your lives must be the light of men.

No doubt there are men who would give their lives for their country, who will not do so for their countrymen. It can not be so in the Kingdom. "Inasmuch as ye have done it for one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it for me." It is the personal element in the Kingdom that counts. The army of the Lord can be strengthened both by new recruits and by the continued discipline of the old guards. We must "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth." It is not the thunder of the artillery, but the definite, specific work of the sharp-shooter, the direct aim at the individual object, that counts both in the armies of the nations and the army of the Lord.

Christ, the one shepherd, is not going to the one mountain to-day to save the one lamb, but is sending us as a thousand shepherds into a thousand mountains to save a thousand lambs.

This is the business of the church. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Christ came not to condemn the world but that the world through him might be saved." (John 3:16, 17). To this end was he born and for this purpose he came into the world. "The son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." (Luke 19:10). "He saved others but himself he could not save." So it must be with us. John Knox said, "How can I sleep and my land be not saved." An honorable man approached Dr. Lyman Beecher in his old age and said, "Doctor, you have lived a long time and have seen and known many things, what do you consider the main thing?" And the old veteran of Jesus replied, "It is not theology; it is not controversy; it is the saving of souls." The last sentence of the great evangelist, Knowles Shaw, was, "Oh, it is glorious to rally souls to the cross." Paul said, "I count not my life dear unto myself. For me to live is Chirst." "I regret that I have but one life to give to my country," said Nathan Hale, and when I think of the unconverted millions and of the five hundred calls received for evangelistic meetings this year, I regret that I have but one life to give to soul-saving.

The Bible is full of examples illustrating the power of personal evangelistic work. John the Baptist spoke to two of his disciples about Jesus and they became Christ's followers. One of these was John, and the other Andrew. Andrew at once became a personal worker, a true evangelist, and called Simon, who was later known as Peter, to whom Christ gave the keys of the Kingdom. This Simon Peter is credited with winning 3,000 souls with a great sermon on the day of Pentecost, yet he was himself won by a personal invitation.

Jesus spoke to Matthew personally at the gate of customs and to the fishermen at the seaside, and they followed him. It was also a personal conversation with the woman at the well which caused Samaria to learn of the Messiah. The personal work of Philip, the evangelist, with the Eunuch; and of Peter with Cornelius; of Ananias with Paul, and of Paul with Lydia and the jailer, should inspire every servant of the Most High to preach or speak this truth to every creature. Get right with God, and let the world know you are here on business for the King. Two words of Joel Stratton as he laid his hand on the shoulder of John B. Gough and said, "My friend," saved a soul from a drunkard's grave and a drunkard's hell, and gave America her greatest temperance lecturer, who saved multiplied thousands. The whole-souled faith of a little girl, Alice McCay, saved Mason Long, the converted gambler, who afterwards saved thousands of men from the life that is worse than death. One conversation of Dean Hook, walking through the park arm in arm with

(Concluded from Last Week.)

There are no theological hindrances to the union of Baptists and Disciples. Our theology and our ecclesiology are substantially identical. Holding to God, duty and Immortality as a first principle, we maintain in common:

1. The essential divinity, universal Saviorhood, and sovereign Lordship of Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God.

2. The inspiration of the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, and their practical sufficiency and efficiency as a rule of faith and practice.

3. The Holy Spirit in His divine personality in his offices and work in the regeneration of sinners and the sanctification and perfection of believers.

4. The Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the kingdom of God, with its beatitudes, its Sermon on the Mount and its ethics of eternal life.

5. The church as a divine institution, the supreme agency of the kingdom, ordained of Christ, established by the apostles, sanctified by the Holy Spirit composed of intelligent men and women, redeemed by the blood of Christ, saved by grace, standing on the one foundation laid in Zion, with its work, its worship, its activitives for the growth of believers and the salvation of sinners.

6. A divine Gospel, the power of God unto salvation, with the incarnation of God behind it, a divine human personality beneath it, the omnipotent energy of the Holy Spirit within it, the wide, wide, world the scope of its activities, and the scene of its achievements.

7. The two ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper; baptism according to the New Testament, the immersion in water of a penitent believer into the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, burial in the likeness of Christ's death and resurrection to walk in the newness of life. The Lord's supper, a memorial and sacrificial institution to be partaken of by God's people as a commemoration, a communion, and a proclamation of Christ's death till he come.

8. The end and purposes of all agencies, ordinances, institutions, ministries, activities, the building up of character, and the fashioning of manhood after the image and likeness of Jesus Christ, our Savior and Lord.

As I turned over the pages the other day of the Encyclopedic Dictionary, for another purpose, my eye was caught by the word "Baptist," and as I followed the lexical definition of the Baptist position, I came on the name of Roger Williams, "the first Baptist in America," it said, "who seceded from the Puritan communities in New England, and was baptized by immersion in Providence, in 1639, and united with the others to form the first Baptist church in America." "He was one of the earliest men," the lexicographer goes on to say, "to announce the principle of religious liberty and to give utterance to the Baptist doctrine that no man should be bound to assist in maintaining worship against his own consent." In the fundamental Baptist principles of salvation by faith, a regenerate church membership, the right of private judgment, freedom of conscience, opposition to ecclesiastical tyranny, and the union of church and state, the spiritual and ethical interpretation of the New Testament against the sacerdotal and semi political interpretation of the religion of Jesus Christ, the Disciples of Christ are entirely at one with them. On the historic Protestant position of religious liberty, and the items I have enumerated, I am willing to unite with Baptists and Free Baptists and to accept the first vacant pulpit among them when I am in need of another pastorate.

As far as the restriction of communion privileges is concerned there is no vital difference between the Baptists and Disciples. The exclusion of our people from participation in the ordinance of the Lord's supper, when spread in Baptist churches, grew out of a misunderstanding of our position on the place of baptism in the Christians' system. When Mr. Campbell and his coadjutors used immersion as one of the equivalents of regeneration, and declared that baptism was a condition of pardon, the Baptists, who were sensitive on these points from their long contention with Rome and Canterbury about the destructive heresy of baptismal regeneration, took fright and refused to recognize the validity of immersion when administered by the Disciples. This misconception of Mr. Campbell, for which the Disciples themselves were partly to blame, led to the Baptist doctrine of "alien immersion," and the denominational practice of "close communion," in so far as these things have any relation to the Disciples. The bitterness of the early controversies on these points widened the breach and established these practices in certain sections of the country, when less prejudice and more clearness of vision would have prevented the trouble from the beginning. Now, however, that the "mists have rolled in splendor from the beauty of the hills, and the sunshine warm and tender falls in kisses on the rills," all intelligent Baptists understand that the Disciples believe and have always believed, that regeneration, as Baptists and evangelical Christians generally use the term, precedes baptism. In the moral, spiritual and evangelical sense of the word, a man must be regenerated before he can be Scripturally baptized. When this fact is understood the communion difficulty disappears as between Baptists and Disciples, and I am not concerned here with any other phase of the question.

The only serious practical difficulty to unification is the Congregationalism that prevails in both bodies. In our conception of ecclesiastical authority, we have made no provision for union machinery adequate to the task of bringing such large bodies together. If the congregation is the unit of authority and the limits of autonomy and has no ecclesiastical jurisdiction beyond its own membership, how are denominations, as a whole, with their separate institutions and traditional systems and contrariety of vested interests, to unite in anything like a stable and permanent organization? Assuming, as I am glad to do, that we are in earnest in this matter, that we mean business in these deliberations, that we are not here for an interchange of courtesies, or to organize a mutual admiration society to swap compliments—assuming, I repeat, that we are actuated by a no less serious motive than a contribution to the fulfillment of our Lord's intercessory prayer for the unity of his people, how are we to get together? Neither Baptist associations nor Disciple conventions have any legislative or mandatory functions; they are purely evangelistic and educational. Our congress can not even pass resolutions by way of indorsement of anything that is said by their speakers. We have no bishops, conferences, synods, convocations, confessions, nor constitutions that can send out a decree ordering us to shake hands and be good. We can not be tried for heresy, or bad behavior, except within the jurisdiction of our local congregations. Evidently we have missed a great deal of sport. If Baptists and Disciples were unanimous in their desire for union, and all obstacles of doctrine and practice had been swept out of the way, how would they go about it?

Union between Baptists and Disciples must come about, not by legislation, but by evolution, and that is God's way of doing things, after all. There must be a prolonged process of growth and assimilation before the consummation of such a union can be made complete. Ecclesiastical union is more or less mechanical, this must be natural. The authority of truth and the moral influence of leadership in both churches must be our main dependence in facilitating and consummating this growth into the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Our conventions, national and state, have a certain weight of moral influence and recommendatory power which would count for much with the churches. If our recognized and most influential leaders and representatives came together and agreed on the formation of a basis mutually satisfactory and this plan of union could come to our churches, by way of endorsement and recommendation from our national and state assemblies, I believe that the union of local congregations could commence at once in prepared communities. The example of leading churches would become contagious and the work would spread. In fact the only thing necessary to effectuate and consummate union between Baptists and Disciples is the practical recognition of the ecclesiastical standing and Scriptural rights of each other's churches. Let Baptists acknowledge Disciple churches as churches of Christ of the same faith and order as themselves; let Disciples acknowledge Baptist churches as churches of Christ, the same as their own, and let both act accordingly, giving letters of commendations to each other's congregations, exchanging members and preachers and co-operating, when opportunity offers in every good word and work as fellow and co-equal churches of the Lord Christ. This in reality is the only union required between Baptists and Disciples. Time would be required for growth and education and mutual acquaintanceship; the churches would not all rush into each others' arms. High churchism and prejudice are not yet negligible quantities in either of these churches. Local popes and inerrant newspapers would have to be reckoned with. Evolution and the schoolmaster and the grace of God would still have their appointed tasks. Anachronisms would be in evidence for 50 years to come. There are people in certain sections of this country who do not know that the war is over, and some folks are just as obtuse to the ending of theological wars. Long after the main bodies have united and have almost forgotten the date of that happy event, groups of "Wee Frees," "Antis," and "Landmarkers," from the extreme left wing of the old armies will engage in fierce and bitter conflicts over "the setting up of the kingdom," the "order of faith and repentance," "alien immersion," "close communion," and perhaps hereditary total depravity, which, if they can not prove or disprove, they can illustrate. The immaculates who never sin, the infallibles who never err, the immutables who never change, the judaizing zealots who are so zealous for sound doctrine that they are all sound, like the poor are always with us. The crystalline conservatism, not to say obscurantism, that characterizes a considerable section of both bodies with their traditional and legalistic interpretation of Christianity, will interpose as a hindrance to complete union for some years to come. Partisan religion, even at this late stage of the world's evolution, is almost as hard to kill as priestcraft, and that never dies. This phenom-

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

We were blessed with glorious weather at Athens. Our visit there was ideal. We were specially interested in the language, which was comparatively easy, because of our little knowledge of ancient Greek. It is now the policy to review the old forms of speech of their fathers and one can readily make himself understood in the shops and with the children in the very words he learned when studying Homer and Demosthenes. It revives all the memories of Bethany and Professor Loos, and the struggles with Xenophon and Herodotus, the Iliad, and the Antigone. March 1 we took our last look at the Acropolis and turned our backs upon the land of Themistocles and Sophocles, Aristophanes and Thucydides, Plato and Aristotle, Zenó and Zeuxis—names which we gave to our boatmen and drivers, and soon were again on the blue waters of the Ægean and among the famous isles of Greece. Northeast we sailed past Chios and Mitylene and ancient Troy, and in the early morning entered the Dardanelles where the men with the red fez came aboard and passed upon our worthiness to enter their domain. Then up the Hellespont, named for the unhappy Helle who met her death in this strait, past the spot no doubt where Leander swam to Hero's tower and where Byron swam across through the waters where the Argo carried Jason and his companies in search of the golden fleece; through the Marmora to the city of the Sultans. Here is "the sick man of Europe." Here is a great city of a million and a quarter of people, Turks, Greeks, Americans and Jews. Flocks of little birds flew along the straits called "Lost Souls." One feels as he looks upon this multitude that many are here without God and without hope in the world. Here is a city divided into three parts: Galata and Pera, north of the Golden Horn, a narrow inlet on the European side, which are mainly European; Stambone, the old city which is Turkish and Scutari, on the Asiatic side, which is also Turkish. The first city founded at the mouth of the Bosphorus was known for a millennium as Chalcedon, then came Byzantium and then Constantine with his Constantinople and Sancta Sophia. Here John Chrysostom preached in the fourth century, and Justinian got up his pandects and institutes, "the most precious monument of the legal genius of the Romans;" here operated Belisarius, his general, declared by some to be "all things considered the greatest commander in history;" here the crusades ebbed and flowed; and here Mohammed II, in 1453, brought the city under Moslem rule, St. Sophia, the most venerable and beautiful sanctuary of Christendom, was given over to the false prophet, the altar taken down, minarets run up for the Muezzin, and the rule of the Turk, so utterly alien to civilization and Christianity, began. Twenty-eight sultans have ruled the imperial city to Abdul Hamed II. Suleiman, the magnificent, 1520-66, brought Turkish rule to its pinnacle of power, and then begins the decline which results in "the sick man of Europe," a government which should be wiped from the face of the earth. Since the accession of the present sultan, 1876, have come the defeat of Turkey in the Russian war, 1877-8; the treaty of Berlin which meant free Roumania, Servia and Bulgaria, enlarged Montenegro, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Thessaly and Cyprus; followed by Tunis, 1881, and Egypt, 1882, and the Greek war, 1897, resulting in the liberty of Crete; the Armenian massacres 1894-6, of more than 50,000, crowning the bloody century. It is a dark page, but the signs of release from this curse are not wanting. The city is beautiful enough as we approach it. "At a meeting of two seas and two continents like a diamond between sapphires and emeralds," they say in their Oriental figures of speech. For beauty, security, commerce, and political importance perhaps there is no city in the world so situated; and the vision of white palaces, domes, minarets and towers, with the beautiful waters and shipping, is one of the finest; but as one sets foot in its streets, oh, the dirt, dogs and degredation! The city lies on the 41st parallel, the latitude of New York, and we found our overcoats on March 3 most comfortable. We came to anchor in the Bosphorus a little way above the Golden Horn, and I landed and strolled up a characteristic street to the Galata tower and took a bird's eye view of the great city. A fine view up and down the Bosphorus of the whole city and its surroundings, and far out over the sea of Marmora, rewarded my climb. Not far from our ship, extending along the shore of the Bosphorus we noticed the largest and most splendid of the sultan's palaces. In its throne room the dignitaries of the empire prostrate themselves before the sultan, and here Abdul Aziz met his death in '76, and Murad V was pronounced insane and the present sultan, Murad's brother, became emperor.

Like all visitors to this famous city we took our way first to Sancta Sophia, the great church of Constantine and Justinian, where John, "the golden mouthed" preacher proclaimed the Gospel. Here Constantine built his cathedral in 326 and consecrated it to the Divine Wisdom of Proverbs VIII. It is not named for a woman, but is "the Church of the Heavenly Wisdom," or "the Church of Christ." On the same spot originally stood a heathen temple. The Church of Constantine and Chrysostom was destroyed and the present glorious temple was reared by Justinian. An angel is said to have revealed the plan to him in a dream, and so one would think from its surpassing beauty. Ten thousand men worked upon it for six years, the emperor himself in a workman's clothes sharing in their labor, and in 537 Justinian entered it on Christmas Eve, saying: "Solomon, I have conquered thee."

It is a marvel. Externally it is not impressive, but when one gets his feet once unshod or encased in Moslem slippers and enters the door he is filled with admiration and wonder. Rising above him arch over arch and dome over dome with a dignity and spaciousness and grandeur beyond anything ever since erected by man is the lofty sanctuary. Its great dome 180 feet above the floor seems to float in the heavens. Eight serpentine columns came from the temple of Diana at Ephesus, and eight more of porphyry were from the temple of the Sun at Baalbec. They say $64,000,000 were expended in its construction. One may still see in places under Turkish whitewash the remains of Christian mosaics, and inscriptions. Over the entrance are still discerned the words of the Lord Jesus: "I am the door of the Sheepfold;" and it is said, to a soldier destroying the Christian mosaics, Moham-

BREAD DYSPEPSIA

Bread dyspepsia is common. It affects the bowels because white bread is nearly all starch, and starch is digested in the intestines, not in the stomach proper.

Up under the shell of the wheat berry Nature has provided a curious deposit which is turned into diastase when it is subjected to the saliva and to the panceratic juices in the human intestines.

This diastase is absolutely necessary to digest starch and turn it into grape-sugar, which is the next form; but that part of the wheat berry makes dark flour, and the modern miller cannot readily sell dark flour, so nature's valuable digester is thrown out and the human system must handle the starch as best it can, without the help that Nature intended.

Small wonder that appendicitis, peritonitis, constipation, and all sorts of trouble exist when we go so contrary to Nature's law. The food experts that perfected Grape-Nuts Food, knowing these facts, made use in their experiments of the entire wheat and barley, including all the parts, and subjected them to moisture and long continued warmth, which allows time and the proper conditions for developing the diastase, outside of the human body.

In this way the starchy part is transformed into grape-sugar in a perfectly natural manner, without the use of chemicals or any outside ingredients. The little sparkling crystals of grape-sugar can be seen on the pieces of Grape-Nuts. This food therefore is naturally pre-digested and its use in place of bread will quickly correct the troubles that have been brought about by the too free use of starch in the food, and that is very common in the human race to-day.

The effect of eating Grape-Nuts ten days or two weeks and the discontinuance of ordinary white bread, is very marked. The user will gain rapidly in strength and physical and mental health.

"There's a reason."

med, the conqueror, declared as he smote the man with his sword: "Let these things be; who knows but in another age they can serve another religion than that of Islam." Who knows?

Near St. Sophia we visited the tombs of the sultans. Ordinarily the tourist is not allowed to see them, but a coin was enough to induce the young Mohammedan theological student to give us a glance within. One of the great subterranean cisterns which supplied the city during its sieges is also in the precincts of the church. One of these cisterns is 336 feet by 182, and with a roof resting upon 336 columns each thirty-nine feet high—a great subterranean cathedral. We tried to get access. It is a mistake that all officials here may be bribed. We offered money; he declined; a million, he said, would not move him. We offered a billion; but he remained firm. A Turkish guard was near by.

The Hippodrome is a matter of great interest to the visitor. This was the ancient race course whose magnificent art bronzes were melted by the Crusaders to make coin. Nothing remains but the two columns, one the obelisk, 61 feet high, of Thothmes III, the greatest of Egypt's warrior kings, and the other, brought from Heliopolis in 388, and here also is the serpent column made of bronze from the Persian booty gained by the Greeks at Plataea, a most interesting object. Here the sultans held their fetes and celebrated their triumphs and here occurred the riots that threatened the overthrow of Justinian in 532 when Belisarius closed the gates, and slew 30,000 of the people, in penance for which Justinian built St. Sophia.

Across from this spot as we were visiting the Mosque of Ahmed I, the famous "China Mosque," which has its six minarets, we heard the call to prayer. A man stood far up on the little platform of each of these graceful towers and called, "God is great!" Four times they repeated it, answering antitiphonally, and moving around the minaret. "I bear witness there is no God but God!" This repeated twice. Then, "Come to prayers, come to prayers!" "Come to salvation, come to salvation!" "God is great, there is no other God but Allah." In the morning they added to the call, "Prayers are better than sleep." It is a mistake that as soon as the Muezzin is sounded every Turk drops his work, stops in the street and kneels or hurries to the mosque and worships. I noticed no effect whatever on any one, and I saw not over a dozen people praying in the mosques. It was interesting to observe, however, how they watched our feet to see that we had the slippers on and how they stopped at once the kodak fiends.

How interesting the street scenes of this great Ottoman empire! What motley throngs of every race and color on the Galata bridge! What a dog kennel it is, with its 30,000 mangy, measly, filthy, wolfish curs of low degree, so protected that while the killing of a man means a penalty of seven years' imprisonment, the slaying of one of these filthy scavengers is punished with three years in jail! And one counts often a dozen of these beasts before a single door and fifty in the space of a block. What a world one sees in the Grand Bazaar, a town in itself of labyrinthian lanes and alleys, overarched by small cupolas, with great throngs of strangely costumed people, veiled women, bewildering variety of Oriental wares, perfumes, weapons, rugs and shawls, embroideries, furniture, porcelain and brass ware, rare silks and fans, costly jewels, gold and silver work, strange fruits and foods, and books and pictures. I placed my hand on a copy of the Koran and asked its price. They thrust my hand away and refused to sell, or even to suffer an infidel to touch their sacred volume.

The Elderburg Association

CHAPTER IV.

The Case of Brother Schoolmaster.

The secretary has failed to give the purport of the spirited, rather heated colloquy which, he says, now took place between the reviewer and the witness. It appears from the minutes that the presiding officer, Bro. J-P, called them to order in his best judicial manner, saying: "Gentlemen, gentlemen, all that is incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and tends to prove no issue in this cause. You must not take up the time of this court—I mean this association, in exchanging personalities of any kind. According to the program we arranged yesterday, I now invite Brother Schoolmaster to tell this co—this association what, if anything, it was that quenched him.'"

Brother Schoolmaster is a light-haired man, with freckled face, pale blue eyes, thin, yellow (sandy) beard and mustache. He was and is superintendent of the public schools of Elderburg. It is well known that his coming into that school district marks the beginning of a new and better era in the history of those schools. The day of his advent there is a chronological point from which they date events in educational affairs in that town. As we now say of happenings in our own country, that was so many years before the civil war, or, that was so long after the war, so, in Elderburg, they say of events, educational or social, that was so long before (or after) Brother Schoolmaster arrived.' The writer once heard one lady in that town say to another: "Oh, you surely have not forgotten Miss Quivers. Don't you remember? She taught the primary grade in the second ward, and had hysterics five evenings in succession the second week after Professor Schoolmaster came to Elderburg."

The witness seated himself in the chair, placed his shorthand notes in his hat, and deposited the hat on the grass at his feet.

"Brethren," he said, "before I begin, may I ask you to draw a little closer together and a little nearer to me? The shade is just as——. Thank you. Excuse me, Brother Blacksmith, but are you pretty well along with that—er—chew? Thank you ever so much."

There was a smile on the kind old face of Brother Blacksmith as he made the required sacrifice. The witness began as follows:

"I shall not attempt to give an extended history of my life. Before I entered the ministry I made careful preparation for it, just as I prepared myself for the duties of my present calling. I quit the pulpit after a series of experiences which I think will appear as strange to you as they appeared to me. When I took up the work I had very clear and vivid perceptions of its dignity and importance. I had previously looked into the church life and activities of our time, with a careful and anxious eye. I saw there so many crooked things that needed to be made straight; so many loose things that needed to be knit together; so many crude things that needed polishing; so much of disorder that needed to be set

SHE QUIT

But It Was a Hard Pull.

It is hard to believe that coffee will put a person in such a condition as it did a woman of Apple Creek, O. She tells her own story:

"I did not believe coffee caused my trouble, and frequently said I liked it so well I would not quit drinking it, even if it took my life, but I was a miserable sufferer from heart trouble and nervous prostration for four years.

"I was scarcely able to be around at all. Had no energy and did not care for anything. Was emaciated and had a constant pain around my heart until I thought I could not endure it. For months I never went to bed expecting to get up in the morning. I felt as though I was liable to die any time during the night.

"Frequently I had nervous chills and the least excitement would drive sleep away, and any little noise would upset me terribly. I was gradually getting worse until finally one day it came over me and I asked myself what is the use of being sick all the time and buying medicine so that I could indulge myself in coffee?

"So I thought I would see if I could quit drinking coffee, and got some Postum Food Coffee to help me quit. I made it strictly according to directions and I want to tell you that change was the greatest step in my life. It was easy to quit coffee because I had the Postum which I like better than I liked the old coffee. One by one the old troubles left, until now I am in splendid health, nerves steady, heart all right and the pain all gone. Never have any more nervous chills, don't take any medicine, can do all my housework and have done a great deal beside.

"My sister-in-law, who visited me this summer, had been an invalid for some time, much as I was. I got her to quit coffee and drink Postum. She gained five pounds in three weeks, and I never saw such a change in anyone's health."

"There's a reason."

in order: and perceiving all that, I saw, or thought I saw, a great and useful career opening up before me. I entered upon that career and—and here I am.

"I shall not try to enumerate all the strangely painful things which happened to me. Those which happened on my last work may very well serve as samples of the misfortunes, misunderstandings and rebuffs which have met me at every step I have taken.

"The arrangement of my work in the last year of my career was: Somnollency Gap, one-half time; Quietude, one-fourth time; Peaceful Ridge, one-fourth time.

"The manner in which the Master's business was transacted in those churches will serve as fair samples of the general laxity and inefficiency to be seen in so many of our country congregations. On my trial visits I had discovered in each congregation at least a dozen things that needed to be set right; and I believed I saw my way clear to a pleasant and profitable season of labor with each: profitable for them, pleasant for me.

"I entered upon my duties with vigor and enthusiasm. At Somnolency Gap, on the morning of the first Lord's day, I was enabled to set the Sunday-school superintendent and the teachers right on several important points, telling them kindly that Noah's Ark would not appear more obsolete in a fleet of modern battleships than their methods must seem among modern, up-to-date Sunday-schools. I explained to the secretary when, where and how the roll should be called, and when, where and how the minutes should be read. I gave the primary teacher some rudimentary instructions in the handling of children. When the seven members of the Bible class each contributed one penny to the collection, I made a note of it and joked them about it pleasantly—when I came to review the school—remarking in a jovial way that Alexander, the coppersmith, was doing much harm to the Sunday-schools: the school laughed at this—all except the Bible class."

"Dar's whar you miss it, honey, I 'spec'," muttered the janitor.

"At the morning church service I took hold with a firm hand. After changing the position of the organ, I grouped the choir with reference to the parts of the singers. We had hardly sung more than the first verse of the opening hymn before I was compelled to stop the choir and call their attention to the fact that they were 'dragging' the tune. As they were singing the second stanza I discovered that Elder Lonehand, over in the left amen-corner, was half a line behind the choir, while Sister Eestring, in the right amen-corner, was half an octave too high. I held my peace until we came to the end of that verse, and then said, sweetly, but firmly:

"Beloved, it is not possible for you to make melody in your hearts while you make discords with your voices. As we sing this third verse I want Brother Lonehand to take his time from me—I'll beat the time; and I hope Sister Eestring will take her tone from the organ. (While the organist plays the interlude, just let your voice blend with the tone of the instrument, Sister. Aw-w-w-w. Like that, see?)"

Neither Brother Lonehand nor Sister Eestring sang in the third verse, so that the only correction I had to make that time was to ask the organist to push in a couple of stops.

"It is melody we want in church music," I said, "not noise. Brass band music will do in the open air, because when you are out of doors you can walk away if you do not like the racket. In church we do not want to scare people away; we want 'em to stay and worship.

"As the Presbyterians had no services that day several members of their choir were present, and I saw them look at one another with smiles of approval.'"

"Suttenly, suttenly," said the janitor; "en ef my mine ain't slip no cog dis day, right dar's de place whar you drap yo' watermillyun—es Brer. Remus say."

"It would seem so, it would seem so, Mr. Janitor," said the witness shortly, "but my mind must have slipped several cogs; for I failed to see then, and I fail to see now any reason why I necessarily 'drapped' my watermillyun. Let that be as it may, I did observe that something was wrong, even before I began my sermon. As I arose to announce my text the organist, Miss Duck, daughter of Elder Duck, left the house, with her handkerchief pressed to her face: her mother got up and followed her. As I shook hands with the people as they passed out, after the service I was conscious of a decided lowering of the temperature among the members. Brother Lonehand barely grunted when I greeted him, and Sister Eestring failed to see my outstretched hand. Actually the only word of commendation I got that day came from the organist of the Presbyterian choir; she said, 'I enjoyed your preliminary talks so much!'..

"At Quietude things were as painfullly out of joint as at the Gap. On the day of my beginning there, disheartened by my previous experiences, I had about decided to say nothing, no matter what went wrong. Yet when the choir sang:

"'Shall I be carried to the skies on flow'ry beds

the words stirred my conscience and I determined that no amount of discouragement could be pleaded as an excuse for cowardice. Nevertheless, perceiving that I ought to reform these evils gradually and not attempt to reform them all in one day, I decided I would begin with the most glaring fault, reserving the others to a more convenient season. Also I was resolved to be very guarded in my remarks, speaking in accents of kindness, and not in a caviling of fault-finding spirit. The glaring error which seemed to demand instant attention was the mode of conducting the communion service. Before dismissing the congregation I said, in a mild temperate manner:

"Brethren, it grieves me to observe that you are about ten years behind the times in your manner of serving the Lord's supper. In congregations that are up-to-date they now hold this service before the sermon. Also they send the bread and wine around together—saves time, you see. Furthermore it is not now considered necessary for the elder who conducts the service to preach a preliminary sermon every time. People are apt to get tired—apt to think one sermon is enough in one morning. Now, Brother Hornspecks' talk was all right: all true, and historically accurate; but then he, or one of the other elders, made the same speech, substantially, on last Lord's day and on all previous days when you have observed this ordinance. That sort of thing will get monotonous, you know.

"'Brother Schoolmaster,' said Brother Hornspecs, springing to his feet excitedly, 'hits a pity that you an' some more up-to-date fellers want in Jerusalem.'

"No use to tell what he said. You all know it. That unhappy speech of mine started a controversy in that place, about the right way to conduct a communion service, which is not settled yet. Already there were two parties, one a little too conservative and the other a little too radical. My words were to these factions as a red rag to a bull.

"I have to admit, brethren, that as I went on my way to Peaceful Ridge I was near making another compromise with my conscience. Almost I had resolved I would attempt to tighten no screws I might find loose there,however many there might be. Thank heaven, the guiding principles of my life will not long lie dormant, even at my own bidding. When I saw the gross and manifest faults of Peaceful Ridge congregation, I discovered at the same time that my powers of reticence were not so great as I had imagined. I did, indeed, endure in silence the faulty time and harmony in the song service, though they were even worse there than at Somnolency Gap. It was the dogs which proved too much for me at Peaceful Ridge."

"Listen at dat man!" exclaimed the janitor.

"Once a good man's heart was stirred within him when he saw a certain beautiful old city wholly given to idolatry. My heart was stirred within me when I saw the community of Peaceful Ridge wholly given to dogs. That is a farming community where every farmer owns at least one dog; and at least one dog attends church with each family. Dogs of all sizes and of all social and moral ranks, 'mongrel, puppy, whelp and hound, and cur of low degree.' Dogs in the yard, by the hitch-racks, in front of the house, behind the house, under the house. All through the Sunday-school hour a shrill-voiced Scotch terrior, belonging to Deacon Lazarus Hunt, occupied himself in inciting the other dogs to fight: with considerable success. The fights generally occurred at some crisis in the service: as when something like eight canines fought, under the house, bumping against the floors, abusing one another in divers unknown tongues, while I tried to review the lesson. In the opening service, a large Newfoundland dog thumped the floor with his tail in admirable time to the tune Hendon. I asked the deacons to eject him, but for some reason they ignored the request. I am sure I offer a very fine, practical commentary on the social status of dogs in that community when I give you the result of my own attempt to eject this particular animal. I got my umbrella and made a threatening demonstration in his rection. He never dreamed, I think, the threat was meant for him. An assault on him in church was a thing so utterly foreign to his experience that he immediately assumed that I was attacking his mistress, the organist. He got up on his feet, regarding me with the malignant look of a demon of the pit; and his hair bristled along his spine until he seemed as tall as the organ. When I desisted—as I immediately did—he went around the instrument and laid his head in his mistress' lap, as if he said, like Mary's little lamb:

"Be not afraid, I'll keep you from all harm."

"Should a thing like that go unreproved in a Christian land? I think not. In this case it certainly did not. I rebuked it immediately after the service."

"En right dar," said the janitor, "is de place whar you slip up at, some mo'."

"Brethren," I said, "how much money did this church give for missions last year —home, state, foreign?"

"Thirty-seven dollars and fifteen cents," said the clerk.

"How many dogs—of all degrees and sizes—are supported by this membership?

"No reply.

"Well, suppose we say one hundred. Judging by what I have seen since I came here, I suppose there are more than that—but call it a hundred. Now, how much does it cost to feed one dog, of average size, for one year?

"'Hain't never figured it out," grunted Lazarus Hunter.

"Not less than one dollar, surely. Now, brethren, I make you a proposition: If I can persuade the church extension board to buy up, say, one hundred of your dogs, at a dollar apiece, disposing of the creatures in some humane way, will each one of you who can dispose of one dog in that way, agree to pay into the treasury of the board one dollar per year for the next ten years?

The money you receive from them will represent the cost, to you, of getting rid of the dogs; the money they reçeive from you will represent, to you, cost of their keep. Thus, at the end of ten years, you will be no poorer, the dogs will be no worse off, and the board will be nine hundred dollars to the good. What do you say, brethren? Will some of you embody this in a motion and submit it?

"Not a word; though I waited three minutes in the midst of an oppressive silence—silence broken at last by a snicker from an ungodly youth on a back seat.

"Well then," I said at last "keep your dogs at home, brethren. I know you have been unthoughted, but it is time to get rid of backwoods ideas and ideals."

"Imagine my surprise and distress when, immediately after the congregation was dismissed, the elders of that church came to me in a body, headed by Elder Koontree, who said:

"'We don't want you never to git up in our pulpit agin. You've insulted us, hurt our feeling's, held us up to the ridicule of worldlians, and made us the laughing-stock of the community. Here's what's due ye for this trip. They won't be no preachin' to-night—nor no other time, as fur's you're concerned.'

"Brethren, it may be in that I laid down my arms too soon; but I laid them down. I determined to seek another calling. I found one, and I am not ashamed of the record I have made in it. Until such time as the churches signify their need of instruction in righteousness, and until they are prepared to receive it meekly, I shall continue to devote my time and attention to the boys and girls in the public schools."

Every Christian An Evangelist.

a young man, saved Samuel Wilberforce, and liberated the slaves of the British empire. "The longer I live," said Henry Ward Beecher, "the more confidence I have in those sermons where one man is the minister and one man is the congregation, where there is no question as to who is meant, when the preacher says, 'Thou art the man.'" The Gospel, like sunshine, is scarcely noticed when it falls broadly, but concentrated on one spot, soon burns. Every heart is human, and God's love is suited to the need of every human heart. One definite prayer of a mother for her boy, the mother of Thomas McCrea, the biographer of John Knox, gave the world a great religious writer. H. Clay Trumbull says that seeking to save an outside soul for Christ is not to be counted as superior work to seeking to draw the believer closer to Christ, or upbuilding in Christ one who is already his follower. Christ is to be considered as well as those who are, or are to be, his followers.

To bring each individual life into subjection to the will of God until every power and every principle of every member of the church shall be as obedient to him as the members of our individual bodies are to us, or even as the solar system obeys his will; until thy kingdom come, thy will be done in us as it is in heaven—this is the business of the church, this was the life of the teacher and the life of his teaching.

Another has said that the church needs not more men, but more man. Dr. Dixon says, "The church evangelical is the church on ice, and the church evangelistic is the church on fire." Our Year Book reports 1,288,601 members. If each member should win one soul for Christ this year, and then all those should do the same next year, in three years, or at our Centennial convention in 1909, we should have 10,308,808 communicants, less the number "called home" or "removed." If each member should win two for Christ each year for three years, we should have 34,792,227, less removals. If the Church of Christ evangelical should become the Church of Christ evangelistic, it would set the religious world on fire.

God's messengers must touch human needs, and help men in their daily struggles; must enter into the social circles and channels of trade and purify them as Christ did the temple; must save men and women by saving manhood and womanhood. The Dead Sea is dead because it has no outlet. Let the Christian visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction; give a cup of cold water; be a good Samaritan; go on life's highway like our Master, doing good until men shall say, "I was naked, and you clothed me; hungry, and you fed me; sick and in prison and you visited me;" and then men will not condemn the minister for his coldness, the church for its deadness and the world for its hardness of heart. Many churches are the coldest, dampest, darkest, deadest things for six days out of seven, that can be found on any street. The church should not be a cold-storage plant, but a power-house; a nest of ants, a veritable beehive; a pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night; and that, too, seven days and seven nights every week, if every generation is to be saved through its wilderness wanderings.

In all our work, the organizational must not be allowed to take the place of the individual and the spiritual. The Christian, like the telephone, must be a receiver and a transmitter. With his ear open to the infinite and his life insulated from the world, he must transmit the glorious Gospel of the Son of God to the unsaved millions. We are indeed the heirs of all ages but we are also the trustees of the future.

Omnipotence calls us; humanity needs us; the world is open to us; the coming ages depend upon us, our Savior has made no other arrangements.

Can Baptists and Disciples Unite?

ena, however, which accompanies all religious development, to a greater or lesser extent, need not discourage us. That on which the Redeemer has set his heart is sure of final achievement. It is a foregone conclusion in the divine administration that Baptists and Disciples must unite, for the place they are to hold in the future of the world's redemption is one of the first rank of importance. I have an abiding confidence in the intelligence, sanity and spiritual judgment of the rank and file of the best classes of Baptists and Disciples, and where they lead the rest must follow. Unity in all of the vital things of the kingdom already exists, and both the logical and moral sequence of unity is union. From a theological, ecclesiastical and ethical point of view there is little choice between us, and what a great day it will be when the fact is recognized and made actual and visible before the eyes of men. The two bodies united would constitute the greatest Protestant church in the world, and with its testimony for liberty, righteousness, and the regenerate life, what a stupendous stride would be taken forward to the time of the golden age, when they shall not teach every man his brother, and every man his neighbor, saying, "Know the Lord," for all shall know him from the least to the greatest!

"One God, one law, one element,
One far-off divine event
To which the whole creation moves."

The Plea for the Times.

By Alva W. Taylor.

(An Outline Home Missionary Sermon.)

This restoration movement has had the most rapid growth of any since the days of the apostles. The reason is that it is apostolic.

It is peculiarly an American movement with an appropriate American spirit, i. e., the unfettered spirit.

It makes its appeal TO FIRST THINGS.

Science has called us to consider first things. In all things we seek causes and laws. We go back of "ecclesiasticisms," "creeds," "theological systems," etc., to the Scriptures and to the Christ of the Scriptures.

This brings us TO SIMPLICITY.

Simplicity is the characteristic social spirit of America. "Priest," "ritual" and "form" are left out and faith and life at work are put foremost.

With this comes the call TO DEMOCRACY

The congregation is the source of authority. There is no hierarchy. Expedients are not consecrated and rendered unchangeable. Every honest instrumentality is the Lord's.

The trend of the times is TO UNITY.

This is true in government, industry and among the nations. The Lord's prayer for unity fits the spirit of the age. All Protestantism practically accepts our Scriptural basis, differing in non-essentials only, so no compromise is necessary.

To further this movement we must be UNION IN SPIRIT AND METHOD.

No "holier than thou" attitude. No dogmatic insistence that we are absolutely right therefore all others are wrong. Less about the things of difference and more about the things of likeness. Of all peoples we must not insist on non-essentials. It is easy for us to become the most sectarian of the sects, adding hypocrisy to divisiveness in that we claim not to be a sect. Unite in all good work and carry ever the olive branch of peace.

Pleading for the word of Scripture we must be SCRIPTURAL IN LIFE.

The greatest plea we can make for Christ is Christlikeness. The greatest plea for our Scriptural plea is a life according to the Scriptures. It avails much more than a Scriptural baptism; let us have both. Mental correctness avails little if not accompanied with purity of heart.

Finally we must excel in that chief of graces, THE GRACE OF GENEROSITY.

It is the gauge of our stewardship, fundamental to an attempt to appropriate the grace of God and absolutely necessary to the success of the Kingdom of God.

The great west, with its coming empire of industry, will be as fertile a field for our plea as the Mississippi valley has been. Josiah Strong found twenty-five places in Nebraska and fifty in South Dakota without churches. The same would hold good in all the growing west. He found also one hundred such places in Maine, and the Canadian northwest offers a great field.

Our Home Society does more than any other for the amount expended because our plea fits the spirit of the land and especially the free and rugged spirit of the west. Every dollar expended calls three to its help on the field and multiplies endlessly in the course of time. If we have more effective power we are the more responsible to create and use our power. Churches strategically planted in a growing country become centers of radiation for future churches. The plea is invincible, will the pleaders send it?

Federation.

By Judge J. R. Thornton.

I have been an interested reader of the discussion in our papers of the question of church federation.

Speaking for myself only, I think that we as a people should look with favor on the movement as being to some extent in line with our great and distinguishing plea for Christian union, with a possibility, if not a probability, that it will have a tendency to promote it. And I fear that if we hold aloof from it, our inaction may injure our influence in the dissemination of the plea.

I have not considered it otherwise than in the light of an experiment which I think we are justified in trying. Whether we could continue in the movement, would depend entirely on how it worked in practice. I may add that my opinion in this matter was not based on anything I had read for or against federation, for up to the time it was formed I had seen nothing on the subject except what was contained in "The Christian Standard," which was uncompromisingly opposed to the movement from the beginning. During the last week of December I received from a friend a copy of the plea and objects of church federation as set forth by the Inter-Church Conference at New York. It was the reading and study of this document that made me a convert to the idea of being willing to test the movement to see what there might be in it. After reading this document I was unable to agree with the reasoning of "The Christian Standard," or of its correspondents in opposition to the plan. I have no fault to find with "The Chrstian Standard" for opposing anything it fears may be injurious to our plea. But I find fault with it for having never published the plan and objects of church federation as set forth by its friends at the Inter-Church Conference, thereby depriving its readers of the chance to see in its columns the position of the friends of federation as defined by them. I have been a continuous subscriber to "The Christian Standard" for almost 30 years, and this is the first time I have known it to depart from its old time policy of permitting its readers to see the other side of a position it was attacking. And I am somewhat curious to know how many of the brethren who are so strongly opposing federation through the columns of that paper have ever read that document. Very few of them have done so if we may be permitted to judge by the general absence of reference to its features in their articles. I find no fault with these correspondents for publicly expressing their opposition to federation, but I find fault with the tone in which many of these articles are written.

It is a question on which there can be an honest difference of opinion and full credit should be given to the honesty and proper motives of those who favor as well as of those who oppose federation.

The division of our brethren on this subject is becoming a grave question and may become productive of very injurious results to the brotherhood. It is a question which should be discussed with soberness, and not with intemperance, levity or sarcasm. In this connection I wish to say that I have been particularly struck by the tone of an article in "The Christian Standard" of March 31, entitled, "New Disease, Federo-Mania," written by the minister of one of our Louisiana churches. This is an attempt to be exceedingly sarcastic at the expense of those who favor federation, and for that reason is, in my opinion, exceedingly out of place. In an experience with men extending over twice the time of the experience of this brother, I have found that sarcasm is a very dangerous weapon to handle. It never convinces the man against whom it is used of his error, and it never makes friends but often makes enemies. There are sarcastic flings in this article against men (though of course their names are not mentioned) who are and have been great and shining lights in our brotherhood and who were fighting and winning the battles of Christian union when this brother was in his cradle. And in my opinion, such a method of handling this question is very unfortunate at this time particularly. However, as I am not a young preacher, but only an elderly layman, my views on the propriety of such an article may not be entitled to much weight.

In my opinion we should avoid reflections on those who differ with us on this question and treat this discusson as we should treat all other discussions with each other in the spirit of brotherly love and with the full recognition of the fact that each side is devoted to the great cause of Christian union and the difference is only as to measures best calculated to bring about that result.

America to the Front.

By Princess Long.

It is a real pleasure to me at this time of the May offering to grant the request of some of the brethren to write, as I have so often given, the explanation of how and why the "Jubilee Medley" was compiled; and I will be truly happy if by so doing I may succeed in bringing to other hearts the vision that is mine whenever I sing it; and I really wish that any one who sings the song would, whenever practicable, make this same explanation, for it adds a new and beautiful meaning to these dear old songs of our loved land.

At the time of the jubilee convention in Cincinnati, in 1899, Bro. B. L. Smith, then secretary of the Home Missionary Board, said to me on Friday, the second day of the convention: "For our day, which will be next Tuesday, we would like you to give us something with a little patriotism in it, for our motto is 'America to the front in missions.' Can't you take some of the old national songs and make a medley of them?" I was sure he did not realize what he was asking, but I agreed to try it. Asking Bro. J. H. Fillmore to assist me with the accompaniment, we began what proved to be a most delightful task, and one I can recommend to any one who loves to discover God in all that is good. I mean, taking many of these old songs that thrill our hearts with love of home and country and noting how perfectly and with little, if any, changing they fit the great work. Of course, any loyal American in attempting to arrange such a medley would naturally think first of the "Star-Spangled Banner," and we soon discovered with surprise and delight that the last verse especially was as truly appropriate to the Father's work in general and the home missionary work in particular as if it had been written for it, only one word needed changing; but I do not think we changed that.

Then my mind naturally flew to the mission fields of the sunny southland, what the "Old Kentucky Home" and the fair land of "Dixie" would be if Christ reigned supreme, and the southern songs suggested themselves. Then we realized that we have no north and south, politically, and surely there must not be in this great work; so "Old Glory" naturally followed. Our hearts swelled with the thought that, when America is truly a free country, free with the liberty with which Christ makes us free, a liberty which he has told us we can bring to this great land, then and only then

> "The Star-Spangled banner
> In (true) triumph shall wave," and then can we sing with a higher and holier meaning than we have ever dreamed:

> "My country, 'tis of thee,
> Sweet land of liberty,
> Of thee I sing."

And I know that any and all who will try it, will note with joy, how the words to the entire four verses of this song are remarkably appropriate, if we substitute in our minds, liberty in Christ, for the liberty or freedom usually meant by these terms.

At the time we had no thought of publication, but Brother Fillmore felt justified in arranging a splendid piano score, and after much trouble and expense over copyrights, etc., he published it, and we deeply appreciate the welcome it has received among the brethren, and trust that it will always be sung in the interest of home missions and accompanied by the thought, "America to the front in missions."

"Let Us Pray."

By S. R. Hawkins.

If we fail to pray, we will fail to raise the coveted $200,000. A monster petition, signed by 30,000 citizens of Massachusetts, was presented to Congress, asking for legislation to save "Old Ironsides." Among the petitioners were names of the governor and ex-governors, 70 mayors and ex-mayors, 30 survivors of the crew which preserved the Constitution from capture in 1861, and other notables. But we are told by F. D. Power that it was the prayer of the blind chaplain of the House that saved the ship.

Let us join Mr. Couden in thanksgiving unto God "for that sentiment, deep down in the hearts, which at the opportune moment lifts men above the material and makes them heroes."

And is not this the "opportune moment"? The "old ship" of Zion is threatened with destruction. Oh, may that noble sentiment that lifts us above the material, that lifts men out of the littleness and selfishness of this life, and makes heroes of them, move the hearts of our people to-day in a "protest against the ruthless destruction of the good old ship."

Our Budget

—The report from the Home Society on this page indicates a falling behind in the May offerings. The Foreign Society has the same experience with the March offering. It is a pity that the churches should hold back their collections. The incentive of enthusiasm is thus lost. Now let every one respond at once. "One to-day is worth two to-morrows."

—The corner stone of the handsome new building to be erected for the Euclid Avenue Christian Church, Cleveland, O., is to be laid next Sunday afternoon. Z. T. Sweeney will make the chief address.

—Be in line on Children's Day.

—Do not be satisfied with anything less than your full apportionment on glad Children's Day.

—Last year 3,552 schools observed Children's Day and they gave $61,837. Now for 4,000 contributing schools and $75,000.

—Bethany Assembly will open July 19 and close August 13.

—R. B. Havener is having a fine meeting at High Hill, Mo., and will organize a church there.

—Samuel Gregg, minister of our church at Jefferson, Ia., has been much in demand this year for special addresses.

—John A. Stevens writes us that the Louisiana state convention will meet at Ruston on June 26 instead of June 19.

—We regret to hear that J. M. Lowe, of Topeka, Kan., has been down with typhoid fever, but hopes soon to be convalescent.

—As a result of a meeting held at Meridian, Idaho, by George C. Ritchey, state evangelist, there will be an organization. The meeting was held in an upstairs hall.

—R. A. Omer, of Camp Point, Ill., finds it necessary to retire from evangelistic work for some time and will rest at his home.

—J. E. Chase has resigned at Valparaiso, Neb., in order to accept a call from North Bend, where he will take charge some time in June.

—George P. Rutledge, of Philadelphia, is to deliver the commencement address at Washington Christian College, Washington, D. C., May 29.

—J. M. Rhoades, of Perry, Okla., has decided to re-enter the evangelistic field. He has made a good record as a settled minister and as an evangelist.

—D. F. Harris will begin his second year at Montpelier, Ind., with an increase in salary. Every department of the church is in good condition.

—W. E. Garrison, now temporarily residing at Santa Fe, N. M., for his health, delivered the commencement address at the University of New Mexico May 11.

—The resignation of Marcellus Ely at Soniat avenue, New Orleans, La., leaves that field one of the very best mission points of the American Christian Missionary Society open.

—We regret that we have not received the commencement announcements of a number of our colleges in time for their appearance in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to do them any good.

—The mission school of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions at Monterey, Mexico, gave an entertainment for the benefit of the San Francisco sufferers and cleared $50 for them.

—Thomas L. Cooksey, M. D., Wilmington, O., has definitely decided to give up his practice in that city in July and evangelize. He is an able minister of the Word, and should have fields opened to him.

—J. L. McDonald, Snowhill, Mo., is available as an evangelist or as a settled minister. He is educated and is a capable man, doing splendid work in almost every place. Write him if you are needing a minister.

—H. L. Atkinson and wife, of California, Pa., are very highly recommended as evangelistic workers. They are in the field and are available for that kind of work. No church will make a mistake in calling them.

—In mentioning the names of those who returned with him on the Oceanic, Brother Power omitted the name of Prof. B. C. Hagerman. A correction which he sent to us later came too late for the correction in his letter.

The May Offering.

The early receipts are confusing. For the most part they are full of encouragement. Seventy-three more churches contributed this year than in the same time last year. Sixty-three have sent enlarged gifts and forty-eight have sent less than last year. More than sixty churches have sent offerings that sent nothing at all last year. The offerings do not include the larger and wealthier congregations. Many churches have sent their entire offerings to San Francisco, some have included their gifts in the general public bounty for the people of the stricken cities. In some states other interests have been emphasized to the exclusion of home missions and to the hurt of the offering. The sum total of the offerings to date is below that of last year. The vast majority of the churches have not yet remitted. Every dollar obtainable is needed at once. The special need of San Francisco emphasizes the necessity of instant action. We beg the churches and preachers not to delay their offerings. WRIGHT & RANSHAW.

—The Southwest District Convention of Minnesota will be held at Fairmont, Martin county, May 23-25. J. P. Childs is the district evangelist at that place, where he is having a successful work. The convention promises to be an interesting one.

—David Millar, who has left Bellflower for the pastorate at Mendon, Mo., made a side trip to Gravette, Ark., where he awakened new interest and secured pledges towards the salary of a minister to take charge of the work there. The officers now have the matter under consideration.

—Brother Blenus, of Jacksonville, Fla., reports that recently the pastors of two prominent Methodist churches having candidates for baptism, united with his congregation in a joint service, at the close of which the candidates were buried with Christ in baptism on confession of their faith.

—J. A. Edwin, who went first as missionary to Porto Rico, but became United State judge, has resigned his judgeship and returned to this country. It is his desire to re-enter the ministry. He is capable of taking charge of or building up a good church anywhere. Address him at Walhalla, S. C.

—At the last executive meeting of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions a communication was read from the state board of California north, asking an immediate appropriation of $250 in order that the missionary pastors employed by it might be kept at their posts. The executive committee at once appropriated the amount asked and forwarded it that it might be helping Christ's work in this time of sore need.

—A southern subscriber wrote recently: "Whar you gwine with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST? Your last issue was a giant." We are headed toward the reunion of Christendom, but how long it will take us to get there will depend somewhat upon the co-operation of the friends of that cause.

—Mrs. Louie Hugh, wife of the superintendent of the Chinese mission of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Portland, Ore., in six hours collected $189.75 from the women of Chinatown, Portland, for the relief of suffering Chinese Christians in San Francisco.

—Evangelist Herbert Yeuell writes that he must now engage the Park Theater in Manchester, N. H., where the proposed meeting is to be held, in order to secure it, and this means that some money must be forthcoming for that purpose. We hope our friends who are interested in planting a representative church of our movement in the state of New Hampshire will make a remittance at once for that purpose.

—Fred F. Schultz, minister of our church at Elswood City Pa., has been unanimously elected to the presidency of the Ministerial Association of that place. Brother Schultz is a tireless worker and this compliment is deserved. He has been engaged to deliver a number of special addresses—memorial, baccalaureate and convention.

—Abram E. Cory, of China, will be in this country for some months. He can attend state and district missionary conventions and he can visit churches. His addresses on China are worthy of any platform in Christendom. He understands the situation in China. He presents the facts so that all can understand them. His address is Osceola, Ia.

—B. S. Denny reports that he recently had a conversation with the government statistician for Iowa, who told him that the only people who report their statistics, and do it promptly and correctly, are the Latter Day Saints. The Mormon ministers make a point to record carefully and report their statistics, and this may, as Brother Denny points out, account for the marvelous gain that they report.

—J. W. Cummings, Montpelier, Ohio, is desirous of finding a good man who can give half of his time at least to our new congregation in Montpelier, Ohio This is a growing town and presents an excellent opportunity to a young man to build up a strong church while he is building himself up and fitting himself for a larger field of usefulness.

—In writing about "How We Do in Apache, Okla.," Mrs. T. W. McComb says there is a good building, well furnished, with a small loan upon it. The congregation numbers seventy-five, and while without a pastor, they hold their prayer-meetings, and Endeavor Society, and are making an effort to remove the debt. They have a fine ladies' aid society, and hope ere long to have regular preaching.

—N. M. Perry, of Lathrop, Mo., asks prayers for Bro. J. G. Creason and the church at that place. Brother Creason, by the time these lines are printed, will have been in bed over 100 days. Inflammation of the tissues of the lungs now hinders his recovery more than anything else. "He is patient in tribulation, and just as anxious to do his work as we are to have him do so when able," writes Brother Perry.

CHURCH FEDERATION READY.

The Inter-Church Conference on Federation, 700 pages, prepaid.....$2 00

—A new church will soon be completed at Claremore, I. T.

—Reports indicate that the earthquake did not affect our churches in southern California or at the Acampo Colony.

—Mr. Von Ogden Vogt, national secretary of Christian Endeavor, will speak to the St. Louis Ministerial Alliance on Monday, May 28, at 11 a. m.

—The meeting of the missionary board of Pettis County, Mo., will be held at Lamonte, May 28, 29. There will be addresses, a conference on county work, and business sessions.

—F. A. Mayhall gave his lecture on the Bible on Sunday to the members of the Union Avenue Christian Church, St. Louis, while Dr. Philputt, the pastor, was preaching the baccalaureate sermon for William Woods College at Fulton, Mo. Those who heard it enjoyed the lecture and were profited by it.

—W. J. Clark is moving from Owenton, Ky., to Tampa, Fla. During the two years and a half he was at Owenton the missionary offerings were doubled, the membership increased 25 per cent and the minister's salary 30 per cent. Two additions by baptism have recently been made to the membership.

—A note from Sister Helen E. Moses says: "It seems very good to be back at the mission rooms again after our stay in Jamaica. We were happy in finding the work of our organization in good condition in that field." We have in hand a letter from Brother Richardson on his Jamaica trip which we hope to publish.

—As a result of eight months of evangelistic work, by Joel Brown, there have been 250 additions to the churches, and $4,500 raised for local work. Brother Brown will be in the field for Drake University until September 1, when he will again take up evangelistic work, for which he is now making dates. His address is 985 Twenty-sixth street, Des Moines, Ia.

—The San Francisco disaster has changed the plans of Ralph E. Boileau, who had started with O. E. Hamilton and J. P. Garmong for an evangelistic tour around the world. All his music was burned, with most of his belongings, hence he has been compelled to give up for the present this extended trip, and will be ready to make engagements at home. He may be addressed at Red Oak, Ia.

—Last week we printed a statement from Dean Van Kirk about the condition of our churches in San Francisco. The brethren there have appointed F. S. Ford, E. W. Darst and P. C. Macfarlane to be sent throughout the brotherhood to obtain aid. A special committee is already at work seeking out and relieving the suffering of our brethren. All contributions should be sent through the American Christian Missionary Society, marked, "Relief Fund for San Francisco."

—Charles E. Smith has accepted a call to become state evangelist for South Carolina, and will go into the field as soon as a successor for the pulpit in Charleston can be found. The brethren there have treated him in such a fashion that he finds it very hard to leave them, but feels that the state work is one that needs attention, and that he can best serve the cause by taking this wider field. He reports that replies to his call for ministers have been many, and that all who sent postage will receive an answer.

For Indigestion

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE

An effective remedy for obstinate indigestion, nervous dyspepsia, headache and depression.

—In our columns last week appeared a news item under the heading "Kentucky," which did not designate the place or the church. Brother Crossfield's meeting was at Hopkinsville, Ky., and H. D. Smith, the pastor there, writing of the meeting, says: "Brother Crossfield is an excellent preacher, an exceptional exhorter, and a great general of evangelistic forces." He speaks very highly, too, of LeRoy St. John as conductor of music.

—C. M. Keene, Paw Paw, Mich., state corresponding secretary of that state, has resigned. No man has shown greater devotion to his work and few have brought out such magnificent results at such meager outlay. The Michigan brethren desire to find a man who in some ways can be a successor to Brother Keene, it being their desire that the new man shall act as state evangelist and secretary and likewise edit the state paper. Write to G. A. Munch, M. D., 149 Pine street, Detroit, Mich.

—R. H. Lampkin has just returned to his charge in Dexter, Mo., from a trip to Jacksonville, Fla., where he has been filling the pulpit of the First Christian Church for J. T. Boone. Brother Boone is fast recovering from his illness, but will not be able to preach for a month or more, and while he is recuperating in Tennessee Rufus A. Russell will supply. Brother Lampkin reports the work in fine condition and that the congregation has the reputation of working overtime.

—A note from J. R. Crank, pastor at Paragould, Ark., says: "George L. Snively, of The Christian-Evangelist, preached the baccalaureate for the graduating class of the high school here Sunday to the great satisfaction of all. There was an unusual coincidence in connection with it. It was preached the thirteenth day of the month, there were thirteen in the class, thirteen in the choir, the Scripture read was 1 Cor., which contains thirteen verses and the thirteenth verse was the text."

—Marshall G. Long, minister of the church at Warsaw, Ind., writes that April 29 was a day of great rejoicing for the brethren there, who paid off a $4,000 mortgage. Three former ministers, all held in high esteem, C. N. Granger, of Noblesville; W. D. Starr and J. O. Rose, of Indianapolis, were present on this happy occasion. Every department is now free from debt, and a deep sense of the greatness of the work and the opportunity causes the congregation to go forward full of hope.

—We are glad to see that our three churches of the non-anti type in Nashville, Tenn., are engaged in an evangelistic meeting. A tent is being used, and James Small, with his singer, LeRoy St. John, are attracting large audiences, while the dailies of the city are giving much space to the meeting. We can say a good word for the daily papers of Nashville. They showed fine enterprise in reporting the recent Student Volunteer convention. The editors of these papers appreciate the value of good religious news.

Pimples and Blotches

Are not the only signs that a blood-cleansing, tonic medicine is needed. Tired, languid feelings, loss of appetite and general debility are other signs, and they may be worse signs.

The best blood-cleansing, tonic medicine is Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts directly and peculiarly on the blood, ridding it of all foreign matters and building up the whole system. This statement is verified by the experience of thousands radically cured.

—C. J. Tanner has just begun his fourth year as minister of the Central Church, Detroit, Mich. The building and organization of the new Woodward Avenue church, an illustration of which appeared recently in our columns at the time of the dedication, was the outcome of the past year's work of Brother Tanner. The combined gifts of the church, Sunday-school, C. W. B. M. and individual members, given independent of and beyond their regular church offerings, amount to $39,298, only $5,000 of this amount being for home support. Some eighty-five members were added, and after giving up the charter members of the Woodward Avenue Church, Central still has a membership of about an even four hundred.

—Mr. F. M. Barton, of Cleveland, O., has secured the rights from Bro. Edgar D. Jones of his book, "Letters of a Retired Minister," some seven or eight chapters of which first appeared in The Christian-Evangelist. Brother Jones revised these articles and added to them, and they will be brought out early next fall in book form. From the interest which they elicited at the time we published them anonymously, we are confident that many of our readers will desire to secure the completed book.

—"The Danbury News," under the heading, "A Prosperous Church," has a lengthy report of the work of our brethren in the Connecticut city, who are led by E. J. Teagarden. Never, during the sixteen years of the present pastorate, have the annual reports shown such satisfactory financial condition, the amount raised for all purposes being $5,259, $784 of which went to missions. There were fifty-six additions during the year, leaving a net gain of thirty-one, and a present membership of 830, which includes a non-resident membership of over two hundred.

—We have received a copy of "The Shreveport Times," and find it contains a whole page advertisement announcing a gospel campaign with tent and tabernacle. Needless to say it is the members of our little church in this southern city who are showing this enterprise. Illustrations appear of the tent and the tabernacle, and of Evangelists Spicer and Douthit, who will have charge of the meeting in the church building, and of Evangelists Arthur W. Jones and Talmage Stanley, who will conduct the tent meeting. Every reader of "The Shreveport Times" must know about the meeting.

—E. A. Orr and wife and Bro. C. F. Greenwood left Mankato, Minn., with the good wishes of, and some valuable presents from, the members of the church there. It was during Brother Orr's pastorate that both the debt on the building and a floating debt of long standing were paid off. Brother Greenwood has for years been a pillar in the church and will be greatly missed. These two brethren have gone to Fargo, N. D., where they will go into business, though they will not be lost to the work of the church. Mankato now needs a good pastor, and only those with the best of references need apply.

—W. J. Wright, for the Home Society, recommends that some good church ought to secure the services of Jerome E. Emanuel, Ph.D., of Collins Center, N. Y., a graduate of the University of Oxford, England, and of Lyons University, who has decided to unite with our church and give his life to the ministry among the Disciples. He has been a missionary among the Corn Planter Indians, among whom he has done a splendid work. He is at present field secretary for the American Sunday-school Union and for the American Bible Union, and is commended in the highest terms by the officials of these organizations.

—T. J. Arnold, one of our missionaries in China who has recently arrived at Santa Cruz, Cal., where he will remain awhile for his health, writes: "Assure our brotherhood that there is no cause for anxiety over our workers in China. The situation is a call to earnest, importunate prayer. May God humble the American nation! This is a testing time for God's remembrancers." We sincerely trust that Brother Arnold may recuperate rapidly in the genial and salubrious atmosphere of the Pacific coast. We are grateful for his assurance that we need not be anxious concerning the safety of our missionaries in China.

—The executive board of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society has passed resolutions expressing a deep sense of loss in the death of Bro. A. Larrabee, who was such a faithful worker for the evangelization of the city as the corresponding secretary of the society, and acting superintendent of Chicago missions. All who knew Brother Larrabee testify to "his sacrifice, his consecration, his unwavering faith and cheerful performance of duty in the face of seemingly insurmountable obstacles," and agree that "the benediction of his beautiful Christian character is a blessed heritage, not only to the Chicago Christian Missionary Society, but to every Church of Christ and mission in Chicago." Brother Larrabee left an aged wife and several children. His body was laid to rest in Graceland Cemetery.

—The following is from a personal letter from Dr. E. B. Sanford, general secretary of the National Federation of Churches and Christian Workers: "Accept my thanks for the way in which you have explained my letter to the good brother whose missive appears on page 542 in your issue of April 26. I can assure you that you have given a correct interpretation, both of my words and their meaning." As much has been made, in some quarters, of this statement, we would be glad to have our readers turn once more to the article referred to and read it with the understanding that the author of the language fully endorses our interpretation of its meaning. Indeed it is incapable of any other meaning in the light of the basis adopted at New York, and of the general spirit of the federation movement.

—William D. Ryan has resigned the pastorate at the Central Church, Syracuse, N. Y., to the regret of the congregation. He will leave June 1 and will take up the work at Ashland, Ky. Under his administration during the past four years there has been substantial growth in all lines of work and Brother Ryan has felt that he could be spared for another field. We are not surprised that, with a decided increase in missionary contributions, and the expenses of the year provided for, as well as the establishment of a second church now numbering some sixty members, and nearly self-supporting, and worshiping in a building of its own, the congregation has accepted the resignation with regret. A set of resolutions were given to him testifying to confidence in Brother Ryan's Christian character, scholastic attainments, and thorough equipment for his chosen life work.

—Mark Wayne Williams writes that Brother Power and Brother Medbury recently visited the West London Tabernacle, to the great pleasure of the brethren there. Brother Williams was to begin a meeting for Brother Morgan at Hornsey Tabernacle. Both he and Brother Morgan, as president and secretary of the Christian Association of Great Britain, visited this year all the churches in the provinces with good results. This is the first time a regular round of the churches has been attempted. The brethren in England are planning for a three years' centenary campaign. He says the disaster in California has affected the whole American colony. Brother Williams concludes thus: "May I thank The Christian-Evangelist for its method of 'sweetness and light?' The Free Church Council here is a practical demonstration of federation in which even the English brethren join. In this respect England is far in advance of America."

—An interesting account, under the title, "A Strong Force for Good," of B. A. Abbott and his work at the Harlem Avenue Christian Church, Baltimore, appears in the "Sun" of that city. It seems that Brother Abbott early in life chose the ministry for his calling. Born in the Virginia mountains, his first efforts at persuasion were against the moonshiner practices of some of the inhabitants, and he toured a portion of the state, denouncing crime and sin in a way that attracted attention and gave an impetus to a movement for reform. It was 12 years ago that he went to Baltimore, during which time his church has increased its membership 500, and has launched the Fulton Avenue Christian Church. Just now an addition is being made to his own building, to make it adequate to the increase in the Sunday-school. The newspaper writer speaks very favorably of Brother Abbott's pulpit ability and style, and says that he is devoted to Baltimore and believes that the city has a wonderful destiny before it. His recreation is literature.

—In connection with the many good things which our friends are saying about The Christian-Evangelist let us hear a brother who has a different opinion express his sentiment. He is a minister and hails from the Old Dominion: "The position of your paper on federation and high criticism (so-called, etc.,) to my mind makes it undesirable. It has denied the faith and is worse than an infidel. Of course, occasionally a few good things are allowed to get in, but it is largely filled with undesirable matter. I think the best thing for the apostolic plea would be to discontinue the publication of The Christian-Evangelist." Now, we do not call in question for a moment the sincerity and honesty of this good brother, but at the same time we have no idea of discontinuing the publication of The Christian-Evangelist for a while yet. We are persuaded that it has a field and will have as long as there are preachers and members among us who entertain views on current questions, which this brother evidently holds. Needless to say, he is not a reader of the paper, and has gotten his impression of it from other sources.

—"The resignation of Rev. Perry J. Rice as pastor of the First Christian Church, of South Bend, will cause general regret throughout the city. Mr. Rice has ever been an earnest worker; he has been personally popular not only within his own church but with the general public, and his decision to leave South Bend comes as a surprise of a very disappointing kind. He goes to the Portland Avenue Christian Church, Minneapolis, and while his friends are glad to know that in so doing he is to have a larger field where his opportunities for doing good will be greater, his leaving is generally deplored. His work here has been marked by unusual success. Mr. Rice has not only greatly strengthened his own church, but through his efforts much mission work has been done. Mr. Rice has been a factor for right in South Bend; he has ever done what he could toward the promotion of its best interests. He has been a power for good in the community, and his decision causes regret among all of those who know him. The people here will watch his future work, and hope that he may ever prove successful."

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

We quote the above from the editorial columns of the "Tribune," of South Bend, Ind. Brother Rice has been in that city for some five years, having previously been in the pastorate at Ft. Wayne, Ind., and Findlay, Ohio. He is a native of the latter state, and studied at Hiram. His call to Minneapolis came suddenly, and was a great surprise to him; but he feels that the church from which R. W. Aberly resigned to take charge at Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, Ohio, offers him a wider field for active Christian service. Brother Rice has had a number of calls during the past year to other fields of work. The Minneapolis church is the strongest in the northwest.

Southern Illinois Ministerial Institute.

The nineteenth annual institute of the Southern Illinois Ministerial Association, held at Albion, Edwards county, May 8 to 10, 1906, was a great meeting. Albion had just emerged from house cleaning and was royally hospitable; nature was dresssed in her brightest and best; the weather was ideal; the attendance, representing four states, was the largest recorded in the history of the association, and the program was comprehensive and down to date. The papers and addresses without exception showed ability and careful preparation. Many of them were the equals of the best heard in our national gatherings. It is safe to say that such a feast of great things and such an array of talent have never been enjoyed in a single institute in southern Illinois.

Beginning on Tuesday evening with a beautiful, stirring address on "The Minister of To-day," by President R. E. Hieronymus, of Eureka, and a thoughtful, scholarly paper on "The Sphere of Brotherhood," by L. H. Stine, Tipton, Ind., the feast continued and the interest increased through every session to the close. On Wednesday morning "The Minister and Missions," by Lee Tinsley, of Olney, an able paper breathing hope in every line, and "The Problem of the Country Church," by J. F. Rosborough, Centralia, a practical paper emphasizing the value of leadership, and the grouping of weak churches, gave promise of great sessions to follow. "Church Federation," by G. S. McGaughey, Palestine, and "Christian Journalism," by R. H. Robertson, Du Quoin, were thoughtful and conservative papers. Much helpful discussion was provoked by both, making the afternoon one long to be remembered.

At the evening hour in an address on "Religious Education," Marion Stevenson, state superintendent Bible school work, gave an exalted ideal of the purpose of the Bible school. "Alexander Campbell as a Preacher," by the inimitable A. McLean, president of the F. C. M. S., Cincinnati, was one of the most instructive papers of the entire institute.

Thursday morning "The New Birth," by J. J. Harris, Marion, and "Is There a Demand for a New Apologetic?" by Wm. Oeschger, Vincennes, Ind., illustrated the fact that while we see life from widely separated view points we are brethren. Both papers were studied and vigorous and both caused interesting discussion. The statement by Brother Harris, which was specially attacked, was that men are not begotten by the Holy Spirit. In Brother Oeschger's paper the conclusion was reached that new conditions in the scientific and religious world constitute a need tent form that indicated in the paper.

"Distinguishing Principles of the Disciples of Christ," by W. W. Weedon, Marion, on Thursday afternoon, was characterized as "a most excellent paper on the creedal principles of the church." The reviewer, William Oeschger, agreed in the main with the statements of the essayist, but it was evident that he would give some of these statements a very different content from that indicated in the paper

One of the most practical and interesting papers read was that by A. T. Shaw, Fairfield, on "The Relation of the Minister to Civic Righteousness." The essayist held that ordinarily the minister should participate in reform movements indirectly, but that if occasion seemed to demand and there was fair prospect of success he should become an open champion of and leader in reform.

On Thursday evening the climax was reached in the service in which one of Marion Stevenson's spiritual lectures, "Matthew, the Gospel of the Kingdom," was followed by a magnificent address by J. H. Garrison, of St. Louis, entitled, "The Present Phase of the Christian Union Problem." Every heart was deeply stirred by this splendid appeal from a splendid man who was at his best. But his conclusions were not accepted by all his hearers. On the contrary, the interest grew more intense as our dear old veteran, J. A. Williams, 88 years of age, and scarcely able to stand, made an almost superhuman effort to combat what he believes to be a menace to the peace and progress of our movement. For nearly half an hour this aged brother held the attention of his audience as he made his earnest plea. Objections and questions were offered by others, chiefly the older brethren, the answers to which only reiterated the position taken in the address that federation does not involve the sacrifice of any principle and that it is a voluntary agreement to engage in a systematic and universal co-operation in every good work and to express everywhere that degree of unity which already exists. Even all this the speaker contended does not constitute the full unity for which Jesus prayed, but it is a real and a great step in that direction. While the great audience sang, "God be with you till we meet again," Brother Garrison crossed over and taking Brother Williams by the hand, expressed his love for him and his appreciation of his great life work.

As these two honored brethren representing both sides of this great question and this vigorous controversy, stood hand in hand, leading us, as it were, to the mountain top of transfiguring fellowship, the writer felt as if in this beautiful scene was a prophecy of the great union which must come when with confidence in and love for one another we clasp hands in fellowship and in service the world over in his name who came to break down every wall that divides.

The newly elected officers of the association are: President, R. H. Robertson, Du Quoin; vice president, J. W. Kilborn, Mt. Carmel; secretary-treasurer, J. F. Rosborough, Centralia. The place of the next institute will be announced later.

Dedication at Keysport, Ill.

Keysport is a beautiful, thriving village on the historic Kaskaskia in south--western Illinois. Jesse Story organized a Church of Christ there one year ago. Last Lord's day George L. Snively of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST dedicated for them a handsome new house of worship free from all indebtedness and with a seating capacity of more than 500. Though part of each of the day's services was devoted to securing funds, three prominent citizens made the good confession. Brother Story has rendered this community invaluable service and is universally beloved.

Compulsary Features of Children's Day.

1. For once they have the right of way. Their place in the future church entitles them to this consideration. Let us all unite to make it the great, glad day of all the year for them.

2. It furnishes an opportunity for impressing upon their plastic minds the heathen's great need of the Gospel and our great duty to send them the good tidings of redeeming love. When these great truths are stamped upon the minds of the young they can never be eradicated and will bear fruit for missionary work in years to come.

3. The season of the year when observed, the beautiful flowers and decorations, the girls arrayed in white, the gladsome hearts of boys and girls alike, the delightful music, the great audiences attracted, the unselfish spirit of the Gospel, the happy giving of the children, all conspire to make it a notable occasion and to make it a distinct contribution to the development of Christian character.

4. The amount of money given on Children's day reached last year $61,817, which is almost one-fourth of the money raised by the foreign society for the world's evangelization. This is a fertile field for cultivation and enlargement and ought not to be neglected.

Drake's Twenty-fifth Anniversary.

With the close of the present year Drake University completes the first 25 years of its history, and the occasion is to be marked by the most elaborate series of celebrations in the history of the school. During these 25 years more than 12,000 different students have been enrolled and about 2,500 have graduated from the several departments. Allowing for the fact that it has not been the recipient of millions of endowment, it can probably be said that its phenomenal success is without parallel in the educational history of our country. Most of the usual exercises of commencement week give place this year to a series of special programs and functions.

On Sunday morning, June 10, will be held the baccalaureate service. At 3 p. m. will occur a joint anniversary meeting by the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, and at night a program by the Bible college, participated in by prominent alumni. On Monday at 2:30 will occur the dedication of Memorial Hall, the new home of the Bible college, and in the evening the Liberal Arts seniors will present a play. A trolley ride over the city is scheduled for Tuesday morning, and in the afternoon a reminiscence meeting, at which various of the old-time students will recall interesting episodes of college days. Tuesday evening the distinguished alumni of the College of Music will give a concert. For Wednesday morning a band concert and athletic exhibition at the Stadium are scheduled, and for the afternoon the Founders' day program. In the evening occurs the anniversary program at the Auditorium. On Thursday at 9:30 will occur the commencement exercises. Among the speakers of the several programs are to be D. R. Lucas, associated with Chancellor Carpenter at the beginning; Allen Hickey, associated with the church and educational movement in Iowa for half a century; Charles Reign Scoville, Chancellor Craig, President Aylsworth, H. O. Breeden, I. N. McCash, D. R. Dungan and Charles S. Medbury. The commencement address will be by Theodore Shonts, the man of all the nation whom President Roosevelt selected as his "hundred-thousand-dollar-man" to construct the Panama Canal. He is the son-in-law of the man whose honored name Drake University bears.

For the old students, perhaps the most enjoyable functions will be the series of reunions, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, from 5 to 7:30 o'clock. The most elaborate social function will be the closing banquet at the Savery Hotel Thursday evening, which will afford an appropriate climax for the round of festivities

For many of these functions it is absolutely necessary that the committee in charge shall know in advance who will attend that provision may be made and places reserved. It is especially desired that visiting alumni and friends shall have first chance at all these good things. Miss Mary A. Carpenter, secretary of the general committee, who may be addressed in care of Drake University, should be notified. The fee should accompany the request for reservation. She will also report to the entertainment committee requests for lodging. Miss Carpenter will also be glad to send bulletins and programs, with detailed information for the week, to all who will request them. The invitation is of the most general nature, embracing not only graduates of the school but all who have been enrolled as students, all friends and all who are bound to the school by ties of any sort. Special rates on the railroads will in all probability be secured.

C. O. Denny, Chairman.

Plans and Purposes

Of the Business Men's Association of the Christian Churches.

The great majority of our men are practically inactive in the cause of Christ, especially in large congregations To organize these into leagues, clubs or associations, with interesting and pleasurable programs for active Christian service, is the primary purpose of the association. It must naturally be a strong ally to our state, home and foreign missions, and to our benevolent and educational enterprises, for when men go to work in earnest they accomplish something.

A small annual free-will offering from each member in the local organizations will keep up the expenses of the national headquarters, and furnish the necessary literature. All communications of whatever nature, should be addressed to J. W. Henry, corresponding secretary, 773 Aubert avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

The plans suggested for local organization and work are as follows:

Call a general meeting of all the male members and friends of the congregation, or congregations, as the case may be, with the pastor as temporary chairman, appointing a temporary secretary. Have a good speaker on practical Christian service, or some such topic, make a short, pointed address. Then have the secretary enroll those who will become participants. Then, by vote of church members only, of those so enrolled, elect officers, the pastor not usually offering for an office, but serving and advising ex-officio. Then the duly elected chairman or president and secretary will relieve the temporary officers, and such contributions as the members may be ready to make can be credited by the treasurer. Then the chairman, with the aid of the pastor, should appoint a committee of general supervision, always consisting of the pastor and himself, ex-officio, and from one to five others from among the elders and deacons of the congregation, according to the size of the local chapter. It will be the duty of this supervising committee to appoint at the proper times, and giving ample time for the work to be done, committees of three or more, who shall see to it that the offerings for our various enterprises shall be made as liberal and as universal as possible on the days set apart for such offerings to be taken. In addition to these, there should be committees on systematic weekly giving; local membership; entertainment; relief of distressed in the community; visitation of sick; local missions and the financing of same; temperance; civic improvements, and many other lines of important church work and consecrated Christian service. Local environment and circumstances may easily suggest other lines of work that may be very necessary and highly commendable.

The secretary should at once furnish a roll of the membership in the local chapter, and the treasurer should take the offering and remit the same with such roll to the corresponding secretary of the general association, and this should be repeated on each anniversary of the local organization.

It is further suggested that voluntary contributions be made at each meeting of the local chapter for local expenses and enterprises. Further suggestions will be sent out from time to time as this work progresses.

It is intended that at as early a date as possible a monthly paper will be issued, and each enrolled member of the association will be considered a bona fide cash subscriber to the same, because of having paid in his voluntary offering, and will receive this periodical so long as he remains a member.

Secretaries of local organizations are requested to use care in initials and names on rolls transmitted to the general corresponding secretary, as each one will receive a neat card certificate just as soon as his name has been enrolled at the general office of the association, and it is important that these be correct, as this will be useful and of value to the member whose name it bears.

The Missouri Convention.

Will those who expect to attend the Missouri state convention at Hannibal, June 15-20, send their names and probable day of arrival to S. F. Shultz, chairman of the entertainment committee? Lodging and breakfast will be gladly provided by the church. Other meals will be served by the Congregationalists across the street and at other near-by places at 25 cents per meal. The hotel rates are $2 a day. Levi Marshall.

On a Retreat.

Our people are on a retreat in their foreign missionary work. This is the first time they have broken ranks in many years. Up to May 17 the loss in receipts on the year was $7,274. Note this is a loss!

We began the current missionary year with plans and great hopes of reaching $300,000 for foreign missions by September 30. This can yet be done. Let us turn seeming defeat into triumphant victory. To this end we offer the following suggestions:

1. There must be a firm reliance upon God. He can only use us as agents of his will as we are worthy and as we are filled with his spirit.

2. Every missionary church among us must take a special and practical interest in seeing that $300,000 is realized. Do not trust to another to perform your part of the undertaking.

3. The Sunday-schools will rank among the first in this enterprise if given an opportunity. The children are unselfish. Strike high! Remember, a great thing is more easily accomplished than the trivial and insignificant.

4. If your Endeavor Society is supporting an orphan boy in Damoh, it is well. You might provide for the support of two and be all the richer and better for the effort. If your society is doing nothing in this direction, it ought to swing itself into the column of this beneficent service at once.

5. Have you made a personal offering toward the $300,000? If not, why not? You can make the $300,000 possible by sending a direct personal gift.

6. If you have reached or passed the zenith of life, you can help by an annuity gift. Those 50 years of age or older may give money to the foreign society and receive 6 per cent interest during life. Nearly 300 brethren and sisters have availed themselves of the advantages of this plan.

A fresh reading of the New Testament by our people, with an honest purpose to know the will of God concerning the evangelization of the world, will more than insure the mark set before us for the year. It is idle for our people to talk about reproducing the New Testament church if we do not restore the first missionary passion and activity.

The Gospel is to solve all unsolved problems. There is but one question and that is the Gospel. There is but one duty of the church and that is to preach the Gospel.

F. M. Rains,
Stephen J. Corey,
Cincinnati, O. Secretaries.

Children's Day.

I have watched with much gratification the progress of our children in their work for missions, the past decade. No man can estimate fully the vast and benign results of Children's Day. Eternity alone will reveal this.

This is a great day for and with the children. They look forward to it with intense interest and fond anticipations. The church can not afford to be indifferent to this special occasion. In this neglect it loses an opportunity which can not be atoned for by any substitutions.

Observe the day, though it cost you much labor and care. Observe the day, though your resources be meager. Observe the day, though you fall far short of your ideals in its observance. Observe the day as best you can, and trust God for results and for his benedictions.

Many schools will use the exercise, "Arise, Shine," issued by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. This exercise is well adapted to every class of schools. It is susceptible of an elaborate rendering, or it may be simplified, and used most effectively. P. H. Duncan.

Latonia, Ky.

Children's Day Notes.

Seventy-five thousand dollars is the mark set for Children's Day this year. The Sunday-schools have been gaining every year. Last year they gave $61,817, one-fourth the entire income of the Foreign Society.

We have more Sunday-schools giving for foreign missions than we have churches. Make way for the boys and girls! They will compose the church of to-morrow!

Every Sunday-school in our brotherhood ought to observe Children's Day. It is not only an institution of great service in world evangelization, but the reflex influence of this Sunday-school festival is simply unmeasured. The church that neglects to enlist the children in the foreign mission enterprise is sadly derelict. It recoils from a great duty and privilege—it fails to build for its future good.

Short, Sharp, Sure.

This is the kind of work that ought to be done by the Missouri brethren now. Our corresponding secretary, T. A. Abbott, has led the campaign for a $20,000 permanent fund forward to the point where success appears in sight. Only about $5,000 now remains to be secured. It will not fail; but why should it require so long a time to close it up?

One of the colleges of New England burned a few years ago. While the flames were still licking up the ruins men were rushing, almost literally hatless and coatless, to catch the first train for the scene of the conflagration, and with tearful eyes but determined faces, contended with one another as to who should be allowed to enter the first subscription of thousands of dollars to replace the structure! May we not hope soon to see something of like spirit in the doing of things we undertake for our missionary work? Let some one telegraph to T. A. Abbott to consider the permanent fund raised! We have many brethren in Missouri who would be enriched by giving the last $5,000.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Indian Territory.

Our last letter was written from Sulphur, just a month ago. We have since visited the following towns: Ada, Coalgate, Stonewall, Holdenville, Wewoka, McAlester, Pauls Valley, Lindsay, Wynwood, Davis, Marietta, Ardmore, Madill, Caddo and Atoka. We had several appointments for sermons at all these points, except Caddo. These 15 towns are all on railroads, in the Chickasaw, Choctaw and Seminole nations, and range in population from 1,000 at Wewoka to 10,000 at McAlester—most of them being towns of about 3,000. We have an organization in all except Caddo, and expect in two or three months to have one there; Stonewall, Wewoka, Pauls Valley, Lindsay and Marietta have been organized within the past year. The last three named have housed themselves in elegant little buildings that are well located. S. D. Seymore preaches all time at Marietta; J. H. Ivey all time at Pauls Valley, and L. B. Grogan half-time at Lindsay. The Stonewall mission has bought and paid for a choice lot and is carrying on Sunday-school. We arranged for a meeting to be held at Stonewall in August, and in July at Marietta, Madill and Caddo; also for some preaching at Coalgate. We added five to the fellowship at Davis, two by baptism and three by letter. We were greatly handicapped throughout the month by an epidemic of smallpox and mumps, and by hard storms and almost daily rains. Every point visited was aided and encouraged in one or more ways. Very little money was received, less than $20 all told, for a hard month's work in 15 towns—not enough to cover traveling expenses. However, a few of these points had previously made an offering for the year to Indian Territory missions, and all that had not done so promised to send in an offering before the August convention. But, brethren, remember the eight missionaries we now have employed under the auspices of our co-operation, and myself also, can not wait till August to pay our grocery men and other bills. We need money now; we need money every month; we can not live 11 months in the year on pledges. Let those who can do so send us money at the earliest possible moment. During the past month we have also carried on a large correspondence, writing some days as many as 20 letters and kept accounts with eight missionaries, with the American Christian Missionary Society and with our treasurer, and located H. W. Ligon, of Hanson, Ky., with the church at Broken Arrow, and S. W. Manly, of Eagle Mills, N. Y., at Weleetka. However, Brother Manly's church refused to accept his resignation and thereby prevented his coming to the territory.

J. T. Hawkins has resigned at McAlester to take the church at Elkton, Ky. His resignation was deeply regretted by the McAlester church, and had he not assured the church that he would not "reconsider" his resignation would not have been accepted. R. S. Campbell has resigned at Holdenville. O. M. Thomason at Davis and Brother Wharton at Ada. We need at least six preachers to fill vacancies recently made. Applicants should address the writer, enclosing stamps for reply. We will pay $50 per month for the first three months; after that increase the pay or continue, diminish or decrease as conditions seem to require. Do not write us if you are lazy or self-conceited. Do not fool some church (struggling mission) into paying your way to visit the Indian Territory, when you have no intention of locating here. Do not think for a moment that less is demanded of a preacher here than in the "states." If you are afraid to ask a church for an offering to missions, or to ask a member to subscribe for a church paper lest you might not get a raise of salary, or if you have not learned to attend a convention occasionally to help along the cause in a general way, then please do not write us.

Good meetings have recently been in progress at Chickasha, Okmulgee, Wagoner, Ardmore and Tulsa, five of our strongest churches. Brethren, let us begin to talk and pray and preach about our next convention. It will be held in McAlester the last week in August. We confidently expect the largest and best convention yet held in this territory. Arrange your meeting, vacations and other matters so as not to conflict with the last week in August. We want you and will expect you at the McAlester convention.—S. R. Hawkins, Cor. Sec., South McAlester.

Pacific Wavelets.

California is surely a land of delights, notwithstanding the earthquake and fire. The fig tree has long since put forth her leaves, and her swelling fruit promises much to the dietetic. The golden poppy, our state flower, has made the fields a blaze of yellow flame, and the buttercups, daisies, bluebells and a thousand other varieties make the easterner want to make his bed among the flowers and "breathe his life out sweetly there." The church work is on the advance all along the line. The C. W. B. M. has done no grander work than to send out here the sweet-spirited Brother Hoffman to "spy out the land," live in Chinatown and see whether "all these things are so," as was presented to the women's board at the San Francisco convention by Brothers White and Ford. Brother Hoffman came before the fire and found the "half had not been told." The Chinese of the more intelligent and business class are more than pleased to know of the efforts we are making to elevate their people, and we may expect some of them to supplement the efforts of the good women in our own sunny land for the "heathen Chinee." Our Brother McFarlane has stirred up a "hornet's nest" in the fair city of Alameda. He saw that bay city being dishonored by constant violation of her city ordinances, under the smiles of her municipal officers. He appeared before his people with evidence in hand. Every minister of the city and all the good people came to the front to hold up the young man's hands. Church federation seems to be working well in California. I do not think it is because we are degenerating. The churches in our beautiful Los Gatos and lovely Vacaville have confederated (I guess you call it), with the Christian Church in the lead in each place. The people became so aroused that a few days ago they voted every saloon out of the town. Who would have thought it, way out here in wicked California! But we call it "blooming co-operation," and nobody is scared.—J. Durham.

North Carolina.

G. W. Walker, state evangelist for North Carolina, closed a meeting at Spray, where he was with Dr. B. T. Bitting, the minister, for about two weeks. There were 31 additions—27 of them conversions. Edward McKinney, singing evangelist, was with them the last few days of the meeting. He is to be associated with Brother Walker for a time in the evangelistic work.——The Roanoke Union expects to raise $500 by the last of April to evangelize in their district.——Atlantic Christian College, at Wilson, N. C., has issued bonds to the amount of $11,000, thoroughly secured by the college property, bearing 6 per cent interest, payable annually. It is hoped that our brethren will take these bonds and help this young school, where young men are being educated for the ministry, and other young people having an opportunity to get a Christian education.——H. H. Moore, our Greenville minister, preaches at Standard, nine miles away, on third Lord's day, at 3 p. m. There are a number of brethren near there and they expect to build a house of worship. ——The Hookerton district meeting was held with the Salem Church, Pitt county. W. G. Walker was one of the speakers.——The twenty-third annual state Sunday-school convention of North Carolina was held at Charlotte. The chairman of the Executive Committee said it was the best they have ever held.——Much attention is paid in this state to organized adult classes. There are the "Baraca" classes for young men and "Philathea" classes for young women. The Tabernacle Baptist Church, in Raleigh, has such a class of young men numbering 162. Their motto is "Young men at work for young men, all standing by the Bible and the Bible school." We will try to organize our men's class here and also that of the young women. I looked over the register of that convention in vain for the address of a Disciple, though there may have been some there. P. B. Hall, of Kinston, is one of the Executive Committee. The unity and harmony of this convention impressed me strongly with the thought of the desirability and need of a union that lasts all the year, and the shame of those thus working together for three days going home and putting up the fences again.——Last Lord's day at the evening service we received two by letter and one made the good confession. In our next letter we expect to have something to tell you about the Yeuell meeting, which began here May 1. Brethren, pray for us.—J. A. Hopkins, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Southeast Missouri Convention.

At Bloomfield there were 34 delegates present. E. J. Fenstermacher, of Poplar Bluff, acted as chairman in the absence of President Buxton. The convention was a success from many standpoints. The fourth Sunday in May was set as a Christian College rally day, to be observed by all our churches throughout the district. The object is to raise funds to secure to us the $25,000 building and grounds located at Dexter, given by her citizens to the Christian Church for a college, providing in 10 years we raise $10,000, to be placed on the institution in way of improvements.

The report of the committee on future work, which was adopted, recommended, among other things, an annual movable district meeting, as well as county meetings, to which every church should send a delegate; also that each county have its evangelist to reach every part by the centennial year. It called for closer affiliation with the state board's Sunday-school work, requested that the convention be advertised in county papers, asked churches to permit located ministers to use their time from the fourth Lord's day over any following fifth Lord's day in reorganizing or establishing churches in near-by places.—Mrs. J. W. Mott, Poplar Bluff.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. ## Southern California and Arizona.

This letter is written in the eighth month of our convention year in Southern California and Arizona. The work in the weak places is so interwoven with that in the strong that the progress of any part is the progress of the whole, and the record of each can not be independently kept. No less than 30 mission points have looked to our state board for help and counsel; five old fields have been placed on a plane of self-support and six new places have been entered with varying success; evangelizing agencies have sown the good seed and reaped the golden grain in continuous meetings with 12 congregations; six houses of worship have been dedicated to the Lord and seven more are as good as under way, and a high tide of co-operation and fellowship has set in which is certain to sweep us on toward greater things.

The business men's banquet in Los Angeles was a great event in the church of our metropolis. Fifty men, prominent in the activities of our 12 congregations in the City of the Angels graced this occasion with their presence. A splendid repast was served. C. C. Chapman presided as toastmaster and a number of spicy speeches were made, affording "a feast of soul and flow of wit" conducive to good fellowship. The importance of a social union or business men's league became apparent, and committees to form a permanent organization were named, consisting of J. G. Warren, C. O. Goodwin, R. J. Adcock, W. G. Wagner, S. J. Chapman and W. M. Miller. Then the strains of "Blest Be the Tie" rang through the banquet hall, prayer was offered and the first Business Men's banquet of the Disciples of Christ in Greater Los Angeles passed into history. J. V. Coombs swooped down from the north, unlike a wolf upon the fold, and in a short meeting added 30 to the church at Pasadena. Rainy weather greatly interfered with the meeting. The Pasadena church recently sold its property for $20,000 and will proceed at once to erect a house of worship that will more fittingly represent so valuable a jewel in "the Crown of the Valley," as is the church of Christ. Great courage and hope have taken possession of the little congregation at Ocean Park since George Ringo entered upon his ministry there. Austin and McVey have closed a good meeting at Rialto, where 32 were added to our new congregation, making it the strongest in that splendid orange colony. They are arranging to build at once. DeForest Austin has done good service, under adverse circumstances, during his short sojourn in Southern California. We understand he returns to Nebraska to fill important engagements. May he come this way again.

The new Main Street Church has incorporated, bought property and is now building a $1,500 chapel. E. H. Keller is pastor and he is leaving his "footprints in the sands of time" by his devotion to mission work in Los Angeles. Recently Providence and the Evangelizing Board put a union Sunday-school into the hands of Magnolia Avenue Church. They took vigorous hold upon it, characteristic of that remarkable congregation. E. W. Parker was made superintendent, and with him was associated C. O. Goodwin. Immediately a lot was purchased, a $1,500 chapel is nearly completed and thus is being securely laid the foundation of another church in our great metropolis. In March Grant K. Lewis and E. H. Keller, acting under the direction of the Evangelizing Board, rented a large hall on West Jefferson, in Los Angeles, and began a campaign to develop the situation in southwest Los Angeles. For three weeks they battled against the winds and floods. They report a good field for a permanent work, with the names and addresses of 30 families belonging to the Christian Church; two young men made the good confession and a Sunday-school is being organized. G. M. Anderson's acquaintance with the Riverside Church has ripened into a more intimate relationship, and he has been duly called and installed as permanent minister. J. I. Myers, after a period of helpful service at Downey, has been called to become pastor of the Highland Park Church. C. R. Moore has resigned at Colton. He has moved to Arlington, where he preaches.

Our Southern California fellowship and work sustains a great loss in the removal of R. P. Shepherd from Pomona to Berkeley. It is only in recognition of the need of our work at the State University for this strong, university trained man, that we let him go. Southern California is loyal to the core, to Berkeley Bible Seminary and Church, and we ask that this be put down as a part of our contribution to a work we love. The annual convention of the Christian Church in Southern California and Arizona will convene at Long Beach, August 9 to 19. Prof. Herbert L. Willett, of Chicago, has been engaged as Bible lecturer during the sessions. A simultaneous revival meeting for Southern California is in prospect. Correspondence has already been opened with evangelists and a central executive committee is being formed to have general charge of the work.—Grant K. Lewis.

Illinois Notes.

Havana, Cuba, is a very old city, but is growing rapidly. The houses are nearly all of stone or brick, covered with plaster and painted. Cream color predominates, but red, blue, brown and yellow are frequently seen. The ceilings are from 12 to 20 feet high. Outside doors are very heavy, large and strong, and iron bars are over all first-story windows; but few have glass windows. The Palace, the white house and national capitol building, is two or three stories high, of the usual architecture, but covers nearly a block, and is built around a hollow square, which is filled with beautiful tropical plants. President Palma was sick, so we did not have the pleasure of seeing him. The Prado, the Broadway of Havana, is very wide, and a most beautiful street, with a wide double row of trees, shrubs and flowers for ornamentation running through the center.

At 5 o'clock p. m., April 6, we took our place in the steamer for Mobile. The gulf was calm, and but few were sick. It was a delightful ride of 49 hours before we stepped upon the gangplank in Mobile Bay. It was Sunday evening, with hardly time to get located and hunt up the church for evening service. It was easily found, however, being on the best street of the city. Bro. Claude E. Hill, the minister, had just closed a very successful meeting with the church, adding some 50 members. He was well worn out and pressed me into service for the evening. There was a good audience and most profound attention. Three persons were baptized at the close of the service. The church is seven years old, having met for Bible study and communion every Sunday for four years without a minister. Brother Hill has been with them three years. They dedicated a new, elegant house last fall, worth about $25,000, all paid except what is due the Church Extension Board. The Sunday-school numbers about 150, a good Christian Endeavor, both Senior and Junior, and a church membership of 220. The American Christian Missionary Society deserves much credit for this successful work.

The writer spent a day in the National Park and National Cemetery of Vicksburg, Miss. The cemetery is beautifully laid out and elegantly kept. Of the 16,000 soldiers who sleep here a great many were from Illinois. Far more have been brought here from other battlefields than fell in this vicinity. A great many graves are marked "Unknown." Illinois had 79 regiments, with 32,000 soldiers, in the siege of Vicksburg—more, I was told, than from any two other states. Our own Col. J. W. Judy held a prominent place on the field, and is remembered with a granite block and an iron tablet. Illinois furnished infantry, artillery and cavalry and will spend $250,000 on the park. Its main marble dome monument, modeled, I am told, after Gen. Grant's tomb, will cost $200,000. It is nearly finished, and is a thing of beauty. When we remember that the great general was from Illinois, and that Illinois furnished the President during these troublous times, you will not be surprised that it is a very appropriate thing to do, to write Illinois Notes in Vicksburg, Miss. A day was spent at Edwards, Miss., at the Southern Christian Institute. Mt. Beulah, on which the buildings of the school stand, is a beautiful location. Here are forged the munitions of the greater war; here the soldiers are being trained for generalship in the army of our King, whose warcry is "The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ." No marble dome will mark the battlefields; possibly "unknown," only, may mark the resting places of many fallen heroes; but one there is within the "shadows keeping watch above his own." The Christian Woman's Board of Missions is supporting the work, and through its wise and efficient teachers giving an education continually to about 150 young men and women. Bro. J. B. Lehman and his good wife seem well fitted for leaders in this great enterprise. Brother and Sister Prout are efficient managers of the industrial and culinary departments. Principal T. M. Burgess, a graduate of Eureka College, is master of his situation and is pushing the work to higher grades and more thoroughness. His good wife has the general management of Belding Hall and is the teacher of the night schools. Miss Gardner, also from Eureka, is superintendent of the sewing department and is deeply interested in the industrial development of the large company of colored girls. So, you see, I am still writing Illinois Notes. This institution deserves better support and a larger patronage. What fields are open to the men and women of means! It is not alone for the college, the groundwork of them all, but in many other departments. May the Lord open the hearts of his people unto whom he has committed his goods that they may be good stewards, honoring the Lord with their substance.—J. G. Waggoner, Eureka, Ill.

Texas.

John Mullen, late of McConnellsville, Ohio, has become minister of the churches at Dalhart and Stratford, Tex., and Clayton, N. M.——Geo. E. Dew, of Holden, Mo., takes the work of district evangelist with the West Texas district. His headquarters will be at Sweetwater.——L. W. Jackson and wife also became West Texas evangelists. They began a meeting at Toyah, May 1. This gives us five missionaries in a field where we had none one year ago.——Ernest J. Bradley has spent two months at Port Arthur, resulting in a call extended to Tolbert F. Weaver, who graduates from the Bible department of Texas Christian University, to be their minister at Port Arthur. Brother Weaver has accepted. Brother Bradley is doing a similar work with the Second Church at Houston.——W. H. Winters has gone to work with the churches at Bay City and Eagle Lake. ——S. D. Perkinson has been setting in order the things that are wanting at Bay City.——Our Texas missionaries are setting in order the things wanting in the churches rather than making a special effort for additions.——The writer is trying to resurrect the church at Kerrville, with a fair prospect of sucess.——Edwin C. Boynton, now pastor of the University Church at North Waco, has been engaged as one of our evangelists.—— The Texas Christian convention meets at Waxahachie, June 11-15. Chalmers McPherson, of Waxahachie is chairman of the program committee. We expect one of the best conventions in the history of our Texas work. Come—J. C. Mason.

Virginia.

W. G. Johnston has resigned at Roanoke. He will engage in evangelistic work, for the summer at least. His Roanoke pastorate has been very successful, and he has held a number of splendid meetings elsewhere.——C. E. Elmore, who began his new work in the Harrisonburg field with such splendid prospects, has been ordered by his physician to cease preaching for one year. We hope the diagnosis is wrong and that Brother Elmore can continue his work.——Ernest Mobley, a student at Virginia Christian College, has gone to Fredericksburg for half-time for the summer.—— S. T. Burgess filled the pulpit of Wytheville Church April 29. It is hoped that he will take that work for the summer.——On April 29 W. G. Johnston dedicated the Lucas Memorial Church—very near the birthplace of C. S. Lucas. For some years there has been no church in this section. This house will be indeed a fitting memorial to that prince among preachers.——Third Church, Richmond, recently gave $80 to Virginia missions, the largest offering, we believe, ever made by that church to any mission.——Newport News, Hampton and Roanoke, three of our best churches, are yet searching for ministers.——On Easter Sunday Brother Burleigh held the first service in the Second Church on the Virginia side, in Bristol, Va.-Tenn. Brother Burleigh believes in reaching out.——A. J. Renforth, seven and one-half years pastor at Hampton, is now farming and preaching at Grafton, Olive Branch and Lebanon.——The Virginia Christian Missionary Society is planning a vigorous summer campaign.——A new house is now being erected at Petersburg, C. B. Richards, minister.——When R. E. Elmore had been eight Sundays with the Portsmouth mission he reported an average of one accession for each Sunday.— H. C. Combs, Financial Secretary V. C. M. S.

I have made a chemical analysis of a sample of COCA-COLA SYRUP, which I procured myself from an original parcel in the stock of the Powers-Taylor Drug Company.

The analysis was made expressly to ascertain if the syrup contains cocaine, and after a painstaking search, I have not found any indication of it.

Bethany, W. Va.

The church here not only made an offering that will provide for its own home missionary throughout the year, but manifests a most gratifying spirit of consecration in all phases of its life. Prof. Taylor is accomplishing marvels as minister of this church, as well as in training young men for the ministry in his department at Bethany College. This college has the largest attendance in its history, and only three in the entire school are not Christians.—W. R. Warren, Centennial Secretary.

Steubenville, Ohio.

Both church and Bible school work in this important center are being carried forward with marked success, under the leadership of M. J. Grable and his devoted wife. There were 510 in the Bible school last Lord's day, and they were really studying the Bible. La Belle View mission is being carefully fostered and will soon be a good church.—W. R. Warren, Centennial Secretary.

East Liverpool, Ohio.

The healthy condition of the church of this place was manifested last Lord's day in a Bible school attendance double that of the same Sunday of last year. All departments of the work are equally prosperous and a movement is on foot now for improving the magnificent site of the church with an adequate, modern building within the centennial years. . This church seems to appreciate the advantage of having the services of Brother and Sister E. P. Wise.—W. R. Warren, Centennial Secretary.

Ohio.

A. B. Moore has resigned at Alliance and accepted a call to the church at Ashtabula. This combination of energy ought to mean great things in Ashtabula. They have a mind to work up there, and Moore is a pusher.——The church at Perry has extended an invitation to W. E. Adams, of Wellsville, N. Y., to preach for them, beginning July 1. This he will do. All old Ohio men are glad to get back home, and we are always glad to welcome them.——Edgar D. Jones has been compelled to offer his resignation at Franklin Circle, Cleveland. His physician tells him he can not endure the climate of the lake front. This is a most serious separation on the part of both preacher and people. The finest of fellowship has been enjoyed in these three years of service together. The past year has been the best in the history of the church. They offered $11,121.71 unto the Lord, of which $2,944.91 were for missions. Brother Jones is considering propositions from some Kentucky churches. He will not only be missed by the Franklin circle people, but by all the brethren in and around Cleveland.——A. A. Honeywell, who graduates at Hiram this year, will become bishop at McConnellsville. John Mullen did fine work in this field, but had to seek the south for his body's sake. Honeywell will keep the ball rolling.——Alcinous Baker has changed his mail from Mt. Victory to Greenville, where he will minister in spiritual things.——Ira Durfee has accpted a call from the Broad Street Church in Akron, where G. W. Moore, now of Ionia, Mich., was pastor. This takes Brother Durfee from the evangelistic field.——

A Sick Regiment in China.

When the battle rages fiercest and where men are needed most strenuously, we are temporarily in quarantine from epidemics, and forced to quit work a while by nervous break-down. This is the passing cloud o'er the sunny skies of the far East. At Nankin, China, Prof. C. T. Paul has confluent smallpox; at Chu Cheo, W. R. Hunt a nervous break-down; at Bo Cheo, Dr. Layton has a nerve broken, and Leta, typhoid; from Wu Hu, T. J. Arnold and family are invalided home; Willie Hunt has tubercular elbow joint; James Ware, ophthalmia and Nellie Clark, measles.

E'en though a cross it be
That raiseth me;
Still all my song shall be,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee!"

Faith is a bridge leading from time over into eternity. Many witnesses and our own experiences reveal to us the solid piers under this end, and we may be sure those across the stream are even stronger or the entire structure would have collapsed ere this.

Be not disheartened if your faith will no yet remove mountains. It, too, must be like the blade, then the corn, then the full corn in the ear. It is as the light shining more and more unto the perfect day. But our faith, like the blade and light, must be continually increasing or we are opposing nature and calamity will ensue.

If we would but exercise the faith in God himself that we do in the seasons he hath appointed, how generously beside all waters we would sow of goodness, charity, missionary zeal, self-denial and all else enjoined of heaven, and how we would rejoice without ceasing in the prospect of golden harvests that would bless us abundantly and eternally.

It is not surprising men should have faith in God for his word has never been broken and his disposition toward us has always been beneficent; but if it is permissible to speak of any manifestation of God's as being surprising, it is the manifestation of his faith in us notwithstanding our countless transgressions, denials, betrayals and failures. Through faith he died for us, in the person of his Son. Through faith let us live and do for him.

Real faith enables us to enjoy now by anticipation much of the pleasure of the hereafter. Why should the heir to a rich estate suffer hunger and cold pending his entering into his inheritance? It would be better that some of what will afterward be his were advanced to him for present needs. Faith makes these advancements to us, and the inspiration of angels' songs and the cheer of the celestial home shining through helps us on our way.

All those achievements whose narration gives us the most splendid pages of history were originated, carried on and consummated in faith in men and God and the future. If the faculty of faith is an undeveloped part of your equipment for success in life, pause in your prayers, tarry a while in the school of faith—better far is credulity than infidelity. Rarely will the people have unreciprocated faith in a leader and mutual distrust can only end in failure.

Faith helps us to exalted conceptions of the everlasting promises because of the character with which it has invested their Author. There were only 5,000 stars in Abraham's sky, but faith was to him as a telescope enabling him to multiply system by constellation until he saw a sublime posterity looking to him as venerated patriarch. Possibly his faith revealed to him Calvary and Pentecost. So our increasing faith will glorify many a promise that now perhaps seems commonplace. It will make fairer the bridge that spans the grave and far more musical the bugle that sounds resurrection reveille.

BROKEN LIVES MADE OVER.— Jer. 18:1-6.

I walked in the woodland meadows.
  Where sweet the thrushes sing,
And found on a bed of mosses
  A bird with a broken wing.
I healed its wing, and each morning
  It sang its old sweet strain,
But the bird with the broken pinion
  Never soared as high again.

I found a young life broken
  By sin's seductive art.
And touched with a Christ-like pity
  I took him to my heart.
He lived with a nobler purpose,
  And struggled not in vain,
But the life that sin had stricken
  Never soared as high again.

But the bird with a broken pinion
  Kept another from the snare,
And the life that sin had stricken
  Raised another from despair.
Each loss has its own compensation,
  There's healing for each pain,
But the bird with the broken pinion
  Never soared as high again.

If sin has broken our lives, let us strive to show forth through a reformed career that there is balm in Gilead, and thus bring others in hope to the Great Physician and home at last.

So perverted and cynical are some that they seem to delight in the ruins of the wheel. As boys, they shattered window panes; as men, they destroyed characters and blasted reputations. From such wickedness, O Lord, deliver us.

O that children would commit themselves to God and keep close under the shadow of his wings, that satan should not break them over the wheel of sin and send them through life with the marks of his victory upon them even if "made over"!

A great peril is our doubts of God's willingness to heal our broken lives. Had David so doubted he never would have become "a man after God's own heart," nor had Peter preached the immortal sermon on Pentecost nor have entered into the holy of holies.

Unfortunate use has been made of the metaphorical Scriptures comparing man to the potter's clay. Some understand from them that we have no more initiative or responsibility in the shaping of our characters and careers than does the impassive clay. This is not a Scriptural doctrine. The clay is quarried, but we must of our own volition commit ourselves to God, and must decide with each revolution of the wheel to remain there for another. Only out of self dedicated lives can the great Potter make wares of great beauty and utility, and though the chief merit is with him, some is ours.

The broken vase may suffer no pain in the crash, but there is a distinct loss to the mercantile world, even if it is made up to the world artistic. It is different in our lives. To break them involves physical pain, while moral and spiritual nerve centers are more sensitive still. And there is loss, too, even if the broken life is recast and placed at last in a celestial niche. There is a present loss of a soldier in the Lord's army, of a vintner in his fields, of a priest in his temple and of immortal souls that might have been saved through the inspiration of an unfallen career. Earnestly let us pray that we may be among the "kept" lives.

THE GENTILE WOMAN'S FAITH.
—Mark 7:24-30.

Memory verse, 30.

Golden Text.—Great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt. Matt. 15:28.

Between the last lesson and the present one there has ocurred a great crisis in the life of Jesus and an important turning point in the method of his ministry. In spite of growing opposition from the priests and religious leaders, his popularity among the common people had continued to increase. There were two principal reasons for this. In the first place he had made many friends through his ministry of healing. The persons who had been healed and all of their friends would inevitably be friends of his. He had made no mistakes and no failures. In the second place, there had come to be a quite general expectation that this great teacher was he that should deliver Israel. The evidences of his divine power, his half-understood or misunderstood teaching about a new kingdom which he was to establish, the force of his unique personality with even his enemies felt—all of these things fitted into the current expectation of a Messiah who should be a great popular leader for the deliverance of the nation from the Roman yoke and the re-establishment of Zion with a more than Solomonic splendor.

It was apparently about the time of the feeding of the five thousand that this feeling of the common people about Jesus reached its height. John's narrative indicates this. The Master found it necessary to check the mistaken enthusiasm of his friends and to shake off those who followed him because of a misconception of his mission. He did this by a series of "hard sayings" (John 6), which puzzled and disappointed his hearers. "Upon this, many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him." The hour of his death showed no more heroism than this deliberate rejection of a mistaken popularity.

Henceforth the principal part of Jesus' ministry was to the twelve, the little group who had remained faithful when the others were forsaking him. The third and last period of the Galilean ministry begins with a retirement into the north with the twelve, and ends with the final departure for Jerusalem.

The only recorded incident of this first northern journey is the healing of the Syrophoenician woman's daughter who had an evil spirit. The probable nature of the affliction so described has already been discussed in connection with earlier lessons. The significant feature of this episode is the fact that the woman was a Gentile. Jesus appears to reproach her and deny her petition on this account. Verse 27 is one of the "hard sayings." Matthew 15:24 makes it still harder by making Jesus say: "I was not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

This emphatic statement as given in Matthew and Mark's milder equivalent of it must not be taken as a definition of the scope of the Messianic mission, but as a general statement of the necessary boundaries of Jesus' personal work. To accomplish the divine purpose, he must work through the Jews, and to do that he must he was at the very time narrowing the circle of those who received his "bread" to a very small group of his personal followers. This narrowing was in the interest of a wider and more permanent efficiency.

The healing ministry of Jesus was no- first work to them. As a matter of fact, ticed not only by the desire to relieve suffering, though that must have been always present, but also by the purpose to convey a religious message and advance the kingdom. He rebuked those who followed him merely to eat of the loaves and he might with equal force have rebuked those who asked his aid merely as a cheap and successful doctor. In dealing with a Gentile the religious significances of his healing work could be clearly indicated only by relating it to Judiaism. Hence the seemingly cruel words about "dogs" and "children."

Whatever offense his words alone might have given, and whatever ground they might give for the opinion that Jesus had a narrow national conception of his work, his deed changed the whole complexion of the matter, for he healed the woman's daughter and approved her faith and her assertions that the Gentiles should become participants in the blessing, which he had to bestow.

Winona by Thomas Kane.

Winona now 10 years old is fairly beginning to realize the results of what might be called her motto—Money-making Altruism. She has six foundation principles. They are the same that should characterize every Christian layman. Make all the money he can; take good care of his credit; take good care of his property; take good care of his family; provide reasonably for rainy financial days; do all the good possible with the remainder of the profits. To epitomize them in another form would be, Do all the good possible and make all the money possible to do it with.

The foundation principles governing the Agricultural Institute at Winona Lake and the trades schools at Indianapolis may be as briefly stated. They are, teach pupils not only to do things but why. Emphasize and dignify personal labor as of equal importance with mental in educational value. Combine theory with practice, study with work, and not undertake anything where this can not be done. Regard thorough Bible study and recitations as of supreme importance in the formation of character.

Two things permanently characterize successful modern business enterprise—strong men and organization. The names of the directors are sufficient evidence that strong men are managing Winona affairs. While a large majority are business men, the ministers on the board are in thorough accord with the religious as well as the financial management of the institution. Nearly half of the near 50 business men comprising the directory are presidents of the corporations with which they are connected. The remainder are prominent in their respective lines.

Now and then in modern times there have been individual examples of Christian men who have set a definite limit to their personal acquisition of money or property, also the income; all beyond that to be devoted to doing good, but so far as known to the writer Winona is the only institution ever incorporated by business men and run on business lines for the purpose of making money to be spent in the Master's work.

In the modern industrial world, the lines of enterprise in which the largest and surest profits can be honestly made can be numbered on the fingers of one hand. Among these are waterworks, electric light and electric railways.

TRY A WANT ADVERTISEMENT IN THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

Hundreds will testify to the effectiveness of advertising in our subscribers' want column. It will cost you only two cents per word, each insertion, to try it.

In respect to all of these the location of Winona happened to be exceedingly favorable—that is if anything ever "happens" in this world. Making the most of exceptional advantages, and as rapidly as possible, accounts in large measure for success up to this date and enables the management to forecast the future with all the confidence and assurance that human affairs will permit.

There is something inspiring in beginnings, in laying foundations, in sowing seed, in planting trees. There is such abundant room for visions and ideals, and what sweeter or more inspiring pleasure can there be in life than in watching growth, than in seeing visions and ideals unfold into realites?

In its early history the money-making features of Winona were largely visions; now as one by one the visions emerge into the sunlight of profit-making, the feelings of the management are about an equal mixture of gratitude, courage and resolution.

It is true that for years to come the profits from all departments must be spent in still further deepening and broadening the foundations, but every year the goal for which all are striving is coming nearer. The goal is the day when Winona shall take its place as one of America's greatest agents for good, especially along practical lines: not that kind of doing good for the means of which to carry it on money must be constantly solicited of the charitable and benevolent, but doing good with money self-made.

I could know, of course, but I do not, because it is unimportant, how much the capital stock of the different Winona enterprises designed to be money-making amounts to. This I know, however, that only one share is in each director's name: that that share is not in his possession but is still in the stock book; that his name is endorsed on the back of it and that in addition he has signed a certificate of trust which is attached thereto, in which he stipulates over his signature that he holds the stock only as trustee for the benefit of Winona institutions; thus, in case of his death, the share of stock in his name does not go to his heirs, it can be transferred by the company to his successor in office who will sign a like agreement to hold it in trust only.

GREEN.

On February 21 occurred the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Green, a faithful member of the First Christian Church, of this city, and a life-long disciple of Christ. She was born in Independence, Mo., July 20, 1827. She lived a long and beautiful life and has entered into that rest which remains for the people of God. The funeral service was conducted by A. L. Chapman, assisted by the writer. B. H. LINGENFELTER, Seattle, Wash.

JARROTT.

Mary McMurtry, daughter of Samuel McMurtry, and sister of Col. James McMurtry, of Tennessee, was born near Winchester, Ky., February 10, 1825. She was married to William Jarrott in 1851, who for about 20 years was one of the most laborious and self-sacrificing preachers in the state of Kentucky. In 1872 they moved to Pleasant Hill, Mo., where, in July, 1887, he died. I heard him preach when I was a boy, and I never forgot hearing him tell that he baptized his father. I knew him when, with a family to care for, he was a student of Kentucky University, at Harrodsburg. When, in 1886, I moved to Pleasant Hill, Mo., he put his strong arm around me and said, "God bless you!" On March 22 last Sister Jarrott left earth to join the loved ones gone before. In all his life work she shared, caring for home and children while he was telling the story to the unsaved and urging the Disciples to steadfastness in the faith. These parents were blessed in their children. Two sons, Judge W. L. and Bowman Jarrott, and six daughters, survive. All are Disciples. She would say to her children, "I hope your father and I may be able to stand before the Judge and say, 'Here are we and all those whom thou hast given us.' " A model wife, a devoted mother, a sincere Christian, a woman of rare culture and refinement, has gone to the place her Lord went to prepare for her.

LOCKE.

Mrs. B. L. Locke, who went home to "the Father's house on high" in the early morning of April 16, was born in Calloway county, Mo., August 1, 1829. Her maiden name was Emily A. Moore. Hers was a life rich in faith and love toward God, and in service toward all those about her. She was married to Mr. Locke in 1847. For more than 40 years they had resided in Mexico. Her husband and three sons (two of them with families) survive her. These all, most highly honored in church, social and civic affairs, had lived in a charmed community of their own, which was more than neighborly, where the family affection was fostered and the deepening ties grew deeper, until Sister Locke, a semi-invalid for a long time, had frequently remarked that the tender care of Mr. Locke and the family had kept her out of heaven for 20 years. Standing by the grave and the bank of flowers which loving hearts had offered in such profusion, and yet conscious that these were not commensurate with those she had scattered along her pathway for the joy of others, it was easy to quote the words of the Master: "I am the resurrection and the life," and in harmony with her simple, yet sublime, life to read a few lines from Tennyson, and so leave her with him whom she had trusted these years and from whom, by love, she had been detained awhile:

"Twilight and evening bell, and after that the dark,
And let there be no sadness of farewell when I embark;
For though from out this bourne of time and place the floods may bear me far,
I hope to see my pilot face to face when I have crossed the bar."

A. W. KOKENDOFFER, Mexico, Mo.

RUSSELL.

C. Z. Russell was born January 9, 1840, and married Ala Teagarden, December 10, 1867. Three sons and two daughters were born to them. He obeyed the Gospel in 1875 and departed this life April 21, 1906. A wife and two sons, Dr. John H. Russell, Boulder, Colo., and William O. Russell, Greenfield, Mo., survive him. His was a life of service, having served as an elder in the church at Greenfield, Mo., for years. He was admired and loved by all who knew him. His good works are influencing many a life. The funeral was conducted at the home in Greenfield, by W. B. Cochran, W. H. Watson and the writer.

"Fifty-Two Applicants."

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

A "Budget" paragraph in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST recently said "there were 52 applicants for the vacancy" in the pastorate of a certain church. That means that those 52 preachers were out of employment, or that they were expecting to be.

That case is not an extraordinary one; that 52 is only about an average of the number of applicants for every vacancy. This immense surplus of applicants indicates a surplus of preachers. It means that we already have more preachers than are needed by the churches. A "vacancy" causes a hustle, a jostle among the preachers that reminds one of the "scrimmage" in a game of foot-ball—and there is liable to be thumps, bumps, bruises and dislocations—especially dislocations.

Isn't this surplus of preachers, shown by 52 applications for one place, one of the reasons why many young brethren do not take a ministerial course in our colleges?

Would it not be in harmony with the Scriptures and common sense for the churches and the preachers to have a business arrangement to bring the churches and the preachers together in an orderly manner, so that all the churches would have preachers, and all the preachers would have churches?

Brethren, let us think and write and talk on this church and preacher problem until we think and talk ourselves into action. ALLEN HICKEY.

Des Moines, Ia.

The Disciples of Christ—Whither?

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

As a preacher and writer, I have been identified with the Disciples of Christ for more than 25 years. As Emerson said, "The character of the normal child is formed by its environment," was true of me. If there ever was such a thing as a "Campbellite" surely I was one. Among other things I learned from Mr. Campbell was to think for myself. Being a true disciple. I have had to unlearn many things which I once thought to be truth. Investigation will bring doubts; the hot crucible will separate the dross from the gold. We will believe any proposition taught us while young—and the only way to change us is to present to our mind an opposite proposition which carries with it a greater weight of testimony. None but thoughtful men ever change; and honest men want the whole truth. We call ourselves "Disciples of Christ"; how few of us have ever thought what these words mean? To affirm that I am a Disciple of Christ, I certainly mean that in matters of religion I go to Christ alone for instruction, "Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." The same lesson is comprehended in the following words of Jesus: "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." A disciple, then, must learn the lesson of life himself by using all the means at hand. There can be no such thing as human authority in the kingdom of God; for Jesus said, "All ye are brethren," "call no man Master," "he that is greatest among you shall be your servant." So every true disciple of Christ becomes a law unto himself by the anointing of the Spirit, and will not allow any one to dictate to him. With us the "heretic killer" is out of a job! Every intelligent man among us has a right before God and man to publish to the world his honest convictions on any subject, and no brother has a right to harshly criticise him. To us there are no church walls, no great men, no officials, no pope, no priest. All who sit at the feet of Jesus and learn of him, imbibe his spirit, are our full brethren, whether churched or unchurched, owned or disowned by men.

Now as Disciples of Christ we confess that the "Book of Life" is just opening to us; its pages will unfold to us, for ever and ever, for the lesson is as long as the life of Christ. We are beginning to lay aside our swaddling clothes; yes, we are beginning to walk a few steps from the shadows of our birthplace. It may alarm some of the children to see some of their fellows walking ahead of them, but then we are all "Disciples," and we will find out soon that the march of mind is onward. "The Declaration and Address" by Thomas Campbell came like hurtling thunder in a clear sky! Brother J. H. Garrison has recently sent a quiver through all our ranks, causing wild consternation and alarm in many quarters! Well, what is the matter? It is said that Brother Garrison has published a little book on the Holy Spirit (it has not come this way yet), and from quotations made from it I think it is not only up to date, but a number of years ahead of "date"! To my mind Brother Garrison has touched the greatest question before the Christian Church. I am so glad that this step has been made, for many of us did not know that our most learned preachers objected to a person praying for the Holy Spirit! I have known for several years that a child of God hungers and thirsts after the Spirit of God, just like we hunger and thirst after something to eat and drink to satisfy our natural bodies. Spirit-filled preachers will produce Spirit-filled members. It is coming like a tidal wave; let it come and lift our churches up from decay and formalism. We have the right name, we have the ordinances, and for God's sake let us get on our knees daily and ask God to fill us with the Holy Spirit. J. J. Haley's' article on the book is worth a ton of dead negations. Brother Garrison, push THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST! Many good brethren in the church will challenge your honesty; you will be misunderstood, misrepresented, and all that. But move on in the manner that has so long characterized you, and thousands and tens of thousands of saints will crown you with the laurels of victory.

Day by Day.

I heard a voice at evening softly say,
Bear not thy yesterday into to-morrow,
Nor load this week with last week's load of sorrow;
Lift all thy burdens as they come, nor try
To weight the present with the by and by.
One step and then another, take thy way—
Live day by day.

Live day by day.
Though autumn leaves are withering round thy way,
Walk in the sunshine. It is all for thee.
Push straight ahead, as long as thou canst see .
Dread not the winter whither thou mayst go,
But, when it comes, be thankful for the snow.
Onward and upward. Look and smile and pray—
Live day by day.

Live day by day.
The path before thee doth not lead astray.
Do the next duty. It must surely be
The Christ is in the one that's close to thee;
Onward, still onward, with a sunny smile,
Till, step by step, shal end in mile by mile.
"I'll do my best," unto my conscience say,
Live day by day.

Live day by day.
Why art thou bending toward the backward way?
One summit and another thou shalt mount;
Why stop at every round the space to count?
The past mistakes if thou must still remember,
Watch not the ashes of the dying ember.
Kindle thy hope. Put all thy fears away.
Live day by day.

PART II.

CHAPTER VI.

The next day after Raymund sent his note to Jack Bellfield in regard to his party. The Latin and French lessons were, as usual, except that, if possible, Mrs. Omer was colder and sterner of face and attitude. If Mrs. De Fer felt the fall of temperature, that French lady sought to equalize the atmosphere by her brightest smiles and cherriest manner. She was so sprightly, so impulsively kind and so ingenious in her explanations that she almost persuaded Nelsie Loraine that it was a pleasure to recite the lesson she only half-knew; however, Nelsie Loraine was not entirely beguiled. When the lesson was over Mrs. Omer accompanied Raymund to the front door, and there she said to him, "Somebody called for you at our telephone to-day, Raymund." And she looked at him as if she had at last caught him in some mischief of which she had long suspected him.

"Oh!" said Raymund, eagerly, "it must have been Jack Bellfield. I sent him a note yesterday, when Tom took the wagon to town."

"Who is the person?" asked Mrs. Omer, stiffly.

"Don't you know, Brother Bellfield's son?"

"I understand," said Mrs. Omer. "What I am speaking to you about it for is to tell you that I can not have our workmen using our telephone. We can not think of running down to the Hands' House to bring Tom or Fred into our drawing room where we might have company, or at any rate where we would be."

"Of course not," said Raymond. "I am sorry anybody called for me. Do you know what the wanted?"

"Certainly not," said Mrs. Omer. "When I found out he wanted you, I couldn't believe it at first—I hung up the receiver. You may go, now."

Raymund went to his own quarters, and the books which Mr. Omer had presented him through Mrs. De Fer seemd to weigh heavier than usual. Jack did not come out that following Sunday, but later in the week the rural mail delivery informed Raymund that the minister's son would come the Sunday after. As it was now only in the beginning of December, and Raymund's birthday party would not be till Christmas Eve, Jack wrote that "anyhow he didn't reckon there was any special rush about his getting out."

On the afternoon of the Sunday specified, Raymund was waiting for Jack when he saw the youth, rosy-cheeked and bright-eyed, ride up to the gate of the Omer yard on a borrowed horse. Raymund wildly waved to his friend to ride down to the lot back of the Hands' House, and Jack obeyed cheerfully. When the horse had been cared for they went into the middle room of the Hands' House, which was that occupied by the hands in the daytime, and by Tom and Baby at night. Tom and Fred were on hand, as their work on Sunday was light. Jack was almost at once on intimate terms with everybody. He was himself overflowing with high spirits, so interested in life and all its details that nothing was too humble or trivial to escape his observation. Baby was won over from the start, and, of course, Baby carried Tom with him. It was a cold day and all sat around the barrel-wood stove and ate apples from a bushel basket. And while they ate they discussed the party with animation. No one was snobbish enough to suggest the idea of peeling the apples, or using a knife. Each tore off as much with his teeth as could be tucked away in the cheek for crunching, and so earnestly did the work go on that after a first half-hearted attempt to count how many each ate, all calculations were devoted to whether or not there would be enough in the basket. The juice flew. The grinding, crunching, mashing, gritting would have been heart-rending to any listener unprovided with a weapon of defence—that is to say, an apple. As for Baby, he ate three at once, taking a bite from each in succession, like a circus juggler keeping three balls up in the air all the time. As for the apples themselves, they were large, mellow, deliciously flavored. Their juice seemed saturated with the perfumed summer breezes and permeated with the golden sunshine of autumn. Mr. Omer did not raise enough apples to ship, consequently the family and the servants had all they could eat. They were as good as Arkansas apples; I do not mean the kind that are eaten in Arkansas, but the kind that are raised there and shipped out of the state.

"One trouble about my party," said Raymund, "is this: it has got to entertain Nelsie Loraine, and yet there can't be any expense about it! So I've got to get up something that doesn't cost anything but work. Now, if you will all help, I have a plan, and I hope Jack has another.'"

"Of course I have asked Jack," munching away and shooting an apple seed over Baby's head.

"I would like to have a little play," said Raymund. "I'll tell you about it; it would represent a story from mythology that Mrs. De Fer told about in our lesson not long ago. She made us learn it in French, so I know Nelsie Loraine is up in the plot. I think a person ought to understand a story before they see it acted, so they'll know what is going on."

"If they don't" said Fred, in his high, thin voice, "they'd never find out from my acting!"

"I ain't no actor, myself," said Tom, feeling for another apple, "but I promised to help Raymund, here, and if it ain't to sing no song or make no speech or remember nothing, I'll act as much as you please."

Raymund explained: "It isn't any regular play, or anything like that; it's just representing a story from mythology. It is called 'Prometheus in Chains.' You know the ancients thought that there were a great many gods, and Jupiter was the head of all of them. Now, Jupiter had made up his mind that mortals should never have any fire, so he told all his gods to keep the fire in heaven and never let any get to earth."

"I thought the fire was in the other place," remarked Fred, working his ears back and forth.

"Say!" cried Tim, "that story makes me feel cold." He opened the stove and crowded a thick stick into its glowing throat.

Raymund continued: "But one of them named Prometheus, thought mortals ought to have fire, and he stole some and carried it down to the earth and gave it to the blacksmiths. And men found out it was a good thing, so everybody got to using it."

"Sorter got the fashion," Fred commented, nodding wisely, "like all these here fads."

"Now," Raymund continued, "when Jupiter found out the fire was stolen, he was very much worked up, because he thought men would get as powerful as the gods. So he took Prometheus and chained him to a rock, and every day a vulture came and tore out his liver and ate it up, and every night his liver grew in again."

"Gracious!" exclaimed Tom, pausing with his mouth half-open and an apple poised for a bite.

"And every day," Raymund went on, "the nymphs came and danced for Prometheus, and congratulated him because he had been such a blessing to the world. And they taught him that it was worth suffering all he suffered, just to know he had done so much for mankind. So Prometheus learned to endure his fate, and to be glad he suffered. He was a hero!" As Raymund finished, his blue eyes glowed and his fair hair trembled with enthusiasm. There was a rather solemn moment, for everybody felt queerly that Raymund meant his words with unusual intensity, but that he had not meant to reveal his feeling. Then Tom bit his apple and said, "Wasn't his liver never growed back in for keeps?" And Fred said, "What's your idee, Raymund, of us acting that there? We couldn't fix up a place nice enough to look like heaven without buying a lot of gold-foil or something."

"We'll take the story after the fire was stolen," said Raymund. "Prometheus stands on the stage, chained to a rock. Jupiter comes in and reproaches him for stealing the fire. Prometheus doesn't answer. He doesn't know what to say. Jupiter cries, "The Vulture shall come!" and so on, and goes out. Then the nymphs come and sing or talk and dance. And at the end Prometheus is satisfied. It wouldn't take any acting, and Nelsie Loraine would like it—it would be something unusual. I think the main thing about a party is to have something unusual."

"They ain't no doubt of it being unusual," said Tom. "Well, I'll be Prometheus if all I have to do is to be chained to the rock. I can do that all right."

"I'll be Jupiter," said Jack, "and wear a gilt crown and wings, and swell around generally."

"Don't ask me to be no nymph," said Fred, "for I don't want to dress up like a maid, and I can't dance; besides I don't believe in dancing."

"Of course we don't believe in dancing," said Jack, "but your hopping up and down, Fred, wouldn't be the same as dancing."

"I ain't a-going to so much as hop," said Fred, decidedly. "If dancing is wrong, as I think it is, no hop for me. I'm going to keep my feet flat to the floor. I see you all are dwindling down things for me to be a nymph," he added, growing more positive, "but I will not be a nymph!"

"Yes," Raymund confessed, "I hoped you would be a nymph and wear an old dress, and be a woman. I knew Nelsie Loraine would enjoy that."

"I expect she would," said Fred, "but I've got too much whiskers, anyhow, and you can be a nymph, yourself!"

"I'll be the nymph, then," said Raymund. "I'll send the story to Rhoda, and ask her to fix it all up in poetry."

"There is one thing I would be willing to be," said Fred, fearing he had not responded as generously as Tom, "though I am free to confess it would be agin the grain; but I would consent to be the Vulture."

Tom looked at him and said, "If I am Prometheus you wouldn't never git a square meal offen my liver! What's to be did with Baby while we're carrying on and making ourselves ridiculous?"

"I've thought that all out," said Raymund, triumphantly. "It being a scene of Jupiter, they ought to be lots of thunder. We'll fix Baby with a pan of some kind and let him beat it all through the piece, and make it so it will roll and reverberate."

"Like a orchestry," Fred nodded. "That's fust-rate. Now, Jack, what's your plan?"

Religion in the Face.

A beautiful story is told of a young lady missionary in Japan whose peaceful face witnessed for Jesus.

Miss B—— was traveling by steamer from one Japanese port to another. On the same boat was a Japanese merchant, whose business anxieties had so worried and annoyed him that he was seriously contemplating suicide. He noticed Miss B—— sitting quietly by, looking over the waters with such an expression of peace upon her face that he found himself turning to look at her again and again.

He did not know her, but said to himself, "It must be she is one of the foreign Christians. Perhaps it is something in her religion that makes her face so calm and bright."

Addressing her with profound respect, he made known his strange request and sorrowful reason for asking the way that gave the heart a peace so great that the face spoke it in every look. He listened to Miss B—— as she told him the Gospel story, and it made such a deep impression upon him that he resolved to accept as his own the Savior whose gift is peace.

Does your face and mine bear testimony that we have "been with Jesus."—Western Christian Advocate.

The Crop the Office Boy Sowed.

Jack was office boy up in the top of a big nineteen-story building. One day he was sent to the postoffice on an errand which took him to the money order department in the big stone building. While standing there awaiting his turn and wishing that it was Saturday afternoon, so that he could go to see his cousins in the country and help them "raise crops," he saw an Irish woman push her way up to another window and heard her explaining to the clerk that she wanted to send "tin dollars" to her mother over in the "ould country."

The clerk, in no very good humor, handed her a blank; but the woman only stood and looked at it in a puzzled way, and finally made her way back to the window, repeating: "I want to send tin dollars to me mother."

"Well, fill out your blank and then come back here, but not before," was the sharp reply.

Again the woman stood and stared blankly, first at the clerk and then at the paper in her hand. She did not know what to do. Just then Jack awoke from his dream about sowing grain down on the farm, and stepped over to the woman and said. "Please let me help you fill that out."

"Sure. God bless ye!" answered she. And the grateful look which she gave Jack when it was done, and the hearty thanks, made him think as he went away that he had been sowing a crop of something better than wheat—human kindness.—Exchange.

Some Things Animals Teach Us.

The woodpecker has a powerful little trip-hammer.

The jaws of the tortoise and turtle are natural scissors.

The framework of a ship resembles the skeleton of a herring.

The squirrel carries a chisel in his mouth, and the bee the carpenters' plane.

The gnat fashions its eggs in the shape of a life-boat. You can not sink them without tearing them to pieces.

A porcupine's' bill is strengthened by ribs in the same way that the iron masts of modern ships are strengthened.

The diving-bell imitates the water spider. It constructs a small cell under the water, clasps a bubble of air between its legs, dives down into its submarine chamber with the bubble, displacing the water gradually, until its abode contains a large, airy room surrounded by water.—Kind Words.

"Twenty Heathen Altars."

I was sitting in the session of our North India conference, and a Hindustani preacher was giving his report, and in it I noted the expression, "During the past year in my district twenty heathen altars have been torn down." It occurred to me that such a statement, so common among us here, would be interesting and inspiring to our friends in the homeland. Every one of those altars represented a circle of heathen worshipers, and for those altars to be torn down means that those worshipers are now sitting at the feet of Christ.

I turned to a brother at my side, and said, "How is it on your district?" He replied, "Fifty-seven altars have been torn down on my district within twelve months." I turned to another, who told me that heathen altars were being torn down all over this district. What is going on in these three places is going on all over India. Brothers and sisters, at home, while you are working and praying and collecting money for missions, remember that the altars and idols of India are falling—torn down by the hands of their votaries, and in their places are being erected the altars of our Christ.—J. N. West, in The Western Christian Advocate.

"Gather Out the Stones."

"It is such a stony little path between here and Mrs. Harvey's that I can't bear to go over it," said Jim.

"And Dick Harvey doesn't like it any better when he comes over here," said Frank. "I heard him say he had got ever so many bruises in that path. He was grumbling about it yesterday."

"Why don't you clear the way between here and your neighbor's?" asked Mr. Morris. "Much better do that than keep grumbling about it."

"Why, we should never get all the stones out of that path," cried Jim.

"Not all in one day, nor by taking all the stones at once," said the father. "But if each of the boys who crosses there would take a stone out of the way every time he goes, the work would be done. Try it."

The boys did try it. Half a dozen young lads who used the path helped, and the path was cleared.

This is exactly the way to make it easier and pleasanter for others in this world. Let each one make it his business, as he goes through life, to take some little hindrance out of the way whenever he can. Little faults should be cured, and little temptations that cause unwary feet to stumble should be removed.—Children's Friend.

The Monkey and the Captain.

BY SOPHIE M'KENZIE.

"Be sure and bring me home a monkey." This was the last thing Esther had said to her papa as she put her arms tightly around his neck and kissed him good-by.

Esther's father was the captain of a ship that went on long cruises after whales. On the last voyage the mate of the ship had brought home a monkey. Capt. Hathaway had told Esther such delightful stories about this monkey and his funny tricks that Esther could talk or think of nothing else.

Editha Louise, her favorite doll-daughter, was scarcely looked at these days, and her pet cat, Punch, had a hard life because he couldn't play monkey to suit Esther. One night she dreamed that Editha Louise came to her leading by a gold chain Punch, changed into a monkey with a red cap and velvet coat. How happy Esther was! But just as she was going to kiss Editha and take the monkey, she woke up. The moonlight was streaming into the room, and there sat Editha Louise in her chair, stiff as a poker, and Punch was sleeping peacefully at the foot of her bed! Editha Louise never knew how near she came to a severe spanking, and Punch could not make out with all his little pussy wits why he was so suddenly pushed on the floor. He hadn't done anything!

Well, papa had promised her that when he came home again he would bring her the jolliest monkey he could find. Every letter mamma wrote to him had in it a hand painted one from Esther saying:

Dear Papa: I love you very much. Come home soon. Do not forget my monkey.
Your own little girl, ESTHER.

Before leaving the last port on his homeward voyage Capt. Hathaway bought a lively little monkey. He gave a grinning

One of the interesting features of the rapidly increasing services this House is rendering the brotherhood is the great gain in our output of Sunday-school supplies. Brother Dowling's cost no more than inferior sorts. Samples sent on application.

Always consult us about Christian psalmody. "Living Praises" is an excellent song book we sell for $15 and $20 per hundred. Perhaps the best collection of songs and devotional readings used by our churches is "Gloria in Excelsis," $40, or $50 and $75 per hundred. This latter book has gone to every state where we have any considerable strength.

Every week we are told of ministers publicly commending The Christian-Evangelist as "the best paper in the brotherhood." We appreciate this, but how these brethren could clinch those kind words through a personal solicitation that would result in The Christian-Evangelist's actually becoming a pastoral helper in some additional homes!

That most of our new subscribers are coming from country and city one and two at a time is evidence no modern skilled methods are being employed to increase the circulation of this paper, but the rapidity with which its circulation is increasing is proof that it is satisfying to an intense and widespread spiritual craving. Among the large lists of new subscribers, however, coming during the past week and at the regular $1.50 rate, we notice 16 from Rossville, Ill., H. H. Peters, minister; 12 from Catlin, Ill., Lewis R. Hotaling, minister, and 67 additional to those reported last week, from Danville, Ill., S. S. Jones, minister.

black native five yards of green and yellow calico, two spools of coarse thread, a paper of big-eyed needles and a sharp knife for it. The native said:

"Pedro like little womans very much. Him too many funny."

On the ship Pedro could go where he pleased. But he would not come when he was called unless he wished to, and he did a great deal of mischief. He used to climb up the rigging where bunches of bananas hung to ripen, pick them off, take a bite and throw them at the sailors. This was more fun for Pedro than for the jack tars, and it made even them dizzy when they tried to catch him.

One day a loud sneezing was heard, and Pedro was found in the steward's room with a box of pepper and a piece of salt junk. He had seen the men use the pepper and he tried it, but he tried too much of it.

Small articles could not be found and the captain knew Pedro had either hidden them or thrown them overboard. The only thing to do was to tie Pedro. Capt. Hathaway put a collar around his neck and fastened him outside the cabin door. Poor Pedro! How sorry and ashamed he felt! If he could have spoken, he would surely have promised to be a good monkey, if they would only let him go.

When he found there was no getting away he amused himself as well as he could. There was a black pig, John, that ran around on the deck. Whenever he came near enough Pedro jumped on his back and rode the length of his rope. John soon learned to keep out of his way.

In a coop just beyond Pedro's reach were some hens. He would chatter and rush toward them to see them fly around and cackle in terror. The hens were moved away and Pedro had not had a chance to ride pigback for a long time. It was a very dull world for a gay monkey. If he could only tease somebody.

The captain's clothes were soaked in a tub. How easy to throw them overboard! No one was looking! Slyly and carefully he picked out a nice shirt, rolled it into a ball, and flung it over the ship's side. But Pedro's master saw him and he shook him hard. The monkey drew down his face like a naughty child and went inside the cabin and cried.

After the captain had been gone awhile Pedro crept out again, and threw a frock over to swim with the shirt. Capt. Hathaway was very angry. He was not used to being disobeyed. This time he whipped Pedro, and told him if he threw another thing overboard he would throw him over after it.

Either the monkey did not understand, or else he did not believe the captain would keep his word, anyway within an hour a red handkerchief was riding on the blue waves. Before Pedro knew it his rope was cut and he was struggling in the sea. He tried to swim after the ship which was fast leaving him behind.

The captain saw his frightened little face, and he thought of Esther, how disappointed she would be. He liked Pedro too. He ran to the stern of the ship, caught up a coil of rope and threw it to the monkey with all his might. It just reached him. Pedro grasped it with ten little fingers. Hand over hand he climbed along on the rope while the captain pulled him in. It was a pretty wet, scared-looking monkey that crawled up over the side of the ship. Capt. Hathaway was too glad to have him back to scold him. He rubbed him off and put him in a sunny spot to dry. Pedro was not thinking of using the pig for a horse or chasing the hens now!

From that day Pedro always minded the first time he was spoken to.

Esther danced with delight when she saw her father come into the yard with the monkey riding on is shoulder. It was not a dream this time. Pedro was a real monkey and he loved Esther just as the native said he would. But not until she was a young lady and read her father's log-book did she ever know how near she came to losing Pedro.—The Congregationalist.

Man as a Husband

We looked into a popular collection of quotations—one of the volumes in which are gathered the wisdom and sentiment of the centuries—to find what the sages and poets had to say about the husband. There was nothing to reward our search; in the thousand pages he had not the distinction of a caption. But for the wife there was a different story. She was embalmed in the most beautiful phrases that prose or poetry could devise—and she deserved them all. We made bold to ask a poet, whose verses you read in the magazines, if the husband—the faithful, steady-going kind—had ever been a source of inspiration to his muse. He accused us of joking, and declared he would rather undertake to write an ode to the hired girl.

We made note of the plays for an entire season and found the husband dramatic only when he was a failure. We asked a successful playwright why a good husband could not be dramatized. He laughed. "It would be deadly," he said. We read the books of the year and found the good husband a lay figure. We asked a brilliant woman—a novelist—why the good husband could not be made a hero. "The idea!" she replied. "Every page would be a yawn."

We go to church and we find in our data of many sermons tributes to womanhood and motherhood, but of the husbands, whose patient plodding makes so much of the real heroism of life, there is no recollection. We asked a preacher whose church is big and who never addresses empty pews if he had in his barrel a tribute to husbands. "Yes," he admitted. "I used it once. It—well, it was not a success. The congregation could swallow Jonah and the whale, but not my model husband."—The Delineator.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Volume XLIII. No. 22.

ST. LOUIS, MAY 31, 1906.

AS the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath, so truth was given for man to handle, to study, to assimilate, to reincarnate under the forms of his own life and thinking. It is truth, reincarnated and reappearing in the varying forms of human experience, in the varying accents of human thinking, that is the real extension of the Incarnation of the Son of God;—this, rather than the institutional authority of a Church defining truth in certain terms and imposing those terms upon the acceptance of the individual. And, apart from the sadness of that human infirmity whereby we tend to malign and to oppose what is not to our mind, it is most wholesome that men shall differ, each thereby being true to himself before God, and, after the manner of his own possibilities and necessities, so receiving Christ.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Towards Pittsburg.

Pittsburg ought not to be on our eastern frontier by 1909. One reading Brother Streator's article below will be convinced, that through proper efforts we can throw our eastern boundary line of power and influence for good far on toward the Atlantic. Bro. J. H. Garrison of The Christian-Evangelist, relying on the generous co-operation of personal friends, has pledged a new church for New Hampshire and is now gathering funds for that purpose, having already in faith engaged one of our best evangelists to inaugurate an evangelistic campaign in Manchester in July. Let others take similar initiative and in tune with our Home and the New England missionary societies make earnest efforts to make New England a stronghold of apostolic churches and primitive Christianity.

New England and the Centennial.

BY M. L. STREATOR.

In his great history of the United States, George Bancroft, tracing the principles of American freedom to their origin, describes the departure of the Pilgrim Fathers from Leyden to America. He characterizes their pastor, John Robinson, as "a man not easily to be paralleled, of a most learned, polished and modest spirit." He declares that Robinson anticipated "the sublime lessons of liberty that would grow out of their religious tenets," and gives this report of his farewell to them:

"I charge you before God and his blessed angels, that you follow me no farther than you have seen me follow the Lord Jesus Christ. The Lord has more truth yet to break forth out of his holy Word. Luther and Calvin were great and shining lights in their times, yet they penetrated not into the whole counsel of God. I beseech you, remember it—'tis an article of your church covenant—that you be ready to receive whatever truth shall be make known to you from the written Word of God."

The Puritans fled from persecution to America to found a new nation on the principle of freedom to worship God according to the light which he should cause to break forth out of his holy Word. Whatever light breaks forth out of his holy Word is the light of the Lord. But men are slow to perceive it. Yet when the light shines in the darkness, the darkness can not stay its progress. Sooner or later the light of divine truth will dispel all the darkness of ignorance, error and sin.

"Receive whatever truth shall be made known to you from the written word of God." What a glorious mandate! New England was founded upon it. The Puritans did not comprehend all that was involved in it. What Thomas Campbell said in his famous Declaration and Address was but a development of it. One of his sententious expressions, giving voice to it, has become the slogan of the Disciples of Christ. "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." Here is the point of contact between the children of the Puritans who founded New England, and the Disciples of Christ, who seek to restore the primitive gospel as the means for recovering the lost unity of the Church of Christ. We are in agreement concerning the fundamental principle of religious life. How can we get the people of New England to see this harmony of radical principles and accept its consequences? God overrules all things, and is guiding them as well as us towards the accomplishment of his own gracious and glorious purposes. The religious reformation wrought under God through the Disciples of Christ is but the logical development of the Congregational principles and policy of New England. The divine promise is this, "They shall flow together to the good things of the Lord." (Jer. 31:12.) May he enlarge our hearts to perceive the truth and the demands of the times and the occasion. How our hearts will thrill with gladness when we all, according to his sure and unfailing promise, gather ourselves together, and through the unity of the Spirit become one in Christ our Lord! It is coming, because Christ has prayed for it, and God has promised it.

The original population of the present New England was English in race and Puritan in religion. This established a firm foundation for the social fabric. The outgoers and the newcomers are like the ceaseless tides ebbing and flowing over the enduring rocks of the ages. What a blessed basis was established here for the upbuilding of human society! When the tide is high the rocks can not be seen. So our foundation sometimes is overwhelmed and obscured by the incoming rush of foreign invasion. Yet even then the Anglo-Saxon elements dominate, control and direct it all.

Such being the condition of things, this is a great and a grand mission field. But it is one of grave and peculiar difficulties. The floating population is irreligious, indifferent, atheistic or Romanistic. The staid New England people are attached to the churches of their fathers. But some of them have whirled off from the central "sun of righteousness" into "the unknowable" orbits of "wandering stars," drifting aimlessly into the deepening gloom of enduring darkness. This field is a difficult one in which to get a hearing for a new people, although they represent the ancient people and preach the primitive Gospel.

When the real New Englanders hear Our Plea fairly and fully presented so that they see what it really is, I am persuaded that they heartily will accept it. For it is essentialy the plea of their fathers carried out to its legitimate results. The time is coming when they will give heed to the farewell charge of Pastor Robinson, and will receive whatever truth shall be made known to them from the written word of God. Oh, ye Christian men and women who love the old Jerusalem Gospel, do not settle on your lees, do not cease earnest and vigorous efforts till the people of New England have heard and learned and accepted the ancient Gospel, freed from the thraldom of the doctrines, traditions, commandments, philosophies and vain deceits of men. For us New England is the most important mission field in America, and consequently in the world. Feed the hungry, clothe the naked, relieve the afflicted, care for the sick, break every yoke, let the oppressed go free, ask for the old paths, seek the good way, send out the light and the truth, search for the lost, rescue the perishing, save our race and our nation that we may send God's salvation to the ends of the earth, restore the primitive Gospel in teaching, ordinances, character and life, advance with all God's children into the unity of the faith, and keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace; "then shall break forth in darkness thy light, and thick darkness shall become as the splendor of noon."

Centennial Propagandists.

I wish to take this opportunity to express my appreciation of The Christian-Evangelist and of the good work that it is doing for the cause we all love so well. May God prosper and bless those who are at its head. I read it with great interest, especially those articles upon the History of Christianity. I trust that your highest hopes of success may be realized, and I renew my pledge of loyalty to it.—Horace Siberell, minister.

I have been trying to serve my Master for 69 years. My hearing is so dull I can no longer hear our pastor, but I can still read my Bible and The Christian-Evangelist, advocating Christian union through federation. I know how to sympathize with sectarians. I was one for nearly 30 years, but for the last 40 years I have more charity (it hides a multitude of sins). I will still do what I can for The Christian-Evangelist.—J. M. Major, Seattle, Wash.

I am almost 83 years old. Have been a member of the church for over 50 years. Have taken The Christian-Evangelist ever since it has been published. I heard Brother Garrison make his graduating speech at Abingdon College. I consider The Christian-Evangelist the best paper of our brotherhood, and its Editor one of the ablest, if not the ablest, of our writers. Some of our brethren are opposed to Brother Garrison on account of his position on church federation or co-operation. They say they are in favor of Christian union, but they do not want to go near them. It reminds me of the story that used to be told of the mother telling her boys she wanted them to learn to swim, but not to go near the water till they could swim. —J. M. Saylor, Hopkins, Mo.

How They Do It in D. C.

The Senate committee on the affairs of the District of Columbia has favorably reported a bill imposing on the public service corporations of the federal district an additional tax of 12 per cent of their net earnings. At present the railroads pay 4 per cent and other corporations 5 per cent of their gross receipts. The new tax is in addition to the old one. The bill provides that any corporation may, at its option, pay a tax of 1½ per cent on the appraised value of its property, including the value of its franchise, instead of the 12 per cent of its net earnings. The corporations to which this applies are the street railway, telephone, electric light and power and gas companies. Franchises run from year to year in the District of Columbia, and can, therefore, be revoked on short notice. We have not the data at hand for determining whether the proposed tax is a just one or is confiscatory, as the officers of the corporations declare. But the case illustrates how things are done where the corporations to be taxed are without political influence. The tariff schedule would be a very different document if the representatives of the great protected industries were all residents of the District of Columbia.

Tobacco.

Habitual smokers are tolerably well hardened to the accusation that the nicotine which tobacco contains is a deadly poison. But perhaps they will pause and take notice when they see the formidable list of other ingredients which the smoker absorbs. According to a writer in Harper's Weekly, tobacco smoke contains not only nicotine but also pyridic bases, methylamin, sulphuretted hydrogen, prussic acid, oxide of carbon, an etherized empyreumatic oil, formic aldehyde, ammonia, pyrrol, butyric acid, carbonic acid, steam of water and resinous products, including phenol. The first seven of these, in the order names, are said to be particularly toxic, not to say deadly. This is truly a fearsome list of poisons. Of course, one must admit that most of these ingredients are present in very limited quantities, and also that the analysis of the normal human body shows the presence of some elements, such as arsenic, which we are accustomed to consider the foes of human life. So perhaps these things are not quite as deadly as they sound, though they are doubtless bad enough. Various experiments have been made to eliminate the noxious qualities of tobacco smoke. The authority cited above says that the filtration of the smoke through cotton-wool impregnated with perchlorate of iron eliminates nearly all of the nicotine, most of the pyridic bases and some of the ammonia. Since the smoke has been so thoroughly analyzed, it would be a satisfaction to know which of the elements it is that gives cigarette smoke the smell.

Henrick Ibsen.

Norway's greatest poet and dramatist, Henrick Ibsen, died May 23, at his home in Christiania. Ibsen was great in power of intellect, great in literary and dramatic art, and great in his capacity for being misunderstood and maligned. He was a student of society, especially in its more morbid and abnormal aspects. This led to the common judgment that he himself was morbid and abnormal. But an artist may deal wholesomely and normally with morbid and abnormal phenomena, as a physician deals with disease without being infected by it, or, as Shakespeare on several occasions, dealt sanely with insanity. So Ibsen was much more wholesome than his subject matter. His conception of art had little relation to what most of us consider beauty. Like Zola, he did not shrink from the ugly, the repulsive or the improper; and like Zola also, he was often indecent, but never immoral or even unmoral. His method of dramatic construction was very simple. One scene and four or five characters furnished all the paraphernalia which he employed in some of his strongest dramas. It was Ibsen's misfortune to attract to himself a company of Ibsenites who made a cult of him and furnished a violent contrast to the harsh critics who constantly beset him. He cared not much more for one group than for the other, and looked to the future to furnish the justification and wise appreciation of his methods.

The Lesson of San Francisco.

Every great disaster furnishes material for the education of the human race. The San Francisco calamity has already furnished the theme for many sermons. Some of them have embodied the philosophy of Job's friends and interpreted the destruction of the city as a punishment for its wickedness and a warning to other communities. Others of saner sort have made it an occasion for inculcating the virtues of courage, patience and brotherly love. To all it has suggested the uncertainty of life and the vicissitudes of fortune.

But there are scientific as well as moral lessons in the ruins. Taking it for granted that the city is to be rebuilt on the old site, where it will again be subject to earthquake shock with consequent fires and failure of the water system, the question is asked: How may the new city be made practically earthquake-proof and fire-proof? The answer may be read in the wreck of the old city. There were, in general, three sorts of buildings in San Francisco: steel-framed office buildings and business blocks, brick and masonry buildings of less height for business purposes and some of the larger residences, and frame dwellings. The second class went down before the earthquake. The third class, having greater flexibility and elasticity, resisted the earthquake, but went down before the fire. Only the first class withstood both trials. The lesson of the engineer and architect then, is this: The new city should be built with as little as possible of either brick, masonry or wood. For business buildings the proper type is a steel frame covered with concrete. In this combination the steel gives the needed flexibility and resistance to bending and twisting stresses, while the concrete protects the steel from the warping effects of heat. This also was clearly indicated in the Baltimore fire. It does not appear that height is necessarily a source of danger if the building is properly constructed. Some of the tallest buildings in San Francisco stood the test best; for example, "The Call" building, a steel frame construction which stands secure in all its 18 stories in the midst of the wreckage of lower buildings of brick and stone. For smaller buildings and residences, the recommendation is for re-enforced concrete, a type of construction not necessarily much more expensive than frame, and which would resist all ordinary attacks of weather, wind, earthquake and flame.

An Editor's Rights.

A novel case is on trial in the United States district court in Colorado to determine whether an editor has a right to alter manuscript submitted for publication. The suit is against Harper Bros., publishers, for alleged alteration of manuscript submitted by Walter J. Davis and publication of the same as revised under the author's name and without his permission. The plaintiff claims that when a publisher accepts a manuscript he enters into an implied contract to publish the same as received or not at all. As a parallel case, he says that a man who hires a horse from a livery stable tacitly agrees to return him without mutilation. But what if the horse casts a shoe, or goes lame, or was sick in the first place? Would the person who hired such a horse be liable for damages if he should have the horse shod or cured? Would it be a sufficient plea in an action for damages for the owner to say that he preferred to have horses lame or sick? In such a case, we imagine that the decision would turn on the question of fact as to whether the horse had been actually injured or benefited in the judgment of disinterested experts. So in the literary case. If the manuscript was actually injured, the publisher ought to pay for his editor's clumsiness. But if it was improved, the mere fact of change should not be held against him. It would be a great unkindness to most authors to publish their writings verbatim, spelling, punctuation and all.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

IV. The Protestant Era; The Period of Reunion.

8. Change of Attitude Toward the Movement, on the part of the Religious World.

The attitude of the religious world, generally, toward this movement for Christian union, in its beginning and for many years afterwards, was that of hostility. Protestantism in the main seemed to have settled down in the conviction that denominationalism was the normal and permanent condition of the Church, to disturb which by any plea for union was to disturb the divine order of things. The plea of the Campbells and of Stone for a return to the unity of the apostolic church by a return to New Testament Christianity in its simplicity and catholicity, seemed to the religious leaders of that age as an idle dream—a Utopian scheme which was neither practicable nor desirable. The leaders of this movement were denounced as schismatic and the builders of a new sect. It is not easy to see why they should have been denounced on this account. If denominationalism be, indeed, the divine order of things, why, then, should not these men have been hailed as true fellow-workers in bringing to birth a new denomination? But, strange to say, this inconsistency has always marked the course of those who have defended the present denominational status quo.

But, after all, it is not strange that this movement, in its origin, met with bitter opposition and that its advocates were looked upon as disturbers of the peace of Israel. To that age, at least, it seemed a most revolutionary program that was proposed by the Reformers. It involved the abandonment of all existing human creeds as bonds of union or communion; of all party names as promoting and perpetuating divisions, and the acceptance, instead thereof, of the common rule of faith and practice, the common faith and the common religious names, which all God's people would be willing to accept. At the present time, when the power of creeds has waned, when denominational names are held subordinate to the name that is above every name, and when the common faith in Christ is exalted far above theological systems and dogmas, the position assumed by these Reformers does not seem so revolutionary as in the former days. The opposition was no greater, perhaps, than has been experienced by every new movement in the world that has interfered seriously with prevailing customs, opinions and traditions. Moreover, there was one good service which this opposition rendered to the Cause it sought to destroy: it served to keep out of the new movement all who were not actuated by the deepest and most conscientious convictions of truth, and made its advocates realize that they were suffering for truth's sake, and thus intensified the bond of unity and of brotherly love.

It is very obvious that a great change has come over the religious world in its attitude, both toward Christian unity and to the people who were its original advocates. Everywhere, except perhaps in the most benighted regions, the ministers and churches of the Disciples of Christ are welcomed into all the councils and co-operative movements of the evangelical churches, and the plea for Christian union is heard in nearly all the pulpits of Christendom, as well as in our own. Far and wide, in the foreign field as well as in the home field, and even more strongly in foreign lands than in our own country, the tide of Christian union sentiment is sweeping onward, swelling in volume and momentum. The single voice of Thomas Campbell, crying in the wilderness of sectarian factions and strifes, "One is our Master, and all we be brethren; let us love and serve one another, in a united brotherhood of believers," has swelled into a mighty chorus of voices heard around the world pleading for the union of a divided church in order to the conversion of the world!

Out of the growing spirit of unity came, first of all, the Evangelical Alliance, which Alexander Campbell hailed with joy as one of the signs of promise and to which he pledged his co-operation to the fullest extent of his ability. It was an attempt to give some sort of expression to the fact that these great Protestant bodies held some vital truths in common, and were allies in a common Cause rather than mutual foes. Not knowing how else to manifest their unity at that time, they drew up a creedal statement which was supposed to contain what was most fundamental in the common Christian faith as the basis of their co-operation. In many places, it will be remembered, our ministers were ruled out of these local alliances because they were not considered evangelical. It will be remembered, too, with what righteous indignation we protested against this injustice at the hands of our brethren of the various denominations, who denied to us a place in the household of faith. While this Alliance has never realized the expectation which its friends entertained for it, it deserves honorable recognition as the first attempt to present something to the world better than warring or competing denominations. The Young Men's Christian Association has also served the purpose of furnishing a broader platform than that afforded by any existing denomination for interdenominational co-operation in efforts to save young men. The great interdenominational movement in Sunday-school work furnishes another instance of the desire of the various religious bodies to work together, as far as possible, for common ends, as regards this great interest of the church. Its series of uniform lessons for the Sunday-schools of all religious bodies has been a mighty force working for unity. Perhaps the most remarkable of all these interdenominational movements, in some respects, is the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, which, in a quarter of a century, has girdled the globe and has brought together the young people of all the churches in union services where they are learning to love and respect each other. Its great conventions have brought together representative men out of various religious bodies who have spoken from the same platform, and given testimony to their common faith and life. It has been a mighty influence, under God, for breaking down barriers of prejudice and provincialism and of making the various Protestant bodies realize how great are the matters they hold in common as compared with the things in which they differ.

What influences have served to bring about this remarkable change, in the attitude of the religious world toward the subject of Christian union, will be considered in another article.

Summing Up the Discussion.

Now that there are signs that the discussion on the subject of church federation is coming to a natural conclusion, it might be well to sum up some of the results as they are seen at the present time. While the discussion, even as it has been conducted in our columns, has been unpleasant to many of our readers who do not like the semblance of differences of opinion among ourselves, we do not doubt that it has been productive of great good. It has served to clarify the atmosphere and to enable many to see some things in a clearer light than ever before, and has made impossible among careful readers certain positions which were aforetime held and advocated. Let no one suppose that we are at the end of such discussions. They will be necessary as long as we are imperfect, finite beings, knowing in part and prophesying in part. They are not to be avoided or deplored, when the necessity for them exists. The thing to be deplored and avoided is the manifestation of a spirit of unbrotherliness and unfairness. We are justified, we think, in claiming that the following conclusions have been fairly reached; not by all, perhaps, but by nearly all who have had a fair presentation of the subject, and this includes a vast majority of our ministers and laymen.

1. Our position as advocates of Christian union naturally and logically commits us to every co-operative movement among Christian bodies looking to the moral and social welfare of the people, and to the advancement of the Kingdom of God, and seeking to manifest whatever unity exists among us as followers of a common Lord, and to increase that unity. The only limitations to this co-operation are our opportunities, and loyalty to our conscientious convictions of truth and duty.

2. The Basis of Federation proposed by the Inter-Church Conference in New York City, in November last, looks to the same end for which our own religious movement came into existence, and is a step toward the realization of that end. It should be, therefore, an occasion of thanksgiving among the Disciples of Christ, who have been pleading so long for a closer unity among the people of God.

3. The proposed Basis affords an opportunity for co-operation, in local communities and states, with other Christian bodies, without sacrificing our liberty in Christ, or without compromising any principle of our plea, and it affords the splendid opportunity of being represented by thirty or more delegates in the great national councils of Protestants where all meet on a basis of equality and fraternity, to promote a closer unification, and to devise ways and means of bringing our united strength to bear against common foes and common perils.

4. It would, therefore, be a strange and sinful neglect of a great opportunity if we were to refuse to enter into such a co-operative movement, as far as we can do so, and seek through personal contact with the leading spirits in other religious bodies, to enforce and illustrate the principles of unity in Christ which we have been so long advocating.

5. Believing as we do in the providential character of our mission as religious reformers, we do not feel called upon to yield any vital principle or to submit to any authority of any committee or council that would hamper our free movements in carrying forward the work which has been committed to our hands; but there can be no reasonable objection to sitting in council with our brethren in other religious bodies to consult with them about the interests of a common Cause in any given community, and to hear and weigh each other's counsel looking to the removal of any friction or any unnecessary overlapping of churches.

6. Having been called upon by the united voice of Protestant Christendom in this country to give an expression of approval or of disapproval to the proposed Basis of Federation submitted to the Christian bodies of America by the Inter-Church Conference, the Disciples of Christ can not evade the responsibility of meeting this request by the plea that our religious conventions do not exercise any legislative or mandatory authority over the churches. This is equally true of representative meetings of other religious bodies, and no such authoritative action is requested or expected of us, but simply an expression of the consensus of judgment among us as to the advisability of the proposed plan of federation. It would be contrary to all the traditions and precedents of our religious conventions were we to refuse to give attention to any fraternal request on the part of our brethren of other churches looking to the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers. Whether this action should be taken in our regular national convention, where similar questions have heretofore been considered and acted upon, or whether it should come before a special gathering called for that purpose, is a question purely of expediency, and will in no way affect the moral influence of such advisory action.

7. The discussion has made it apparent that there has been a wide departure, on the part of many among us, from the free and catholic spirit which animated the originators of this movement and their co-laborers, and from their overmastering passion for the unity of the church. One of the splendid results of this discussion will be a revival of interest in the earlier literature of the movement and a return to that breadth of catholicity which was the dominant note of such literature.

8. No small gain will result to the cause we plead if, as the result of this discussion, the claim of High Church exclusiveism, which has sometimes been made by advocates of our plea, whose zeal has been in excess of their wisdom, shall be discontinued. A more modest and humble attitude would better become learners of Christ who claim to be trying to carry out, in his Spirit, his own prayer for the unity of his followers.

9. One of the most useful lessons growing out of this discussion is that the time for narrow and bitter polemics, marked by personal depreciation of one's opponents and by the spirit of unkindness and unfairness, has passed, and whoever resorts hereafter to that method of discussion will but weaken his cause and suffer the disapprobation of the brotherhood.

10. Finally, as a reassuring and comforting word, let us say that this discussion but confirms the lesson of other similar discussions, that however far afield the brethren may go in the heat of discussion, the sober second thought always succeeds the heated and intemperate utterances, extreme views are discredited, personal epithets are discounted, and the saving common sense of the people asserts itself, and we find ourselves brethren still, but farther on, never to return exactly to the old point of view because of the newer light and the wider horizon.

Notes and Comments.

In his report of the annual Chinese convention, held in Chu Cheo, Frank Garrett says in "The Central China Christian:"

> "The convention decided to observe still greater caution in the reception of members into the church and to require more instruction to be given the candidates. In every way there was manifest a commendable advance in the churches and greater determination to press on to larger things."

This decision to "observe still greater caution in the reception of members into the church, and to require more instruction to be given to the candidates," would not be amiss even in this country. The confession of faith in Christ need not be enlarged, but more pains might well be taken to see that those making it understand better what is involved in it. This would have the effect, perhaps, of lessening the number of converts in some cases, but it would also lessen the number of backsliders who are carrying their church letters in their trunks. It would also raise the standard of intelligence and piety in the churches.

The spectacle of a minority in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church waging a legal war with the majority against union with the Presbyterian Church in the United States, has its pathetic as well as its tragic side. It illustrates how people become attached to a mere name, and the traditions associated with that name. No one seriously doubts, we suppose, that the brethren erstwhile known as "Cumberlands," will have liberty in the proposed union to believe and teach according to their convictions. Nor can any one fail to see that the union will help to solve many local problems, and re-enforce many weak churches and institutions; that it takes one more denomination out of the way, and to that extent is in the interest of Christian unity. But, as against all these motives, there is the attachment to a mere name, and possibly the fear of some that they may lose prestige and leadership in the larger united body. In any event the minority is seeking to secure an injunction from the courts to prevent the assembly at Decatur from consummating the union which now only requires a majority vote of that body. Even if defeated in this there will no doubt be a great law-suit for the control of the property which amounts to about seven million dollars. The decision of that law-suit will be one of far-reaching influence in controlling the action of other religious bodies having courts of judicature, in seeking to unite their forces.*

Commenting upon the action of the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to which we referred last week, in the appointment of a committee to revise its creed, and the discussion thereon, "The Globe-Democrat" remarks editorially as follows:

> "The course of the conference is an assurance that the church south is not hidebound, but proposes to keep well at the front in judicious liberality and brotherly amity. A lay reader who looks over the daily debates sees no grain lost of the religion of love and charity that is playing so potential a part in the unfolding of civilization, nor is there any of the iron dogmatism that has at times been charged upon almost every sect. The Birmingham conference will be remembered in the annals of the period."

The compliment is well deserved. It was an able and dignified discussion of a matter of fundamental importance to the body. Of course, this is nothing more than we have a right to expect of any Christian conference, but it is nevertheless a very good test of the Christian culture and intellectual discipline of any convention of religious people to face a great question about which its members differ and discuss it upon its merits in the spirit of fraternity and of mutual confidence, and without recourse to the odium theologicum. And yet there are some timid souls among us who think, if we should undertake to discuss federation in a national convention, something terrible would happen; and a few sensitive ones have declared their purpose, in such an event, of taking their doll rags and going right back into their own back yards! "Howbeit, in understanding, let us be men."

*Since this paragraph was written the injunction was disallowed and the union was consummated.

Editor's Easy Chair.

How great a thing it is to pray, and how vitally related prayer is to Christian life and growth, very many church members fail to realize. There is still a very vague idea prevalent among professed Christians as to what prayer is. Witness the following from a letter recently received: "I pray a good deal, but I do not seem to get any joy or strength out of it. My life seems to go on very much the same, with little, if any, improvement. I seem to have no more strength to resist temptation after praying than before. What is the matter?" If o[illegible] brother will pardon us, the matter pro[illegible]bly is that he has not yet conceived of what is really involved in prayer. There is no praying, in the real sense of the word, until the mind and heart are perfectly submissive to the will of God. The greatness of prayer consists largely in this fact: that the soul must come face to face with God and be honest with him and with itself, before it can pray. If there be any cherished sin in the heart which it is not proposed to surrender; any known sin in the life which it is not the purpose to abandon; if the prayer be that one's own will may be done instead of the divine will; if we are asking God for temporal gifts when we need, much more, spiritual blessings and a contented and grateful heart; if there be no deep sense of the sin, which we would have strength to overcome; then we have not prayed. No soul, conscious of its spiritual poverty, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, longing to have God's will done in it and through it, and ready to abandon every practice, ambition, or plan of life that is contrary to the will of God, desiring above all things just to be and to do what God would have it be and do, can approach God in this spirit without feeling the quickening touch of the divine power and receiving new strength, not only to refrain from the evil, but to do the right.

Is it easy to pray this way? Not always. Some times it is very hard. Prayer ought to be preceded by meditation We ought to assure ourselves that we really desire and need the things for which we pray, and above all, we ought to assure ourselves that our hearts are properly prepared for this highest act of the human soul We often rush into the presence of God with less preparation than we would think it necessary to make for going into the presence of some earthly dignitary to make a request of him. It is not easy to say "Thy will be done," when our heart is set on some object which we are determined to pursue whether it be God's will or not. Whoever does not subordinate his supremest desires and ambitions in life to the will of God, and is not ready to abandon them if God's will so requires, has not reached the Holy of Holies where real prayer is offered. Just here, no doubt, is the explanation of the experience referred to above, which is an experience, no doubt, which all of us have had at times in our lives. Oh, the holy heights of prayer! He who, in humble contrition, in sincere repentance, in unwavering faith, in the spirit of utter submission to the divine will, putting away all known evil from his heart and life, climbs to that holy height and breathes there the pure atmosphere of heaven, knows what it is to pray and what sacred joy is experienced in such blessed fellowship with God and in such filial trust in his Fatherly love and care. No wonder the disciples, accustomed to the formal prayers of the Pharisees, after hearing their Master pray as he poured out his soul to God on the mountain side, said to him, "Lord, teach us to pray!" He has taught us to pray. It must be in his name, that is, in his spirit of utter submission to the Father's will. Not otherwise can we pray.

Listening to the reading of the Scriptures at a funeral service the other day our attention was caught by the familiar words of Jesus at the grave of Lazarus: "Whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die." Many other passages were read from Psalm and Epistle, but these words of the Master kept ringing, not so much in our ears as in the inmost chambers of the soul, "Shall never die!" What men call death, then, is not really death, but only transition. We must revise the very meaning we attach to the words life and death in the light of Christ's teaching. To live is not merely to exist, for even a stone exists; to live is to be in union and fellowship with God; it is to be a sharer of the divine life; it is to know God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent. To live is to be controlled by noble ideals, swayed by divine impulses, governed by true principles, and led into holy and helpful activities. The opposite of all this is death. He is dead who sees no heavenly visions, who responds to no noble impulses, and is governed by no high ideal. He is dead whose thoughts and deeds are centered on self. Whoever does not love does not live. To believe on Christ—that is to come into fellowship with all that is true and noble and good, and to be brought under the dominion of the divinest ideal. How can such an one die? It is no more possible for such an one to be holden of death than for the Master himself. The body may grow old and decay, or yield to sickness and return to dust; but the spirit, the immortal part, vitalized by the life of God, lives on forever. To such "there is no death; what seems so is transition."

The realization of the truth of the saying of Jesus, quoted above, would revolutionize our way of thinking and feeling about death, and about those who have passed beyond. It would change a great deal of our hymnology and render obsolete many of our funeral discourses. It would abolish the badge of mourning. Like our pagan ancestors we still think of our departed loved ones in connection with the grave-yard and the cerements of death. We are still seeking the living among the dead. One of our ministers—a man of rare faith, to whom the spiritual world was more real than the material world—said to a friend on the morning after his wife had departed this life, with a smile of rapture on his face, "Isn't Sarah having a glorious time this morning?" Since then, he, too, has fallen asleep, but with no more fear of death than the child feels that falls asleep on its mother's bosom. He had entered into the meaning of Christ's words, and believed, with Paul, that "to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord," which is "far better." Would that this inspiring message from Jesus would dispel the gloom that hangs like a pall over so many homes where there are vacant chairs, and give to all bereaved hearts "the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." Such a triumph of faith over the bondage of death would go far to recommend Christianity to those who are denying themselves the blessings which Christ offers to all, because of what seems to them the unreality of the Christian faith in the lives of those professing it. It was a part of Christ's mission to the world to deliver men from the bondage of the fear of death, and we ought not to rest content until we enjoy this liberty, wherewith he hath made us free.

"There is no death; the stars go down
To rise again on some fair shore;
And there in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forever more."

"The God who marks the sparrow's fall—
He will remember thee."

Sweetly and tenderly the soloist sang the words and the great audience, made up of men and women weary with life's burden and cares, drank in both the music and the sentiment with evident satisfaction. To more than one burdened heart the words came as a benediction from heaven. As the sweet assurance contained in the lines was repeated, time and again, "He will remember thee," the peace of God came into these troubled hearts. After all, is not that just the word of assurance which we need when defeat and disaster overtake us, or when our cup of suffering seems full to overflowing? Are we not inclined at such times to doubt whether the great and infinite God, who guides the course of the spheres and upholds the illimitable universe by his omnipotent will, has time or disposition to think of our individual needs and burdens? It was just because the great, compassionate Christ knew this tendency of our finite minds, and himself had felt the calming influence of the certainty of conviction that God careth for us, that he uttered those beautiful words, "Not a sparrow falleth to the ground without my Father's notice." The conclusion is inevitable: He that notes the sparrow's fall notes with deeper and tenderer solicitude the fall or the sorrow of one of his little ones. There are those would-be wise philosophers who tell us that God cares for universes and systems and universal laws, but that he has no eye to see, no ear to hear, and no heart to feel the individual burden or sorrow that is shadowing the life of one of his earthly children. If this were so it would stifle all prayer and make us feel that we were but atoms in a universe of law, unguided by a heart of infinite love. But, believing in Jesus and accepting his revelation of the Father, we may sing:

"The God who marks the sparrow's fall—
He will remember thee."

Can Baptists and Disciples Unite?

By H. F. Colby

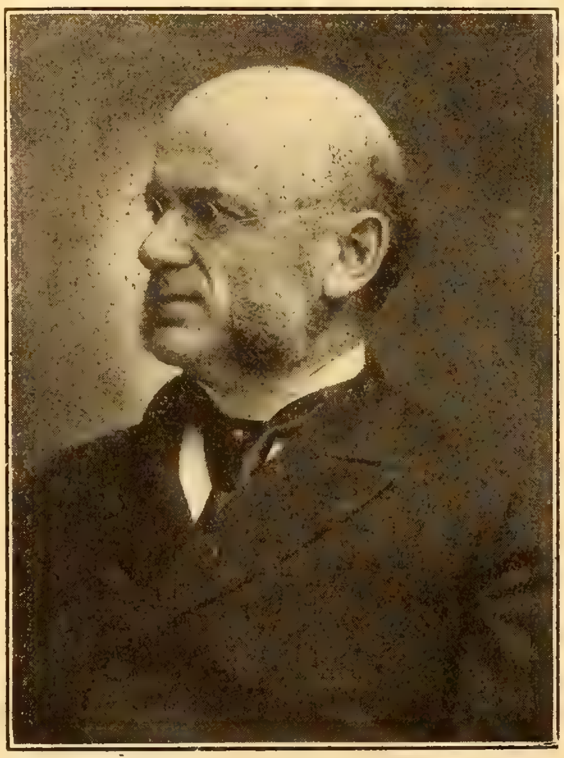
The following paper upon the theme "What Obstacles, if Any, Exist in the Way of Union Between Baptists and Disciples of Christ," by Dr. H. F. Colby, was, in his absence from the Disciples' congress through sickness, read by President Mullins:

At the outset I wish most heartily to reciprocate for myself, and I believe I can speak thus in behalf of the great body of Baptists, all the fraternal expressions of kindly feeling in the paper of Mr. Haley. I share also in the conviction that time and broader sympathies have greatly softened, if they have not entirely removed from the arena, some of the old points of contention, and in the hope that kind and prayerful discussion may bring us nearer and nearer together till we are in all respects, one body of Christian believers. As has been said, this is not the first time that Disciples and Baptists have thus conferred together, and such conferences have been helpful, promoting a clearer understanding of each other, and emphasizing the points in which we agree. Christ's petition that his disciples might all be one, will be fulfilled in proportion to the fulfillment of his preceding petition, namely, that they might be sanctified by the truth, God's word being the truth. Friendly comparison of views with prayer and the study of the Bible must ever promote a clearer knowledge of this truth. Let us rejoice that at last the day of rancorous conflict has passed and that we can talk together in Christian love, along the line of cleavage, causing that line to grow ever less observable, by means of our candor, our mutual suggestion, our deeper spirituality and our fuller comprehension of the Master's teachings!

While, however, we rejoice and work together in many paths of service, standing side by side in our adherence to immersion as essential to baptism and in our opposition to infant sprinkling and to all persecution of conscience, while we agree in these as well as in the cardinal truths held by most of the evangelical denominations, we must at the same time not forget that anything like the welding of the two bodies into one, in order to be strong and permanent, implies a careful consideration of the points which have been issues in the past, a common consent to set aside those which are no longer thought to be important, and an assurance that there is really a substantial agreement in our views. As our brother has said, we can walk pleasantly together in the garden of the Lord and enjoy its fruits and flowers without cutting down trees for theological "shillalahs." But inasmuch as we have structures of belief, to build for the confidence of ourselves and others, it is well for us also to be very careful to examine and select the timber. Some minds may naturally yield themselves to the flow and sweep of generous emotion, as if this were a solvent for all differing convictions, but others will and must give attention to conscientious discrimination and to logical argument.

To my own mind the question, What obstacles, if any, stand in the way of the union of Disciples and Baptists? can be satisfactorily answered only by unraveling, as it were, the cord into its several strands, its involved problems, and solving each of them in turn.

Beginning with the one of least importance, let us ask: Is there any obstacle as to a name? Disciples have contended in the past that the wearing of denominational names has tended to perpetuate the unhappy divisions of the people of God and, therefore, for themselves they have preferred to be called only by names which are to be found in the New Testament. But they have not succeeded in the purpose which they thus had in view, for the Disciples' Church, or Christian Church, has come to be understood to stand for certain well defined views, and is practically reckoned among the different sects or denominations as truly as any others. In view of this fact and because, in spite of the Disciples' disclaimer of any such assumption, these names have seemed to many to imply that they are the only Christians, the only true disciples. Are they willing now to lay them aside and to be called Baptists, as they were originally? Mr. Haley remarks that Alexander Campbell regarded himself and his brethren as members of the Baptized Brotherhood of Christians known as Baptists. But if it would be thought to be conceding too much to us to call the combined body by our name, would we, on the other hand, as Baptists, be ready to give up the name which was given to us by others than ourselves in the first place, but which has come by long usage to be the sign and symbol of the principles for which we have contended? We would not be willing to seem by any change of name to have receded from those principles. But there is nothing in a mere name aside from what it stands for. And if our convictions were not thereby understood to be compromised we might consent. When, therefore, Disciples and Baptists have become one in other respects, there will certainly be some way in which this difficulty can be practically overcome.



Henry F. Colby, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist Church, Dayton, Ohio.

The second question that occurs to us is in regard to a creed. Are there any obstacles to keep us apart on the mere question of having any creed? When Alexander Campbell rejected all creeds he was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and recoiled from the binding aspect of a fixed creed as emphasized in that denomination. Baptists do not insist upon the authority of a creed to any such degree. They have, it is true, in most of their churches, Articles of Faith, as provisional and convenient declarations of what they understand the Bible to teach. Such declarations are useful in many ways. They state what we stand for and are a platform for harmony. But we hold them ever subject to correction by the greater light which we may obtain in God's Word. It is to the New Testament that we turn to find our supreme rule of faith and practice. We do not like, however, the common expression, "The Bible is our creed," because a creed is simply what a man believes, and different Christians do not agree in their understanding of all points which the Bible teaches. A Christian's creed is really what he understands the Bible to teach. When Disciples have been called upon to state what they understand the Bible to teach, they have done so, and have thus stated their creed. Our Disciple brother has done so in the paper which he has just now presented in this congress. Now, if such a statement of belief can be formulated which both Disciples and Baptists will accept, would there be any objection to its publication on the part of Disciples, especially if it were declared at the outset of the document that its statements were provisional and for practical harmony and co-operation, but subject to correction, by general consent, whenever farther light shall have clearly broken forth from God's Word?

A third inquiry should be, Is there now substantial agreement between Disciples and Baptists as to the meaning of certain important words necessarily used in the discussion? As Mr. Haley reminds us, a great deal of controversy has grown out of the fact that the two bodies have used words in different senses. The question is not, how far does our phraseology agree, but how far do our ideas agree? Hence, we must understand the former and go beneath it to find the latter. For example: Is the term regeneration to be understood as the direct act of God upon the human soul, producing in it a new disposition or attitude toward God and toward Christ, and, therefore, the spring and start of a new life? Or is it simply the gradual process of transformation by which one acquires a holy character—the regeneration of the individual being like what we speak of as the regeneration of society? By the term repentance are we to understand merely an outward reformation of conduct, which may be but temporary, or a deep conviction of and sorrow for selfishness and sin, and a turning from these with a whole heart? Again: Is faith—that believing in Christ which is to be required as a condition before Baptism—a mere intellectual persuasion of the historical truth of the Gospel records about Jesus Christ, or is it a real trusting of one's self to him in confidence and obedience as to a divine Savior? Did not Alexander Campbell say "A man believes in Christ in the same way and as easily as I believe the well-attested history of Gen. Washington?" The inquiry, therefore, as to our understanding of the words faith and believing seems to be pertinent. Or is it to be left to the convert himself to decide how much he means when he says, "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God," without the church or pastor trying to make sure that he has become at heart an earnest and humble Christian. While I say this, I agree with Mr. Haley in having no desire to revive the purely philosophical discussion as to whether repentance or faith comes first. Rightly understood, they seem to me to be two sides of the same thing. They both spring up in the soul in view of the person and work of Christ. The change of mind, which the Greek word for Repentance indicates, implies a change of attitude at the same time toward him who saves us from. But setting mere philosophical hair-splitting aside, surely it has not ceased to be of importance that members of a church should agree as to what that repentance is, and as to what that faith is, which God requires as conditions of salvation. Clearness and agreement on these points, as well as on other cardinal ones of evangelic belief are necessary to harmony and cooperation. Are we thus agreed?

Again: Is there any obstacle in our respective views as to the relation of baptism to regeneration?

After what has just been said, I must define that by regeneration I mean the beginning of a new life and disposition in the soul as the result of the work of the Holy Spirit. Should the new birth, thus understood, precede baptism or is it brought about, or at least consummated in the act of baptism? In the address of the Disciples to the Baptists of Ohio in 1871 they said: "The main point of difference, therefore, is whether the change from a sinner to a Christian, from an alien to a citizen of the Kingdom, from an unconverted to a converted state, is complete without baptism, or whether this consummates the change? You say the former: we, the latter." This seems to be a plain declaration that one is not a Christian before baptism. It is true that the address also says, "We attach no importance whatever to baptism unless it is preceded by repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ"; but it seems also clearly to hold that baptism is at least one of the things that is necessary to regeneration, and therefore salvation.

Is that statement, signed by W. T. Moore, Isaac Errett, T. D. Garvin and others, one that the Disciples of the present day would reject? Have they materially modified their views on this point? If not, I have a feeling that the Baptists will find it difficult to agree with them in this regard. We do not regard baptism as essential to the beginning of a new spiritual life in Christ, and we would not dare to deny regeneration, salvation or title to the name of Christian to any true believers in Christ who have omitted it. But now comes Mr. Haley and speaks as follows: "Disciples believe and always have believed, that regeneration, as Baptists and Evangelical Christians generally use the term, precedes baptism. In the moral and evangelical sense of the word," he says, "a man must be regenerated before he is baptized." Very good. Will Disciples generally accept this statement? If so, one supposed barrier to union seems to have melted away.

The same query arises as to the relation of baptism to the remission of sins. In our Baptist view, he who repents and believes in Christ, is born again; he has experienced the beginning of the new life, and he who thus repents and believes also receives the forgiveness of sins. We can not believe that when the Apostle Peter said on the day of Pentecost, "Repent ye and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sin," that he meant to say in order to the remission of sins, in any such sense as that their sins were not remitted before baptism. The Greek word "eis" translated "for" in King James' version and "unto" in the revised version, must be meant to indicate that the baptism was the confession of their confidence that they had already obtained through Jesus Christ the remission of sins. We feel compelled to this view by other passages of Scripture. Now, did not Alexander Campbell clearly teach that penitent believers are forgiven, not before but in the act of baptism? Mr. Richardson, in his book on the "Doctrine and Polity of the Disciples," says: "We believe that Christian baptism is the appointed ordinance in which the penitent believer accepts the grace of God offered in Christ, it being both a manifestation of his faith and repentance and a condition of his receiving the pardon of his sins" Mr. Haley, in his paper to-day, refers to Dr. Isaac Errett's statements in behalf of the Disciples, that in baptism the penitent believer does not earn or merit the forgiveness of sins, but thus appropriates and becomes assured of the forgiveness which the mercy of God has provided for him, and which in baptism is extended to him in a sensible and tangible form. Such an elaborate way of putting it does not seem to me to differ very much from the others. The question is, Is baptism necessary for the forgiveness of sins? If Disciples believe that it is and Baptists believe that it is not, then there is an important difference between us, a difference as to the purpose of baptism, while we agree as to the outward act. Of course, Baptists believe that baptism is an act of obedience and that willful disobedience to Christ excludes saving faith in him, but we can not deny that all penitent believers in Christ are forgiven, even though they may be mistaken as to their baptism. Now, Mr. Haley interprets Peter's word at Pentecost by saying that it is what baptism stands for symbolically, which is literally and absolutely in order to the forgiveness of sins. If he means that baptism is the symbol of the entrance on a new life already begun by repentance and faith in Jesus Christ, there seems to be no difference remaining on this point between him and us.

Again: Is there any obstacle as to our views of the personality and work of the Holy Spirit, especially of the work of the Holy Spirit, in the conversion of souls? Baptists have held that this work is direct, resulting, as I have said, in what we call regeneration, a radical and moral change in the affections. Alexander Campbell, however, seems to have held that the work of the Holy Spirit is limited to moral suasion, to the use of arguments, and Mr. Lard seems to declare that the Holy Spirit, having once inspired the Scriptures, has ceased his active energy, the efficacy now being in the Word alone. Disciples have often seemed to us to say that the Gospel, fully preached, is force enough. Baptists have said there must be also the quickening power of the Holy Spirit. Disciples have seemed to us to say, "The light will cure the blind eyes." We have said, "The Divine Physician must touch the eyes that they may use the light." The apostle said, "Paul may plant and Apollos water, but God giveth the increase." Many, of course, will say, "This is purely theological, philosophical; leave it entirely to personal thinking." But the question has seemed to us Baptists to have a close relation to man's true humility, to his dependence on the Holy Spirit, if not to the divinity and personality of that Spirit itself. To what extent we have now come together on such points, the address of Dr. Mullins at this congress may help us to discern. Much attention has been given of late years by devout scholars to the subject of the Holy Spirit, and if I rightly understand the attitude of my denomination, Baptists will be as jealous as ever of anything that may seem to minimize his glory and power.

In addition to the subjects mentioned there are, of course, others more or less connected with them which will have to be carefully considered before an intelligent and strong basis for a real union between Baptists and Disciples can be established. Religious men can not be satisfied with merely charitable judgments, mutual congratulations, fraternal songs and loving agreement on some conspicuous points, valuable and blessed as these are. They must and will think, and their thinking will effect their methods of personal and church work. Mr. Haley, of course, is right in saying that owing to the congregational polity of the Disciples and Baptists, their union must come about, not by legislation, but by evolution. It must be internal before it can be external; a union between individuals and local churches before it is manifest in the country at large. It can only be accomplished gradually and spiritually. Meanwhile, let us rejoice that we have so much of truth and purpose in common! Let us walk together so far as we are agreed! Let us study the Scriptures and by prayer seek to deepen the spiritual life of our respective churches! Let us make frequent and kindly comparisons of our views and generously emulate each other in truly extending the spiritual kingdom of God! Thus shall we achieve real progress toward that real unity which shall come to pass, not by formal resolutions or external organization, but from the very necessities of the case—an outward and visible interfusion as the natural consequence of an inward and practical identity.

The Goal.

By Lynn R. Hornish.

What is the end of life,
The goal for which we strive?
Is it to slay in conflict rife
To keep our life alive?

Is it to gather all earth's gold;
To tenant all its face?
Garner the products of the mold
And subject all the race?

Is it to climb fame's topmost peak,
To gaze adown the vale?
To see the multitudes that seek,
That falter and that fail?

Is it to choose earth's fairest flowers,
Their perfumes all our claim;
To hedge about the sunniest bowers
And guard them by our name?

Is it to have the sycophants cringe,
To have the courtiers call;
To have all pomp that power brings
And live in massive hall?

To live and feed the thing called life;
To satiate its need
By funeral piles of those whose strife
But added to its greed?

And this is life—and this the goal
To which the million trend!
This, the existence without soul;
This but the mortal bend.

Thank God for soul and simple mind;
For goal so near at hand;
To live, to suffer and be kind;
To lift and help to stand!

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

We left Constantinople with its dogs and dirt, fez and filth, mosques and misery on Sunday morning, March 4, and steamed past up the Bosphorus and on to the Black Sea. Seven seas so far have received us: Atlantic, Mediterranean, Tyrrhenian, Ionian, Ægean, Marmora and Black. We had a vision of Robert College, which is doing so much for the redemption of these people. Here is a great institution. Robert College was built for conquest. It stands on an eminence a few miles north of the city on the European side of the Bosphorus. Over 40 years ago it was chartered as a part of the University of New York, and has been doing a transforming work for the young men of the Turkish empire, mostly Armenians, Greeks and Bulgarians. Two-thirds of the young men of affairs in European Turkey are its graduates. Dr. Cyrus Hamlin's "My Life and Times," tells the story. Christopher Robert, a merchant of New York, planned it, and it was opened in 1863 with four students, three English and one American. It has now a student body of 338 representing fifteen nationalities. It has educated 2,575 young men, and some of these have held the highest offices of the state. They are preachers, teachers, judges, lawyers, physicians, editors and merchants, marked men everywhere through whom the college is exerting a wide influence; and such leaders as Gladstone, Rosebery, Bryce and Salisbury have been its warm friends. It is Christian and unsectarian. It took much diplomacy and a hard financial struggle to get it established, but it pays. Little attention is paid to education in Turkey. We saw some young fellows bowing over the Koran, and there are a few elementary schools, almost wholly for boys; but largely the work of education is what is done by Americans. The American school for girls at Scutari, on the Asiatic side of the city, interested us greatly. They visited our ship and the young women gave a concert which was greatly enjoyed. They have 160 students. It is the only college for women in the western Levant. There are twenty-six teachers, and while not denominational its teaching is thoroughly Christian. The Woman's Board of Missions of the Congregational Church has invested $90,000 in the land and buildings. The American Board largely carries on the missionary work done in Turkey. They have 313 preaching stations and five colleges.

We passed up the Bosphorus, viewing many beautiful suburbs, palaces, embassies, villas, but nothing created such interest and enthusiasm as Robert College, flying a large American flag, and its hundreds of students, out in front of its fine buildings, cheering and waving their handkerchiefs and even the sheets from the college windows. It caused many eyes to moisten. There were Turkish spies on our ship, watching every movement, but nothing could restrain the outburst of feeling. The Christian religion is only tolerated here. The relation of the Turks to all the rest is that of conquerors to conquered. The Greek church has its patriarch in Constantinople, the Bulgarian church also has its exarch, or ecclesiastical head in the city, and the same is true of the Gregorian and Catholic Armenians. Rev. Mr. Frew, of the Scotch Presbyterian church, who was specially kind to us, has a good work here, but of all influences operating for the regeneration of the Ottoman empire Robert College is first. Our American consul general, Mr. Dickinson, showed us special attention here—the only one of our representatives at any one of the points visited who has had the kindness and good sense to come aboard our ship, and make us welcome, though there are 650 representative Americans on the Arabic. What's the matter?

One when asked his farewell to Constantinople, said: "I will quote Shakespeare, 'Out damned spot!'" It expressed our common sentiment. I do not wonder that Z. T. Sweeney declined to serve out his time here. We sailed out again on the Marmora, the towers and dome of St. Sophia sank out of sight, and we went at the bugle call to the dining room to listen to a splendid sermon by C. S. Medbury, and rejoice with new sense of gratitude in our inheritance in the religion of Christ and the blessings of American citizenship. How long shall the crescent control one of the fairest regions on the globe?

Again we were among the isles of Greece. We passed the seat of ancient Troy, Lesbos, the home of Sappho; Chios, said to be the birth place of Homer; Samos, where Pythagoras was born—all islands visited by the apostle Paul—and reached Smyrna on Monday, March 5, 238 miles from Constantinople. This is the chief city of Asia Minor with 225,000 people. It is a place of great beauty with the range of mountains in the background, its tiled roofs and painted balconies, spires and minarets, dark cypress groves and lovely gardens, and its beautiful bay animated with shipping. Some one calls it "an Asiatic city with a European face;" and so it seems, for on landing the front street is clean and well built, and of the best European houses, while back a little way we come at once to the characteristic oriental scenes. It is a city of infinitely greater cleanliness than Constantinople and the red fez does not seem to be predominant.

Smyrna is an old, old city. It is one of the many birth places of Homer, for

"Seven cities strove for Old Homer dead,
Through which the living Homer begged his bread."

It was the home of the fabled Croesus, whose name is the synonym for wealth. Christianity from the first took deep root here and Smyrna became one of the seven churches of Asia referred to in seventh and eighth of Revelations. Polycarp suffered martyrdom here—Polycarp the disciple of John—and his tomb is shown, and the remains of the stadium which was the place of his martyrdom. His famous words every preacher has quoted: "Eighty and six years have I served him and he has never done me wrong; how then can I blaspheme my king that saved me?" He refused to recant and death was the penalty. This was A. D. 155. When we remember this man sat at the feet of John, and John at the feet of Jesus, it brings us very near to our Lord.

Smyrna has several times been almost reduced to ruins by earthquakes. In 180, A. D., it was wrecked and rebuilt by Marcus Aurelius; and in 1688, 1788 and 1880 it suffered disastrous shocks. It is the largest and wealthiest city of the Ottoman empire next to Constantinople. In the direct path of the commerce of the Mediterranean in thousands of years it could not fail to acquire wealth and prominence. There are two railroads into the interior, ships from all over the world and long trains of camels coming and going laden with rich goods. Who does not know of Smyrna dates and figs and raisins and spices and sponges and silks, and rugs and carpets and embroideries!

Here one sees the Acropolis with its fine views, and the site of the great theater where 20,000 spectators could gather; and the old castle on the hill of mingled Greek Byzantine and Turkish architecture; and the Caravan Bridge which goes back a hundred and thirty years before Christ, and Diana's bath, and the bazars with their bewildering array of wares presided over by persistent Orientals in picturesque attires who charge unsuspecting Americanos three prices. Here is the chief center of the Oriental rug trade. The rug makers get very low wages, a franc, or 20 cents a day. Rugs come from the interior, borne by camel caravans a distance of six or seven hundred miles. Many of the bright and new things in embroideries, jewelry and Oriental weapons which tourists purchase here, we are told are imported from Germany and France. Certain it is the Oriental vice of lying is well nigh universal.

In appearance one might say: "Ye men of Smyrna I perceive ye are very religious." There are Mosques, and Greek, Roman and Armenian churches in great plenty. There is an English church, a Scotch mission, a French chapel and a Lutheran church. There is an American mission with branches in Ephesus and elsewhere doing aggressive work. The American Board conducts a collegiate institute here for boys and girls with over 300 students. The Church of Scotland mission has a training school for nurses, a reading library and a hospital and dispensary which treats 6,000 patients yearly. There is an American kindergarten for Armenian children and a training school for nurses conducted by the Kaiserworth Deaconesses of Germany. The Disciples have a mission here, but I understand there is no work being done at present.

Turkey has 24,000,000 of people. Here is surely a great field for aggressive Christianity. Little progress has been made in the conversion of Moslems. The work is chiefly among Armenians and Greeks. The same Gospel which Paul preached in all this region and which overcome the barriers of his time must be equal to all conditions of our generation.

We come in contact since we reached Greece more or less with the Greek church. We see the Papas with long hair tucked up behind, high conical cap, and black gown going his rounds. Celibacy is obligatory for the bishops, but not for the ordinary clergy who can not marry, however, a second time, and so take good care of number one. The preacher's wife is the Papadia. The preacher or priest mentally and socially is little superior to his parishioners. He has scanty support and sometimes tills the soil or keeps a shop, or even a tavern in which he not only helps the Papadia serve the guests but is ready to make up the required number for a game at cards. It is said, however, that this does not diminish the respect of his flock. If the Papas is made a bishop he must renounce his wife and children and the former usually goes into a nunnery. Greek convents often are the inns of this country. Greek chapels are very numerous, and no matter how scanty the ruins of a chapel it is a sacred spot and a small cross or lamp reminds the wayfarer that a house of God stood there, and to remove the ruin or plow over the site would be thought a crime now as much as with the ancient Greeks. They use paintings but consider statues heretical in houses of worship. The people stand, and the service, which is carried on by the light of numerous wax candles, consists in chanting of the liturgy. Laymen partake of both bread and wine in "the Eucharist or Holy Communion," leavened wheatened bread being soaked in a mixture of wine and water and offered to the communicant in a spoon. Baptism is a dipping three times, and I saw no fixed baptistry, but was told it was removed after the act was performed.

What the Brethren Are Saying

By B. B. Tyler

One of the brethren in "The Standard" (Baptist), Chicago, Apirl 21, 1906, has an article entitled, "New Testament Authority for the Baptist Young People's Union," in which he says, "there is as much Scriptural basis for the work of the Baptist Young People's Union as there is for the existence of the Baptist Church. True, the Baptist Young People's Union is never named in the New Testament, neither is the Baptist Church." What then is the New Testament authority for the existence of the Baptist Church and of the Young People's Union? Answer: The Spirit and principle of the New Testament "has been perpetuated," and is present in the Baptist Church and in the Baptist Young People's Union. Is this answer satisfactory? Wherein is it deficient?

"The Independent," New York, May 17, 1906, contains an editorial on "Prosecutions for Heresy." The following language will interest some of the readers of The Christian-Evangelist:

"In any such trial it ought to be a perfect defence that the teaching complained of is true; for the truth ought to be the only thing sought, * * * but unfortunately the fact is otherwise. For this is a court, not a seminary, nor a laboratory, nor any sort of investigation of searchers after truth, but a trial for heresy, a court, the last thing that ought to exist in the church; and the purpose is not to seek the breadth of the possible Christian faith, but to discover whether the view held by the man on trial is such as can be allowed in this particular fraction of the church universal! And how is this to be settled? Not by discovering how broad the universal church may be, much less the truth may be; but what are the limitations which the men who composed the written constitution of the denomination have put on the range of its faith.

"That is the reason why a denomination has a creed. To be sure, such a creed is an impertinence, but sects have them; they have them for no other purpose than to limit the range of belief. It is not truth; it is not even the Scriptures that are to be the test, but the particular interpretation of the Scriptures, or the particular view of the truth which the denomination has held. The creed is formulated and promulgated on purpose to be used in such a case as this," that is: the trial of Dr. Crapsey for heresy. (Otherwise it would not be necessary to add anything to the Bible.)

How does the language of this brother strike you? "A creed is an impertinence." How do you like that? What do you think of the implication that a creed is the addition of something to the Bible? Is this implication warranted? Does a creed, of necessity, add to the Bible? This brother, editor of "The Independent," seems to think that the Bible contains a sufficient, and a sufficiently clear, statement of the Christian faith.

W. T. Moore says that he did not speak in the "Inter-Church Federation Conference," in New York, last November, because the brethren were saying what he would have said, and were saying it better than he could have said it! This good man, and able, can not draft a stronger indictment of human authoritative creeds than the foregoing quotation from "The New York Independent" contains.

Read the following from the same editorial and be glad:

"If he were to be tried on his adhesion to the truth, or to the Bible, there would be no need of a fixed creed, the purpose of which is to exclude those who do not hold it, and thus to secure uniformity of belief."

"We admit that this ought not so to be; that there ought not to be creeds and tests, and that the free search of truth is the ideal. But few churches have reached that ideal, and those that have should guard their privilege."

Have "we," "our people," "the Christian church," "the Disciples of Christ," "reached" our "ideal"?

My lesson this morning was "the Epistle of James." Before reading the letter I read an "Introduction." One section of the "Introduction" is entitled: "Spiritual Teaching." Under this caption are the following words which seem to me to be peculiarly appropriate at the present time: "'The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God' (1:20), What harm has come from religious controversies! Unholy passion has often been mistaken for holy zeal, angry speech for earnest speech; the fiery breath of wrath blights every virtue." This is a good time (don't you think so?) to read carefully and meditate upon what "James, the Lord's brother," says on the use of the tongue. It is especially important also at the present time, to pray: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Jehovah, my Rock and my Redeemer."

The brother who said that "unholy passion has often been mistaken for holy zeal, angry speech for earnest speech," is a Christian gentleman who wears the Congregationalist label.

This afternoon, Tuesday, May 20, there will begin in Denver a great missionary conference under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Brethren will preach who have faced wild men in the jungles of Africa, to win them to the Christ; brethren who stood in barricades against the Chinese hordes at the time of the Boxer uprising, and brethren who have fought famine and cholera in India. Eight hundred delegates from the Rocky Mountain empire are expected. Bishops Warren, Foss, Hartzell, Berry and Oldham will be present. Dr. A. B. Leonard, the Rev. Homer C. Stuntz, author of "The Philippines and the Far East," and the Rev. Frank Mason Norton, D.D., will attend and speak in behalf of home missions and world wide evangelism. I expect to hear good things in this conference. The Methodist brethren probably are in error in some things, in many things, as we are; but they are certainly right in their attempt to obey their, and our, divine Lord, when he commanded his friends to preach the Gospel to the whole creation—to make disciples of Jesus Christ of all the nations. On this point our brethren who wear the Methodist label are unquestionably right. The Lord and the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist willing, I will report some of the things that will be said in this great missionary conference. Almost the first thing on the program is a banquet this evening in the Central Christian Church.

"Rabbi, we saw a man using your name to expel demons, and we tried to hinder him, on the ground that he did not follow us."

"Jesus replied, 'You should not have tried to hinder him, for there is no one who will use my name to perform a miracle and be able the next minute to speak evil of me. He who is not against us is for us.'"

To America in a Wonder Ship

By William Durban

It is once more my privilege and my great pleasure to be on the western side of the Atlantic. For a few weeks I shall be observing conditions here and shall be enjoying intercourse with dear friends whose faces I have been longing to see again, after trying separation. Already I have had the special benefit of fellowship with the Church of Christ at Sterling Place, and of listening to Dr. Harlan, whose pastorate manifestly continues to flourish. But most of the time that I and my wife will spend in the states will be outside of New York. Certain impressions that we gain I will detail if they are likely to be of interest from an Englishman's point of view for American readers. On this occasion I will write a few notes as to how we came again to this country. We sailed in the world's most marvelous ship.

The Giant Turbine Liner.

The Carmania is the new turbine steamer, built by the famous Cunard company, which 65 years ago constructed the first steam passenger ship that crossed the Atlantic. The turbine is a marvelous invention of the Hon. C. A. Parsons, son of the Earl of Ross, who made for his Irish observatory the first of the mighty modern astronomical telescopes. As the turbine is initiating a revolution in steam locomotion, and much will be heard of it, I may here write a few lines explaining its mechanism, as I find that comparatively few people as yet understand it. Imagine a very thick rod, or shaft, of steel, studded with rings or projections not unlike the blades of a knife. These are called vanes. The shaft is fitted in a cylinder, having also rings of vanes, but bent at such an angle that when the steam rushes in from the boilers it is deflected to the vanes on the shaft and spins them round. The propeller being attached to the other end of the shaft at the stern of the ship, is likewise revolved, and drives the ship forward. In the Carmania the central shaft of the three with which she is fitted is operated by the high pressure turbine, and the two side shafts by low pressure turbines. Several smaller ships now ply the ocean which are propelled by turbines, but the Carmania is the first turbine liner constructed.

A Beautiful Mammoth.

This monster ship is surpassingly beautiful. She is of the most graceful proportions and glides along without any of the vibration so distressing in all vessels fitted by the ordinary reciprocating engine. It is delightful to voyage on a turbine steamer for this happy reason. The Carmania accommodates over 3,000 souls, the crew and all hands numbering 550. She is 675 feet long, 73 feet wide and has eight decks. Moreover, she is furnished with the remarkable Stone-Lloyd system of water-tight doors, by which a ship is rendered unsinkable unless her back were broken. The captain moves a handle on the bridge and by electric contrivance in 15 seconds all the entrances through the vessel's bulkheads are closed, so that she becomes, as it were, a huge box of water-tight compartments. I have been conducted over the ship and found it a world of wonders, containing all the up-to-date appliances for safety, comfort, luxury and practical business that this scientific age can command. The Carmania is the most advanced representative of the mechanical genius of our time. Do any of us fully appreciate the marvels of the epoch in which it is our privilege to live? If the world's moral and spiritual progress were commensurate with the material advance, the millennium of righteousness, peace, love and joy would have begun.

The Crowning Marvel.

There is a tendency in human nature to doubt the possibility of the miraculous, and then when that which seemed incredible has been achieved, to fling contempt on it or to minimize it as being, after all, nothing remarkable. The Marconi wireless telegraph is a fine specimen of the treatment thus accorded to supremely astounding inventions which our forefathers would have regarded, if predicted, as totally supernatural. It is singular now to note how lightly and cheaply the Marconigrams that arrive all day and all night on some of the mightiest liners are regarded. They are considered extraordinary, of course, yet simply take their place amongst the scientific conveniences of the day I suppose I must be one of those infantile people whose minds nurse persistently the sense of the marvelous and who continue all their days to look on the whole world as a vast fairyland of superhuman phenomena. It was to me a fact of glory and of profoundest astonishment that our Carmania constantly in mid-ocean exchanged telegrams with other liners invisible and speeding along at far distances. A lady sent a Marconigram from the Carmania, when we were still about 1,000 miles from New York, to the Majestic, known to be somewhere on her passage the reverse way. Speedily came the answer from her friend on that ship, also fitted with the wireless apparatus. Moreover, we have every morning purchased for 5 cents a beautiful magazine of 32 pages, "The Carmania Bulletin," printed on board in the night, and containing, besides a number of recreative and informing articles, several telegrams, giving us the most important items of the world's news up to the hour. We picked up intelligence from the Marconi station at Poldhu, in Cornwall, till we were half way across the Atlantic, and then speedily we commenced receiving from Cape Cod. I hope I may be excused the indulgence of my childish capacity of unspeakable astonishment in view of such a development of the possibilities of science. I do not wonder that such men as Lord Kelvin and Sir Oliver Lodge, our greatest living electricians, have emphasized their faith in the possibility of miracles, for who can now venture to say where the line can be drawn between the natural and the supernatural? All such delimitation is out of the question. Who can dare to predicate what is either possible or impossible? Who can repeat the flippant asseveration of Hume that miracles simply do not happen? A "miraculum" in classic speech simply means a wonder. And in our age science, which was relied on in the past generation by infidels as their main resource against faith in the miraculous, is now pouring in on their astonished view avalanches of "miracula." The men of faith may be reassured. For science has vaulted right over to their side.

Two Coming Monsters.

The Cunard company justly boasts that it has always "shown the way." It is doing so still. For the Carmania is so eminent a success as a turbine liner that two far mightier vessels are being constructed, to be propelled by the same means, which will both stagger humanity and also delight it. The Lusitania and the Mauritania will eclipse all the craft the world ever saw, both in size and in speed. They will be 800 feet in length and will have ten decks, with elevators like those of a great hotel. These two enormous 25-knot flyers are the largest steamships ever laid down, and are to be propelled by the four greatest turbines ever designed, independently driving four separate shafts and propellers. Work is being pushed in order to have them ready for service early in 1907. We may well ask where is to be the limit in the magnitude of the ocean liners? It was thought some time since that it had been reached, owing to the difficulty of carrying more than a certain load of fuel. But it turns out that the turbine largely economizes coal, and this has facilitated further extension and expansion.

Reformation at Sea.

With unspeakable pleasure we have noted on this delightful voyage a remarkable moral change. On former occasions the gambling and the drinking have always been saddening. On a great ship human nature is soon in evidence in all its qualities, and character quickly betrays itself. On the Carmania, though there was, of course, a smoking room with a bar for each class, very few of the passengers in all the great throng, numbering 3,150, seemed disposed to indulgence in intemperance, and there appeared to be hardly any gambling. The restrictions are increasingly severe, but I also believe that at last we are beginning to see the real effects of the long-continued efforts of temperance reformers. I am sure that it is so in England, and I think that this remarkable improvement at sea is another of the very hope-

FOR OUR WORKERS IN MISSOURI

A Visit to Columbia.

The Editor of this paper enjoyed a brief visit to Columbia, Mo., last week in attendance upon the annual meetings of the boards of trustees of the Missouri Bible College and of Christian College. We are glad to report both these institutions in a prosperous and hopeful condition. The Bible College has had the best year in its history, financially and otherwise. The new building, Lowry Hall, has been a great help to the work in many ways. Dean Lhamon and Prof. Sharpe are hopeful for the future of the institution, and believe that the university authorities will grant the necessary credits on their required courses for studies carried on in the Bible College. If this is done a new future will open for the institution. The trustees voted to increase the endowment to $100,000 by the time of our centennial in 1909, and the college has enlisted in the centennial campaign for that purpose.

The gift of $25,000 by Mr. Carnegie for the new academic hall of Christian College, is stirring up the friends of that institution to raise an endowment of $25,000 as a condition of making good that gift. The college has had a very prosperous year, and graduated a class of 17 young women. It has a bright future before it. The commencement address by George H. Combs, Kansas City, was greatly appreciated by the large audience which heard it.

C. W. B. M in Missouri.

Are you planning to be in Hannibal for the state convention? You can not afford not to be there. You are needed, and your auxiliary work at home needs very much all you can gain and take back to it from this gathering. The committee has placed at our disposal one of the nicest rooms in the church, where we may meet each other and where we may see what other auxiliaries are using as a means to growth. We ask every auxiliary that has a printed calendar or program for the year to send at least one copy for display. If any have pictures, maps or anything that will be suggestive of help to other workers, please lend these. Mark your name and address on anything you lend, that it may be returned to its owner. Send all articles for this room to Mrs. T. B. Arnold, 913 Church street, Hannibal, Mo. Send at once, please. Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

Missouri Prohibition Convention.

A call has been issued by the Prohibition State Executive Committee for a convention to be held at Cameron on Thursday, June 14, at 10 a. m., for the purpose of nominating a state ticket, electing a new state central committee, adopting a platform, and transacting such other business as may come before the convention. For the first time in its history the convention is to meet in a Christian church. We are informed that the program is going to be an excellent one. Among those to be present is the Hon. Homer L. Castle, of Pennsylvania, who was the leading factor in exposing the corruption existing in the treasury department of the state in the last campaign which led to the overthrow of the Quay regime. The Hon. W. G. Wolfenbarger, of Nebraska, another bright man of the nation, will also be on the program, together with Prof. H. D. Patton, ex-state chairman of Pennsylvania, and National Chairman Charles R. Jones.

All persons known to be Prohibitionists, or who shall declare their intention of supporting the Prohibition party in the future, will be entitled to seats in the convention, but it is desired that the counties and representative districts elect delegates wherever possible.

A rally and mass meeting will be held on Wednesday evening preceding the convention proper. A rate of one fare plus 50 cents has been made for the round trip. Charles E. Stokes is the state chairman, and E. E. McClelland is the secretary, and the headquarters are at 1123 East Twelfth street, Kansas City, Mo.

To the Bible School Workers.

For the State Bible School Convention at Hannibal I am to conduct a round-table. The theme announced is "The Up-to-Date Bible School." The theme will be changed to "The Successful Bible School." This is not to be a set address, but a drawing out of the best thought of the convention. I want all Bible school workers to come prepared to answer some of the following questions in brief, telling sentences. We want this session to be like a rapid-fire gun. We want 1,300 shots to the minute, and every shot to hit the mark. Study these questions and come prepared to answer:

1. What departments should the successful Bible school have? 2. How many superintendents? 3. What are the negative and positive qualifications of a good superintendent? 4. How many teachers? 5. What are the qualifications of a good teacher? 6. What constitutes lesson preparation? 7. What is successful teaching? 8. What duties should the pastor have in the school? 9. What members of the church should be members of the Bible school? 10. What exercises and time should be given to opening and closing of the school? 11. What is the value of a teacher's meeting? 12. What is the object of the Bible school? 13. What are some of the secrets of Bible school success? 14. What helps are necessary to successful Bible school work?

After looking over these questions, if you think of others that are not fairly included in some of these, write me at once and I will try to include them in the revised list which will be before the convention. When I accepted this place on the program I was allowed 45 minutes for the service. A recent notice from the state secretary informs me that I am to be limited to 30 minutes. If I were to make the whole speech this would be time enough; but it will not be time enough for round-table work, and I hope the program committee will yet find a way to give us the time at first allowed.

To Missouri Endeavorers.

I am sure you want your society adequately reported at our next state convention, and I am sure you would give me all the help within your power.

Money.—The superintendent receives no salary, but his expenses in gathering statistics and helping the societies are considerable. It takes quite a little sum to carry on our work as it should be conducted. Have you sent an offering from your society yet? If not, do not neglect it a day longer. Send what you can to the superintendent. We need money very much right now.

Report Card.—Do not neglect this. My reports must be made up from these cards.

Hannibal Convention.—A great program has been prepared. In addition to our regular program we have three conferences on the side. A rate of one fare for the roundtrip plus 50 cents has been made. Don't miss it. Some societies have pledged to send 50 delegates. Stir out now.

FEDERATION ❧ A Symposium

Some Questions on Federation.

The following questions were sent out by the Editors to a number of brethren, and we continue in this issue the publication of their replies.

1. Defining church federation as an agreed-upon method of co-operation in those things which the co-operating churches hold in common, and in which each co-operating Christian body has full freedom to be true to its convictions of truth and duty, are we not, as advocates of Christian union, logically committed to the federation movement as the next practicable step in the direction of the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples, and as a practical manifestation of the degree of unity which already exists?

2. Do you approve of the Basis of Federation submitted to the evangelical churches of America for their approval, by the late Inter-Church Conference in New York City, as presenting a practicable plan for such co-operation?

By F. M. Green.

I have considered the two questions presented by The Christian-Evangelist in regard to the matter of "federation" with certain religious bodies which have been marked "special" in the calendar of Christian forces, and have examined with care the contents of the magazine of explosives sealed by the Inter-Church Conference lately held in New York City. I have handled the contents gingerly for fear I might be exploded if I were not unusually careful. So far I have not been able to find anything that, in my judgment, was sinful, deceptive or controvertible, but rather a genuine effort on the part of good people with differences, to find some way to minify differences and magnify unities, so that the Word might have free course and our creed be glorified in the earth.

There are a heap of bad things I wish were not in myself, or in anybody else, but with this confession I will not do violence to my convictions if I answer "yes" to each of the two questions submitted by The Christian-Evangelist.

By William Oeschger.

It was my privilege to attend the Southern Illinois Christian Ministerial Institute, held at Albion on May 8, 9 and 10. The Institute proved to be a very great success. The discussions were, as a rule, very helpful. The crowning feature was the address by J. H. Garrison on "The Present Phase of the Christian Union Problem." It was one of the greatest addresses that it has ever been my lot to hear. Its spirit and force of logic were simply irresistible. A great prophet was speaking from the mount of vision the mighty things of God. The impression that it made upon me I shall carry with me as long as life shall last.

I have carefully read both sides of this federation question, pro and con, and after careful consideration, I want to say that I am heart and soul with the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist in his earnest crusade for Church Federation. As it appears to me, we have nothing to lose and everything to gain. Not to be found in line with this great movement for unity would make us appear to others that we are not sincere in our plea for the union of God's people. The present time is a crisis in which a test of our sincerity for our plea for union is being made. To me it appears that to refuse to federate would be to find ourselves weighed in the balances and found wanting.

There is one thing that has shown itself in the course of controversy that I wish to offer an earnest protest against. It is that men should insist upon our missionary secretaries declaring themselves on this matter of federation—not only asking for their views, but intimidating them by informing them that if they, the secretaries, espouse the cause of federation they need no longer look for any more missionary offerings from them and the churches they can influence. Such a course, in the mind of the writer, is simply vicious. It is the rule or ruin policy. For my part, the various secretaries of our different missionary organizations may be pronounced antagonists of church federation; that is their right, just as it is my right to favor it; but I shall never allow that to deter me in raising and sending in just as large an offering to our missionary boards as I can get. Any other course is worthy of censure.

Since there are those who are bitterly opposed to taking up this question in our general missionary conventions, I suggest, in order not to embarrass our missionary secretaries, by insisting that it be given a hearing, that a special meeting be called of all those that are in favor of church federation. Let the meeting be called in some central part of the country. St. Louis, Chicago or Indianapolis would all be very good places in which to hold such a meeting. It might be that it could be held at Buffalo just before or right after our general missionary convention this fall. At such a meeting an organization could be perfected whose end and aim it would be to co-operate with those of other church communions in the matter of church federation. To me it seems that the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist should call such a meeting. There are a great number of us that are heart and hand with Brother Garrison in this stand he is taking for church federation. We do not care, however, to wrangle with those who are opposed to it. In a meeting called of those who are in favor of federation we could perfect an organization which could at once proceed to do constructive work along this line.

By J. F. Berry.

I have been preaching in the Christian Church 45 years and have been a free man in Christ for 55. I read "The Christian Standard," "The Christian Century" and The Christian-Evangelist and speak freely and intelligently. I thank God for the Wesleys and their adherents, who for a century have proclaimed in word, in song and in a life burning with zeal, free salvation to all; and so potent has been their work that multitudes of their religious neighbors, forgetting their Calvinism, have heartily joined in their blessed proclamation.

I also thank the Lord for the Presbyterians who, brought up in the fear and admonition of the Lord the Campbells and Stone, enabling them by their deep research of the Bible, fervent zeal for the truth and keen insight into the religious world about them, to raise the cry "back to Christ!" And, praise the Lord, that by the direction of these godly men, we have been brought to Jesus and his apostles. And by their inspired lessons we have learned to accept no name but Christians; no rule of life but the Bible, and no creed but the Christ.

And now for two generations, bearing the infallible name Christian, guided by the unerring rule of life, the Bible, and trusting in the unchangeable creed, the Christ, we have been preaching in word, in song and in a life, simple yet earnest, the whole counsel of God, until myriads of our religious neighbors have taken up our watchword, "Back to Christ!" and his inspired apostles. Shall we refuse them a seat with us at our Master's feet? God forbid! I, for one, hail with joy this divine impulse and will gladly exchange thoughts with them under our common Master, hoping in the near future we may all come to the unity of the faith.

Cover Them Over.

Cover the hearts that have beaten so high,
Beaten with hopes that were born but to die;
Hearts that have burned in the heat of the fray,
Hearts that have yearned for the homes far away.
Hearts that beat high in the charge's loud tramp,
Hearts that low fell in the prison's foul damp.
Once they were swelling with courage and will,
Now they are lying pulseless and still;
Once they were glowing with friendship and love,
Now the great souls have gone soaring above,
Bravely their blood to the nation they gave,
Then in earth's bosom they found them a grave.
Cover them over—yes, cover them over—
Parent, and husband, and brother, and lover:
Shrine in your hearts these dead heroes of ours,
And cover them over with beautiful flowers.

Clerical Types—The Itinerant.

"My year's work closes with the H——— Church December 31. Will be open to a call at that time. A Kentucky field would suit me better Address, A. B., H———, W. Va."

Is that ring familiar? We have observed the same little essay, bearing the same signature, appearing annually for the past six years.

Why "My year's work"? Why can it not be written "my five, ten, twenty years' work"? Why does the earth in her circuit about the sun whirl this good brother out of the pastorate with every revolution? Why this ministerial vagrancy? Why this heavenly hoboing? Why are the West Virginia hills enticing this year, repelling next? Why is Kentucky bluegrass so bewitching today, and Georgia watermelons tomorrow? Is it the climate which changes? Is it the wife's health which gives way? Is it a famine in the land? Is it a pestilence that wasteth at noonday? Is it a lion in the way? Is it a mole hill assuming mountainous proportions? Is it the head of Diotrephes projecting? Is it a contraction of the currency?

Is it an awakening by sounds at the bottom of the sermon keg? Is it an arctic current coming up the church aisles? Is it a study of pew-making while the harangue is being handed out in space? Or, is it the mirage of a magic city, green fields, pleasant pastures, still waters?

Why this alarming ministerial moving, this pastoral peregrinating, this circulation of clergymen, this skedaddling of sky-pilots? R. E. Elmore.

Our Budget

—The review of Brother's Haley's paper on Union between Baptists and Disciples, by Dr. H. F. Colby, which we print this week, completes the four principal addresses delivered at the Indianapolis Congress on the relation between Baptists and Disciples. No other journal, so far as we have observed, has published all these articles entire. It seemed to us that the importance of the subject and the ability of the speakers justified this course. The voluntary discussion following Dr. Colby's paper pointed out a number of things that, in the judgment of the speakers, needed correction, but our readers will be able to supply these criticisms without our mentioning them. President Mullins closed the discussion in a speech admirable for its spirit and breadth.

—Children's Day next Lord's day.

—The children contributed over $61,000 last year; let us make it $75,000 this year, at least.

—Keep in mind the Missouri Convention, Hannibal, June 15-20. A great convention is anticipated.

—Churches should pay up all debts, and the brethren should help Brother Abbott finish his permanent fund of $20,000 before the convention. See to this at once.

—If any reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will dispose of the complete copy of the Campbell-Rice Debate at a reasonable price we will be glad to hear from him.

—Nothing is more misleading than the use of names. If a man wants to perpetuate a string of falsehoods and slanders against one or more of his brethren, and can find a religious journal (?) with a low enough ethical standard to admit his vileness into its columns, he is likely to sign it, "Veritas," as if that name could conceal the identity of its cowardly and dastardly author.

—The state conventions and college commencements are all important to the successful on-going of our Cause.

—A brother editor remarks: "The Disciples of Christ are ahead of the rest of us in discussing the subject of church federation." Of course; they are generally ahead in the discussion of any question relating to Christian union, and will have finished this subject and taken up some other before some of our more slow-going religious neighbors tackle it. They will have the benefit of our discussion, however, which will be instructive both in the way of example and warning.

—J. D. Lawrence, Living Link Evangelist, supported by the Christian Publishing Company, is now available for meetings anywhere he may be called. Weak churches unable to contribute to the expenses of a meeting will be given preference.

—J. W. Brown will continue by unanimous request in the ministry at Moline, Kansas.

—L. L. Carpenter will dedicate the new building at Collierville, Tenn., June 10.

—Drake University is making big preparations for its twenty-fifth anniversary June 5-11.

J. W. Lowber, of Austin, Tex., has been giving a series of chapel addresses at the State University on "Education and Character."

—H. Brown has recently come from New York to take up the work at Rockwell City, Ia. His son, J. I. Brown, is pastor at Sac City.

—H. S. Gilliam has completed his work at Hastings, Neb., and gone to Oklahoma City to take charge of the Bible school work of Oklahoma.

—"Every member here needs your paper," writes one sister who is going to make a house-to-house canvass of the church members in her town.

—O. M. Thomason, late of the Indian Territory, has located at Davenport, Wash. "A fine people here, and they are as sociable as Texas people," he writes.

—The meeting of the ministers of St. Louis and district to confer on the subject of the evangelistic campaign has been postponed until after the Hannibal convention.

—A. O. Swartwood desires to make a correction in reference to the South Dakota convention, which is to meet at Carthage, June 21-24 instead of at Brookings.

—Representatives of the various white churches of Jacksonville, Fla., have been giving a series of lectures before the colored students of the Waters Collegiate School of that city.

—C. C. Morrison has been asked unanimously by the board of the First Christian Church, Springfield, Ill., to reconsider his resignation, and it is stated that he will remain in Springfield.

—Bro. M. M. Davis paid THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a brief visit as he passed through St. Louis en route for Lexington, Ky., where he was to preach the baccalaureate last Lord's day for the Campbell Hagerman College.

—The "Martin family" began a meeting at Marion, Ky., on Sunday, with J. Shelby Rowe. They were in attendance at the southwest Kentucky convention, where Richard Martin spoke and Edna Faye Martin sang.

—The preachers of East Washington have just assembled at Spokane to organize for the convention and coming meeting. The Sunday-school convention of East Washington and North Idaho has just met also.

—The brethren at Hazelwood, Ind., are struggling to build a meeting-house and will appreciate any outside help. Communication may be had with J. G. Wilson or Emmet Craven, or the minister, Anson B. McDonald.

—"The Barbarian," edited by a Christian preacher, E. E. Crawford, and a Jewish rabbi, at Albuquerque, N. M., is the latest venture in the field of journalism. It is bright and breezy, like the great Southwest. See advertisement elsewhere.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is in receipt of an invitation to the marriage of Artie Beatrice, daughter of Brother and Sister F. N. Calvin, of the Compton Heights Christian Church, St. Louis, to Dr. Arthur J. Clay, Tuesday, June 5. Our best wishes and congratulations go with the young couple.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST staff enjoyed the pleasure of a call from J. T. and Dudley Eshelman, of Tacoma, Wash. These brothers are now in business, and we note that the former is on the program of the coming state convention to represent the Business Men's Association.

—Thomas C. Clark, who is a frequent contributor to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, writes us that he has a plan by which Junior and Senior Endeavor Societies and Sunday-schools may make from ten to twenty-five dollars. Brother Clarke's address is Bloomington, Ind.

—The Eighth District Convention of Nebraska, held at Bartley, was a success in every way. A Ministerial Association was organized, with W. E. Rambo, of Alma, as president, and R. A. Mills, of Bartley, as secretary. Next year the convention will meet at Arapahoe.

—J. M. Monroe, corresponding secretary of Oklahoma, has recently dedicated the following seven churches: Carmen, Spencer, Cement, Kendrick, Texola, Aydelotte and Niles. At each place the amount of indebtedness was raised on dedication day, and in every instance but one far exceeded.

—We regret to learn that Bruce Brown, of Mansfield, Ohio, was called to Rose Hill, Ia., May 19, by the death of his mother. She was 71 years of age and had been a member of the Christian Church for 50 years. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST extends its sympathies to Brother Brown.

—The Northwestern Ohio Ministerial Association will meet in the Central Church, Toledo, June 4. In the morning Brother Gunkle will talk concerning his boys. In the afternoon J. O. Shelburne will speak on the simultaneous campaign. W. H. Willison is president and E. K. Van Winkle secretary.

—D. W. Moore, late of Springfield, Mo., has accepted the pastorate of the Central Christian Church at Pueblo, Colo., which J. H. Mohorter resigned in order to devote himself to the work of the Benevolent Association. Brother Moore enters upon his new field of work June 1. "The ties that bind are hard to sever," he writes us.

—G. F. Bradford, pastor of our church at Eureka, Kan., was greatly surprised to receive the nomination for Congress at the hands of the Prohibition party in the fourth congressional district. He will make an active campaign as far as this is possible without interfering with his church work.

—F. G. Tyrrell has decided to settle in Los Angeles, Cal., and enter upon the practice of law. Brother Tyrrell formerly practiced law in Missouri before he took up the work of the ministry. He will no doubt continue to preach as occasion may offer. He has just been visiting at Harrisonville, Mo., where William Pearn has been preaching during the past six months. Brother Tyrrell reports the membership of 225 as united and harmonious and says the pastor is known and liked by every one.

Rapid Method Bible Study

at our "Summer Normal Term," or by correspondence. Term opens June 11. Let us send you announcements. Write Pres. Chas. J. Burton, Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

—The Editors of The Christian-Evangelist extend their congratulations to Commodore Wesley Cauble on the occasion of his marriage June 6 to Miss Mary Emma Hawley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David M. Hawley, Huntington, Ind. Brother Cauble is pastor of our church at Greencastle, and is doing an excellent work there.

—The Brooks Brothers made the opportunity of the evangelistic services conducted at Paris, Mo., by W. T. and Arthur Brooks, the occasion of a family reunion at their old home place north of that town. Mrs. M. K. Brooks, of Columbia, Mo., and her sons, Creighton and Clyde, joined the other boys and spent a delightful day locating the familiar places of their youth.

—We are glad to hear that William Woods College has closed its present year's work with the greatest success in its history. Dr. Woods has bought six acres of ground north of the present campus and agreed to wipe out all the deficit. President Jones is authorized to go ahead with the construction of the chapel to which we referred in a recent issue of The Christian-Evangelist.

—Commencement exercises of the Christian Temple, Baltimore, Md., will begin on the third Lord's day in June, and the baccalaureate sermon will be delivered by W. S. Hoye, of Beaver Creek. The exercises will close on Thursday evening with an address to the graduates by Dr. John Y. Dobbins, of Baltimore. Peter Ainslie is doing a fine work along educational as well as ministerial lines.

—The Western Washington Convention program has been issued, and the convention at Seattle June 11-15 promises to be an interesting one. Dean Sanderson will open the proceedings with an evening address on Monday. The whole of the next day is given to the C. W. B. M., the following two days being devoted to the convention proper. A. L. Chapman, F. Waldon, R. E. Dunlap, J. T. Eshelman, R. H. Ellett, A. C. Vail, W. F. Cowden, M. L. Rose and W. A. Moore are among the speakers.

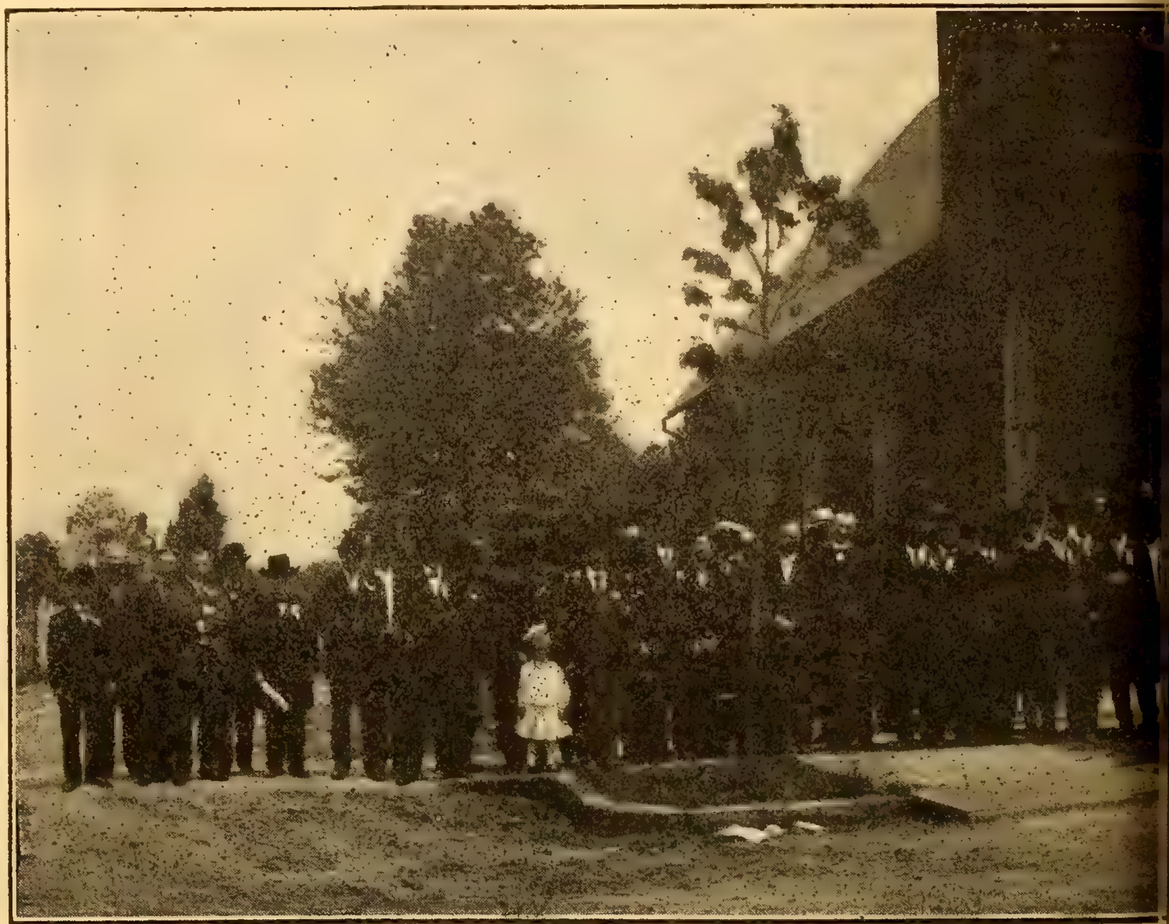
—We regret a number of errors that crept into recent issues. In the poem on our front page, May 17, the second line of the second stanza, the word "surprise" should have been "sunrise." In last week's issue Brother Power was made to say Stambone which should, of course, have been Stamboul. Instead of the city being composed of Turks, Greeks, Americans Jews, as our types stated, the word "Americans" should have been "Armenians."

—G. W. Thompson, late of Kirksville, Mo., paid a pleasant call to The Christian-Evangelist office on his way to enter upon the pastorate of the Richmond Street Church, Cincinnati, O. Brother Thompson has been doing some good evangelistic work, and will, we trust, have the cordial support of the entire membership of the church which he starts out to lead and which has the problems before it of the down town church in a large city. It is only in union that there can be success in such a field.

—J. M. Berry, Magazine, Ark., is desirous of finding a capable young man to do evangelistic work of the pioneer kind in Western Arkansas. This is a part of the country rapidly filling with a good class of people; towns are springing up in many portions throughout that portion of the state; good public schools are being established, and in addition not a few excellent academies and colleges. The whole section is awakening to a realization of its possibilities. Capable men are invited to correspond with Brother Berry.

—We are permitted to announce the marriage on June 28, at Sedalia, Mo., of Miss Marion Elvira Jones, of that city, to J. B. Hunley, pastor of the Christian Church, Canon City, Colo. The Christian-Evangelist extends, in advance, its hearty congratulations to both parties and its best wishes for their mutual happiness and usefulness in the Master's service. Brother Hunley is a young minister of splendid attainments, and Miss Jones is a musician and singer of renown, having won two medals and a special certificate from the Royal Academy of London, and having been elected an associate member of that institution.

—T. J. Ashton, writing of the California state Sunday-school convention, says the attendance was large and the meeting very interesting. It was brought out that up to the present time more than 100 have enrolled for the international convention, to be held in Rome in 1907. Our own Bro. C. C. Chapman gave a practical address on "The Sunday-school as a Business Enterprise" and recommended that every school have a specially trained superintendent, employed on a salary, to devote his entire time to it. He stated that the blood of the Pilgrim Fathers is running very thin in the rising generation and giant efforts must be made for good citizenship.



—Our church at Meridian, Miss., has just passed its twelfth milestone. Its present membership is about 150. W. M. Baker, who is in his third year as pastor, is very much beloved, and under him all the departments of the church are in a harmonious and growing condition. Brother Baker has just left to hold a meeting at Bessemer, Ala. R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, Ky., assisted by J. E. Hawes, of Ada, Ohio, as singer, is to hold a meeting for the church in November. Bro. S. K. Cozine writes us that as a people we have been much misunderstood at Meridian, but that a change of sentiment is coming. Owing to the growth of the business section of the city our brethren have purchased a fine location in anticipation of selling their present property at a good price and removing to a better location for church purposes in the near future.

—C. W. Zaring, Jacksonville, Fla., writes: "On account of the fire that swept Jacksonville on May 3, 1901, the First Church knows how to sympathize with our brethren in California, and realizes the assistance that they need at this time. At the regular meeting of our official board last Sunday it was unanimously voted that the First Church should set aside the second Sunday in June to make an offering to help rebuild the California church, and I was requested to present this matter to the American Christian Missionary Society." Our readers have already seen the appeal of the missionary society in behalf of San Francisco and the brethren on the coast who suffered from the recent disaster. It will be well if many churches should follow the example of the church at Jacksonville, which has just risen out of its ashes, and send assistance to our home board for the brethren on the coast.

—We are glad to know that our church building at Santa Rosa, Cal., which we understood had been completely destroyed, has been damaged only to the extent of about $2,000. It is a $16,000 building. While the condition of affairs, so far as the church building is concerned, is better than we have been led to believe, a great many of the members, and especially those who are best able to pay, have been the heaviest losers through the earthquake and fire, so that help will be needed for Santa Rosa, as well as for San Francisco. We believe that the American Christian Missionary Society, which is handling a relief fund, will note this fact and will give some help; but if any of our readers wish to send direct to Santa Rosa, we may state that the secretary of our church there is A. C. McMeans, Third street, Santa Rosa, Cal., who will be glad to acknowledge any assistance. The entire business portion of the city was completely wiped out and a large part of the residence section was wrecked also.

—A gentleman connected with some other religious body, we presume, writes: "While stopping for a while with some of the people of your church in this place I have read some copies of your paper, and have been happily surprised to find a Christian editor of your prominence expressing views on the value of unity in the activity of the Christian world that have for years impressed me as being the only ground supported by the spirit of the entire Bible, and especially the purpose of the Christ as expressed by the New Testament and his influence on Christian history." This was not intended as a rebuke, but it is, nevertheless. That one of another religious body should be "happily surprised" to find a Christian editor and a Christian journal connected with a movement whose specialty is the advocacy of Christian union, really advocating such a plea, should remind us that we are not letting our light shine with that brilliancy that ought to characterize the advocates of such a cause at such a time.

—The question of Christian union in the light of a friendly approach to our brethren on the part of the Baptists of Ontario and Quebec will come up at the June convention at Owen Sound. A fraternal delegation from the Baptists was recently received by our board of Ontario missions and a preliminary committee appointed that may have something definite to report later.

—M. S. Johnson gives a very fine testimonial of the work of Roger H Fife in his meeting at Litchfield, Ill., where the membership of the church was increased 50 per cent during the meeting, and every department of the work quickened and enlarged. The building enterprise was launched on the last day and money pledged to carry it to completion, while all expenses of the meeting were paid without any difficulty, and a cash balance left in the treasury. Brother Fife's methods are entirely free from sensationalism.

Help "The Pacific Christian."

The great disaster in San Francisco completely destroyed "The Pacific Christian" office. The paper was having a hard struggle to exist before this calamity came. Help is much needed to revive it and put it on its feet. A little help from their more fortunate brethren in the East would lift a great burden from those who have charge of the Pacific coast paper and greatly benefit the cause in that region. While helping churches and other agencies in that stricken city, why not help this brave little paper that at great sacrifice has stood at its post of duty so faithfully? What is done should be done at once. Send all contributions to G. K. Berry, 164 East Thirty-third street, Portland, Ore., as matters are still in an unsettled condition in San Francisco.

If the preachers in the East wish to read the coast news and also help a worthy cause, they can send their subscriptions to the above address. The price to preachers is $1 per year.

The New Secretary of the Benevolent Association.

J. H. Mohorter, late pastor of the Central Christian Church, of Pueblo, Colo., who has been chosen successor to George L. Snively as general secretary of our Benevolent Association, arrived in St. Louis about May 1, and has entered upon his work. He brought with him to this city his aged mother, who has been in feeble health for a long time. Last week she departed this life. Brief funeral services were conducted by J. M. Philputt, pastor of the Union Avenue Christian Church, and the body will be placed in a vault in a cemetery in this city to await removal to the family burying ground in Delaware. It has not been long since Brother Mohorter lost his wife, who had been an invalid for several years. He has the sympathy, we are sure, of the entire brotherhood in these bereavements.

We are in receipt of an official statement from the members of the official board of the Central Christian Church at Pueblo certifying to the high esteem in which Brother Mohorter was held by that church and the community, and to the great service which he rendered to the cause in Colorado during his pastorate. After mentioning the large number of additions to the church, the statement adds that "above all activities he has impressed on the memory of his congregation a zeal for Christ that will count more for the cause in the years to come than mere membership added during his pastorate. He has been active in all good works and public charities outside of his duties as pastor. He has been in close touch with the business and everyday world. He has raised high the standing of our congregation in the community, and has roused the spirit to aid everything that makes for righteousness. He has gained the confidence and esteem of all other religious denominations." The statement commends him to all Christian people, and regrets the necessity of giving him up "to the wider field of usefulness in God's work."

It is with no little pleasure that we welcome Brother Mohorter to St. Louis and to his great work in the field of Christian benevolence. We believe, with him, that it has mighty possibilities for the cause we plead as well as for the general human welfare.

Christian University.

Commencement exercises are June 3-7. The main address this year will be by George L. Snively, of St. Louis, and J. H. O. Smith, of Indiana. Ray Lessig, minister at Bowen, Ill., will receive his B. D., while G. H. Barrett, who has lately been called to the work at Boonville, Mo., will receive the A. B. and B. D. Both are very strong men. The summer school opens June 14 and continues six weeks. In each subject there will be recitations twice per day. Here is the opportunity to make up grades, prepare for teachers' certificates or pass a vacation in a profitable manner. Courses in Hebrew, New Testament Greek, German, French, Latin and history will be offered. If any one wishes to come our way let him write to the writer or Prof. F. L. Black, who will conduct the school.

The Ohio Convention

The thirty-first volume of the history of the Ohio C. W. B. M. is closed. The gloriously climactic chapter was written at Uhrichsville May 21, 22. The Ohio women gave the best report of their religious conduct in their history. They had a fine convention. Their financial statement was very inspiring. These good women offered $21,827.12. Of this $18,831.10 went to No. 152 E. Market street, Indianapolis, $2,996.02 went to all the phases of the state work and for some special work. There are 227 auxiliaries with 5,676 members. Eleven new auxiliaries were organized. The financial gain was about $4,270. There are 134 Junior organizations with 3,134 members and they raised $1,946.03. The speech-making was of a very high order. To say that W. M. Forest made the Monday night address is sufficient comment on its worth.

Miss Mary Graybeil spoke with a true eloquence for India, where she has spent 24 years of her life. The president's address, by Mrs. M. J. Grable, was a powerful appeal. It ought to be read by every woman in Ohio. Mrs. Ida Harrison, of Lexington, Ky., told most forcibly of "The Debt to the Fathers," while C. C. Smith gave a very telling triangular address on the negro work. Mrs. Grable was reelected president, and Miss Lyons corresponding secretary.

The plan of work for the coming year contemplates: 1. To employ a field organizer and an office helper. 2. To send $25,000 to the national treasury. 3. To offer $2,500 for Ohio work. 4. To secure 2,500 subscribers to "The Tidings." 5. To bring the membership up to 6,000.

The Ohio Society began its session on Tuesday night. The report of the board was made by Secretary Bartlett. It showed $13,168.36 raised for Ohio missions. The offerings from the churches and individuals were nearly $11,000. The gain in receipts was about $1,000. The debt was reduced $950. Men employed 35. Days of service 6,263. Sermons 2,687. Additions 717. Thirty-two churches were assisted. The trust funds now reach nearly $55,000. The best sign in our Ohio work is the constantly growing offerings from the churches. The honor roll increases too. More churches reach their apportionment.

It is very hard to try even to give any report of the speech-making of such a convention. The president's address was unique. Judge Webber popularized himself last fall by openly revolting against Governor Herrick. The politicians are now trying to defeat him in his re-election for congress. His speech was on the history of reform and reformer. It struck a responsive chord, though not exactly missionary in character.

The Wednesday morning theme was Ohio missions.

The Ohio Society is now 54 years old, having been organized at Wooster in 1852. M. L. Buckley, of Collinwood, spoke on "The Record" of the past 54 years. "The Present Record" was told by A. F. Stahl, of Akron. "The Field" was discussed by one of the state missionaries, L. A. Warren, of Columbus. Clyde Darsie, of Bowling Green, in an intensely practical way, discussed "The Ability of the Churches" in occupying the open fields.

There are 24 county seats in Ohio where the Disciples have no church. The last address of the forenoon session was on "A Church in Every County Seat," by the stately Kentuckian, Thomas W. Pinkerton, pastor of the Kenton Church of Christ. Mr. Pinkerton is an Abraham Lincoln type of man and made a great speech.

Wednesday afternoon was given to an evangelistic conference. J. N. Scholes, of Lima, spoke thoughtfully of "The Content of the Evangelistic Sermon." E. J. Meacham, of Wilmington, spoke out of much experience and very suggestively on "How to Prepare the Local Church." R. W. Abberley and H. Newton Miller were absent. John E. Pounds gave an excellent ministerial relief talk. Wednesday night W. S. Priest spoke with great force on "Christian Endeavor and Missions." "Ohio, Our Own Strategic Ground," was the theme of a thoroughly prepared and faultlessly delivered address by J. R. Ewers, of Youngstown.

Thursday morning was given to business and Sunday-school interest. Welsheimer, of Canton; Allison, of Cleveland; Kerns, of Massillon; Hatcher, of Hamilton, and Miss Ewalt, state superintendent of primary work, spoke.

Thursday afternoon was given to centennial interests in addresses by Warren, Cramblet, McLean and Wright, in the interest that each represents. C. B. Sala spoke for the business men. The greatest treat of the convention was the four studies in the sermon on the mount, by President H. C. King, of Oberlin. President King is too well known to need any special praise. He is a very keen and thorough psychologist and his very careful and thorough analysis of the Beatitudes was interesting, helpful and faith-strengthening. How new and how wonderful is the teaching of our Lord in the hands of such a man as President King! If he ever comes to our convention again he will be accorded a hearty welcome. He made the final address on Thursday night on "The Spiritual Side of Christian Union." The writer had to leave before this address and can not give its thought.

Things Quickly Told.

Dayton gets the next convention.

Secretary Bartlett took the picture printed elsewhere. Only a part of the convention was present.

H. Newton Miller will preside next year.

S. H. Bartlett was elected secretary for the eighth time, but served notice that this would be his last year. A committee consisting of Pinkerton, Wise, Lowe, Kleeberger and Pounds was appointed to find a new man and report at Dayton.

New faces among preachers were Roy L. Brown, Grant Waller and Brother Shellenberger.

George L. Snively was taking subscriptions for The Christian-Evangelist and selling a trunk full of books.

A. Linkletter, of West Virginia, and J. A. Joyce, secretary of Western Pennsylvania, came over to see how things were done.

While sitting under the spell of such addresses as were given and breathing the spirit of such a fellowship, how small and mean and abominable did much that has been in our religious press of late appear. Those who enjoyed the convention surely felt like saying, "What ails some of us?"

There was a strong sentiment against using the rostrum of our convention for advertising lyceum talent.

Mrs. Grable is an ideal presiding officer.

C. A. Freer reported for the local press.

The Methodist Protestant people furnished the chicken at 25 cents per eat. Some questioned the orthodoxy of the chicken.

The Endeavorers will support the new mission at Carey.

W. A. Roust has resigned at Mount Vernon and Owen Blackwell at New Vienna.

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY,
Y. M. C. A. BUILDING,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

The attendance was not up to the standard. Only a little over 300 enrolled.

There was not a poor address given on the program.

If we could all live up to the ideals President King found in the Beatitudes most of us would not know ourselves soon.

A strong, thorough campaign will be pushed for paying the debt this year.

The address of Ewers ought to be printed and scattered all over Ohio.

Just about all the kickers staid at home.

"Anywhere, so it is forward," was the keynote.

A. McLean went from the convention to Hiram to dedicate the new church last Sunday.

Jessie Brown Pounds said: "If we could all stay just as good as we feel now while sitting here, how much we could do when we get home."

Oklahoma Ministerial Institute

The lectureship met in Blackwell, Okla., May 15, and lasted three days. The attendance was not large, compared with that of Missouri or Texas perhaps, but those present seemed greatly interested and I think attended all or nearly all the sessions of the lectureship. There was about as near unanimity throughout this entire course of lectures as I ever saw or heard of. However, there was a little divergence, as we shall see presently. Interest centered principally in President Zollars, of Texas, who gave several lectures, but I heard only two of them: 1. "How Men are Made"; 2. "Our Plea and Its Prospects."

It would be difficult to exaggerate the interest taken in these two lectures, as well as the one on "Christian Education," which I did not hear. In discussing the making of men, Brother Zollars urged the co-operation plan, and dwelt at some length on the ideal, showing that the ideal of the ancients was money and wealth. The Grecian ideal was art, beauty; the Roman, power, authority, law. God's ideal is not these, but goodness (see Ex. 33:18,19). The speaker dwelt at some length also on Wendell Philips' suggestion, "Put a great truth on two feet and start it across the continent and it will revolutionize it"; hence the power of example.

The fact that we were to have a discussion on federation on Thursday was, perhaps, one of the reasons why so much interest was manifested in the lecture on "Our Plea and Its Possibilities." However this may be, one thing is certain: we still have "a plea." Brother Zollars showed the pleas of Luther, Calvin, Wesley, and how they prepared the way for the plea of the Campbells and others. And further, how the Y. M. C. A., Y. P. S. C. E., the Sunday or Bible school movement and the great missionary operations were currents in the very direction of our plea. And some of us could see no logical halting place till we reach federation, while others would have dissented. Of course, Brother Zollars was too wise to intrude on this ground which was to be discussed in three papers the next day.

I have one suggestion to make to Brother Zollars and others on our indebtedness to others for "our plea," namely: the Baptists and the Congregationalists. To the first for showing whom to baptize and how, and to both for giving us personal and congregational liberty.

Thursday morning was spent discussing the subject of "Constitutional Prohibition." I heard but little of this, and so shall dismiss it in favor of federation. This was discussed by Isom Roberts, of Blackwell; O. L. Smith, of El Reno, and K. C. Ventrees, of Guthrie. Brother Roberts led, laying out the ground, and leaving the discussion to the other two. Brother Smith summarized "Our Position" under three heads: unity, loyalty, liberty. He attempted to show that we were and are a unit on these points and that they are compatible with federation, as defined in the preamble and by-laws of the New York convention. Brother Smith did this with ability, and in a splendid spirit, and I felt a little sorry "for the man who cometh after the king." But he came, he saw (or we did, or heard, rather), but whether he conquered would, I suppose, depend on the bias of the man who heard. Perhaps I ought to say that Brother Ventrees' paper was in no wise a reply to Brother Smith's. Each was written wholly independently of the other, and written on general principles and in admirable spirit. To me it seemed that these brethren were looking at the subject from very different standpoints, or discussing different subjects. It is hard for me to see how honest men could get so far apart in so short a time. Brother Ventree filed several objections to our entering the federation movement, but if I had the files of "The Christian Standard" and "The American Christian Review" and "Gospel Advocate" of about a generation ago I could answer every objection I have yet heard to federation in the language of Isaac Errett, when he was the target for objections on missionary Sunday-schools and Y. P. S. C. E. It seems a little peculiar to me that a man who spent his life largely in answering objections to providential movements within the pale of Christendom should have the product of his brain and hand so suddenly turned into the objector column. I do not remember all the objections to federation, but one was that federation was conceived and propagated in denominationalism for denominationalism. Another was that in any controversy submitted to a board of arbitration we would always be outnumbered and prejudices would insure judgment against us. I remember Brother Errett answered both these objections in the Bible school and Y. P. S. C. E. controversies.

A brother put an objection to me privately. Learning that I favored federation, he said: "Call your convention. Let's appoint delegates, clothe them with authority, create a federal head, and be a denomination right." To talk of creating a federal head among Congregationalists, Baptists or Disciples is like talking of monarchy in America with Theodore Roosevelt or William J. Bryan as the monarch.

H. W. Robertson.

A New Church for Cleveland.

The Euclid Avenue Christian Church, of Cleveland, O., the cornerstone of which has just been laid, and an illustration of which appears on this page, will, when completed, cost about one hundred thousand dollars. It is Romanesque in style of architecture and the main auditorium will seat one thousand people and the Sunday-school room over six hundred. The material with which the church is being built is green sandstone with a buff trimming, and the roof is to be tile. It is generally conceded that the building will be one of the neatest and most attractive in Cleveland. The congregation is one of the oldest in the city, having been organized in 1843. The greater part of the exercises took place in the old church structure which had been moved to another part of the lot during the progress of the work on the new building. J. H. Goldner is the minister, and Z. T. Sweeney made the principal address at the cornerstone laying.

Missouri Christian Education Society.

Three years ago a fund of $1,500 was raised at the Columbia convention for what is now known as the Missouri Christian Education Society. No further progress has been made in enlarging this fund. There has been collected all told $47.45. There remains to be collected $685. Loaned, $245.

This is wholly inadequate to do the work needed and should bring the blush to our cheeks. No special agent has gone forth to plead for this fund. Each member of the committee has had his own special field of labor. Hence an apparent neglect of this most vital issue. It is right to endow Bible colleges and amply equip them with professors and the best curricula, but if our students are too poor to pay their way the mission of this endowment is defeated. It is right to create an evangelistic endowment, but if there are no evangelists what good will the money do? Let Bible colleges be endowed. Let evangelistic funds flow like rivers, but when our young men are leaving the state because in eastern cities, and under other auspices there is money enough to meet all expenses, the time has come for us to create ample provision to supply these aspiring young ministers with board and clothing while they are prosecuting their studies. What we are now doing is not a drop in the ocean compared with what we should do.

Is our plea worth advocating? Shall we either abandon it or permit others to do so? When for want of proper encouragement we permit young men to be educated in schools where we are either ignored or not known, are we not abandoning our faith? There must be an educational fund established that will enable us to hold our own young men and to provide them with means to prosecute their studies within our amply endowed colleges. Then can we hope to use to the best advantage the evangelistic fund for which our own plea was by our consent waived at the Marshall convention. What will our preachers and congregations do?

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

J. A. Lord at Bethany, Neb.

The Cotner University Church closed a 13 days' meeting with 59 added to the church—38 by confession and baptism and the rest by statement or from other religious bodies. J. A. Lord, of the "Christian-Standard." did the preaching. The meeting has strengthened the church in many ways. It was a great pleasure as well as a great profit to work with Brother Lord and listen to his simple, earnest and loving presentation of the Gospel plea.

It has been our privilege to have with us in our midsummer institute for Christian workers and our state meeting such men as C. A. Young, of the "Christian-Century"; J. B. Briney, of the "Christian Weekly"; G. P. Coler, of the Ann Arbor Bible chair; W. J. Lhamon, of the Missouri Bible College; Prof. Clinton Lockhart, and others. Last year J. H. O. Smith conducted evangelistic services during the state meeting with great profit. We are determined more and more to make use of the great teaching and evangelistic forces of our brotherhood, refusing any longer to confine ourselves to one meeting a year. We have been so blessed in this midyear effort that we will make it a settled policy. Brother Lord's lectures to the preachers were greatly appreciated and were exceedingly profitable.—J. W. Hilton, Minister.

Montana Christian Endeavor Convention.

The state convention of the Christian Endeavor Societies of Montana was held at Bozeman. By the liberality of our local society, which is a good and growing one, the writer and his better half, with four others, were permitted the pleasure and profit of attendance. Leaving Missoula in company with our own and the delegates from the Presbyterian church, we enjoyed an all-day ride through such magnificent scenery as is to be found only among the grand old Rockies, whose crest we crossed a few miles west of Helena. The passage is made through a tunnel a mile in length. By a route that was strikingly suggestive of a spiral stairway, we descended from the mouth of the tunnel into the splendid Missouri Valley, at the southern side of which nestles close to the foot of the mountains the capital city of the state. We steamed up the valley to its head and through the narrow gateway into the famous Galatin Valley, past Logan, near where the Jefferson, Madison and Galatin Rivers unite and form the mighty Missouri, and on to Bozeman, the metropolis of this beautiful and most fertile valley. As our train followed the course of the little stream, I could hardly realize that it is indeed the beginning of the mighty stream, near whose shores my childhood years were spent. Yet close inspection revealed the presence in the small beginning of many of the features of the full-grown stream. The snags, the willows and the muddy waters—these were all familiar.

As compared with such conventions in the older states, the gathering at Bozeman was not large. Not counting the preachers and the local delegates there were 75 representatives of about 25 societies in attendance. These were there for the good they could get out of the occasion. This made the convention a good one. A deeper interest than has been known for years was developed during the convention. It may not have been her fault, but it was certainly the misfortune of the Christian Church in the state that she was not more largely represented. Only four of our ministers, including the local pastor, were in attendance. It is to be hoped that this will not be the case next year, when the convention will go to Billings. Our return trip was by way of Butte. The scenery along this route is wild beyond description. We spent four hours at Butte, the greatest mining camp in the world. It is a city devoid of beauty. The sulphurous breath of its wealth has blighted this. How many souls are as barren as this city, and from the same cause! Yet it is not all bad. There are earnest, consecrated Christians there. It was our privilege to meet at the convention Brother Groom, the genial pastor of the Shortridge Memorial Church. He is doing a good work in the copper city, in spite of the tremendous pull the other way. We had hoped to meet Brother Brown, of Helena, but he failed to reach the convention. Good reports come from his work at Helena. Brother Irving is doing a fine work in Bozeman. We are much pleased with Missoula and the splendid church here. All departments are doing well. Audiences are good and interest is deepening along all lines. A number of additions have been made to the membership in the past two months, and others are ready to enter. Peace and harmony prevail and prospects for a fine year's work are good. —W. H. Bagby.

Washington.

Nearly one year has elapsed since the missionary convention at Pullman, when the state was divided, with the hope that the smaller districts might be the more thoroughly worked. Meetings will soon be held by the east and west Washington conventions, and we await the reports with a degree of interest. Some good men have come into the state within the year, and some have gone out. No more will our gathering be graced by the genial presence of the beloved J. M. Allen. No man in the state held a larger share in the love of the brethren than did he. His death removes one of the brightest and sweetest spirited ministers from our ranks.——It is a loss to our work in Spokane that B. E. Utz, who so long led the Central Church, has had to close his work on account of sickness. Workmen wear out and step aside or pass away, but their work shall endure if built on Christ.——The jovial J. T. Eshelman, minister at Puyallup, and his brother Dudly, the singing evangelist, are at this writing visiting the home of their boyhood—Missouri.——Ellensburg is greatly strengthened by the Kellems-Shaffer meeting which added 127.——The North Yakima Church raised more than $300 in good pledges the first Sunday in May and will put "our own missionary" to work in central Washington.——Zillah Church continues to prosper under the spiritual guidance of E. E. Francis. Summer is fast approaching, a great fruit crop is assured in the Yakima Valley and our churches must be aggressive to meet the needs of this growing country—Morton L. Rose, Yakima.

Another Battle Royal in Louisiana.

Nobody ever saw a letter in one of our papers from this place before, for one of our preachers was never here before to preach. For four days I have been toiling and lifting, and straining and paying out money in getting the big old American Christian Missionary Society (Wilkes) tent raised and seated and lighted, etc. The big, old tent is now up and stretched as tightly as an umbrella, and actually commands the respect of any man who walks beneath its canvass. It stands upon a beautiful lawn and cost $60 above my own work to ship the tent here and put it in shape for work. It will hold 1,000 people inside of the ropes. I got it up a little sooner than I expected, and day before yesterday sent out circulars three hours before night, stating that I would hold service that night. Over 100 came out. Last night I preached again and 300 were out. To-morrow night (Sunday) night I look for 700 people at least. This is all curiosity, as most of the people never heard of our brotherhood. They are simply coming out to see what we are. We came, as is best, unannounced. We find that we have six members here, or, rather, six who have been members. We have just one man and five women, three of whom are single.

We have already announced that our state convention will meet here June 19-23, 1906. We are here where a sermon was never preached, and where we have but one man, and he working for some one else, and we are to establish a church and get ready to entertain the largest convention we ever had in Louisiana, in just 37 days. We expect to entertain the convention free of charge to any delegate. Not only so, but we must buy a lot and build a house and leave a pastor here when this church is organized. Come to the Ruston convention, June 19, and we will take care of you. You ask who will entertain you? No matter about that; God is not dead. "According to thy faith be it unto you," saith Jesus. We will preach the doors open, by the help of our God. But, now, here is what we do need, and that is some money with which to buy a lot to build here at Ruston—a city of 6,000. Think of it, the State Industrial School is located here, with 1,000 students, and yet one of our preachers never preached here! Not only so, but the state Chautauqua meets each year at this beautiful town. Ruston is 67 miles east of Shreveport, on the Queen and Crescent Railroad at the crossing of the Rock Island and Queen and Crescent. If you want a part in this great undertaking, send us a donation with which to fasten a lot by the time the convention gets here on the 19th. We will receipt you for it and make public acknowledgement of your gift if you desire. We are demonstrating the fact in Louisiana that our plea for Christian union is invincible. I have no help except my faithful wife, who is my musical director. Pray for us.—John A. Stevens, State Evangelist and Corresponding Secretary.

[In a subsequent communication Brother Stevens states that he is having overflowing audiences, a church has been organized with 15 members, and that the prospects are fine for a great ingathering. He has personally put up the money for the option on a lot on which to build the Ruston Christian Church. The price was $700, and he must have the money in 60 days. He urges attendance at the convention, June 26, 27, 28. Entertainment will be free, and tickets should be purchased on the certificate plan, the fare being 2 cents a mile each way. Send him a card to let him know you are coming.—EDITOR.]

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

The Meeting at Marion, O.

In many respects the meeting was a great success, but in others it was a partial failure. When we consider the needs of the city of Marion, and how we as a people have utterly failed for the past 20 years in supplying these needs and the great work to be done as yet, we then think that we have done so little that it looks like failure; but when we consider that this meeting was the best that has been held for years, and is only the preparation for greater things, we are inclined to think we were successful. In all there were 48 additions. Many were full grown men and women. Many others are thinking and will finally do the Master's will. As to the evangelist, Bruce Brown, we feel that we should say that to him is largely due the success of the meeting. He is a good organizer; he is an effective speaker; he makes common truths of the Gospel very plain; he was liberal and kind. The circumstances were not the most favorable to a great meeting. As to the song leader, N. M. Field, we will say that he, too, is a Christian man of the highest type. Marion is his old home, and he and his good wife, who helped in the work, were instrumental in bringing many to unite with the church. The church, while a new organization, and never having held a big meeting, was faithful and worked seemingly as one man for the cause they love so much. We made a partial canvass of the city, and put out a large number of our religious papers, which we feel did us much good. Our Sunday-school has grown during the meeting and will continue to grow. We are in much better shape than we have ever been.—O. D. Maple.

Kentucky.

W. J. Cocke concluded the meeting at West Liberty with six added. H. J. Derthick is the effective minister. Brother Cocke was at four district conventions and made addresses.——Latonia is rejoicing. All debts are paid and plans begun for enlargement of house of worship. H. C. Runyon is justly elated over this triupmh. House crowded at almost every service—too small for Sunday-school. A meeting is soon to be held at Chatham.——W. J. Dodge has been very active for Jackson work; raised $210.50 for house of worship; low rate secured for attendance at dedication, via Louisville and Evansville Railroad. Hope for large attendance June 17.——D. C. McCallum's work begins very well at Valley View, where he preaches half-time.—D. Earl B. Barr added one at Bromley and reports work doing well.—D. G. Combs was at work 26 days and added 49. He was in Carter, Johnson and Rockcastle counties. The Iron Hill house of worship is to be dedicated in July—for which he is largely responsible.——G. W. Adkins has added two in Carter and Rowan counties.——J. W. Masters, in Whitley and Laurel counties, had 35 additions, one Sunday-school organized, one prayer-meeting organized, one congregation organized. A visit was made to Legal, Ky., and plans perfected for building a house of worship.——G. T. Thompson reports full time in Greenup and Lewis counties, with seven added; work at South Portsmouth doing well; hopes to locate another man in the section soon.——C. A. Van Winkle's work during the month was in the counties of Jackson, Estill and Laurel. He added 27 and did much general work. He will be sorely missed when he leaves this field.——There were four added in Johnson and Lawrence counties as the result of 23 days' work on the part of S. J. Short. A Sunday-school and congregation were organized.——H. W. Elliott was at work all the month. Including conventions, he visited 12 places and spoke 15 times. He collected $510.62 for the work. We have almost five months until the state convention. With our heavy obligations it is imperative that our offerings keep well up to $600 per month, else we will go to Louisville, September 26, up to our ears in debt. We urge the remittance of every dollar available for the work—H. W. Elliott, Secretary and Treasurer, Sulphur.

New Zealand.

Some things seemed strange to me when I first reached the capital of New Zealand, but being a Britisher by birth, I am rapidly finding my way into the situation. New Zealand as a country is not well known by Americans, and vice versa. The people here are intensely British in their ideas and methods. Their intercourse is chiefly with the mother country. The bulk of their trade is with England. The British flag is seen on nearly every vessel reaching this port, and the events of the day published in the papers, come mostly from outside the continent of America. The Americans and New Zealanders hold many erroneous views about each other's country—the climate, the people, their customs and a hundred and one other things. There is little here in the lay of the land, the forests, the birds, the seasons, etc., to remind one from America of his home country. Things are so different; he finds summer in the winter, and the sun passing round in the north instead of the south, as at home. The summer is exceedingly cool. One striking thing is the even climate. During this entire summer the mercury in my room has never been higher than 70 degrees nor lower than 58. Rains are very frequent, and the many cloudy days make one often long for the sunshine. Winter is so mild many churches do without artificial heat the year round.

Our people number in the colony about 3,050. They have not made as rapid progress as they should have done. They have been far too conservative in their methods. They have been too fearful of undertaking large things for God. One thing that has been and is now against them is the class of small and inferior houses of worship they meet in. No church can accomplish a work worthy of the cause they represent without a good up-to-date building, to which they can invite the people. My trip last month to the beautiful city of Dunedin, in the southern part of the colony, to attend our general conference, was in every way a most enjoyable one. This was the second general conference ever held by our people in the colony. The first one was held in this city five years ago. The next one is to be held at the city of Auckland, two years hence. The business of the conference was to discuss ways and means for the furtherance of our cause in this and other lands. The conference lasted three days and doubtless will result in great good. The utmost freedom was allowed in the discussion of the various questions that came before the conference, and nearly all, as loyal Britons usually are upon such occasions, were ready to take their part in the discussions.

Honolulu Letter.

Dear Brother Garrison—By the time this comes to hand you will probably have completed your response to "the call of the wild" and be back in the midst of old familiar haunts. I am sure there are none of us among your readers who do not rejoice that these outings are possible for you, and that your work prospers as it does, while your health is continually renewed. Why not take your next outing in Honolulu? We have a most hospitable people, who would give you a royal welcome, and we have a country and climate hardly to be surpassed. I have talked with a number of people who have traveled all over the world who say this is the prettiest place they ever saw. The weather is ideal and a greater variety of population and scenery could hardly be gotten into a smaller space.

The religious influences also are inspiring. Besides, this is now one of Uncle Sam's possessions, about which our home and foreign boards and our people generally should know more. I believe you would enjoy the trip, and likewise the islands, after you got here. In the summer time you would miss the heat of Missouri. In the winter you would miss the cold. Here in Honolulu we never have fires except in our cook stoves. The thermometer has registered as high as 90 degrees but once in 16 years. Yet, if you want it, different temperature is available in a short distance. In a two hours' walk from Honolulu you can elevate yourself so that at this season you find fires comfortable in the morning and evening. Inside an hour's time you can put yourself where it rains almost every day in the year. Here in Honolulu there is nothing like as much rainy weather as we are accustomed to in Missouri. We have been supposed now for several weeks to be in the rainy season, yet the weather seems to me ideal; and no matter how much rain, there is almost no mud. Two hundred and sixty miles from us is a mountain snow-covered almost the year round, while near it, on the same island, is the seething volcano, where you can get as much heat as you may wish, steam cracks a plenty over which you can cook your eggs, boil your coffee, etc. Beauty spots and sequestered nooks are here in abundance, so that in the shortest time you could satisfy almost any mood. You can bury yourself in Portugal, Japan, China, Hawaii or America right here in Honolulu. You can be alone in the woods or on the mountain sides, or on the water within the briefest space. Come out and we will try to get up a crowd and go shark fishing. From what I hear you would then write the fish story of your life. They bait with a dead horse, and have some lively battles. From my study window one gets a near view of four or five young mountain tops. The variety of hues in vegetation, together with sunlight and shadow, make an inspiring picture. There is not the massive grandeur and sublimity here as in the Rockies. It is just beauty, beauty, beauty. Come and make your home with us for a vacation period.

I had not intended to do so, but believe while I am writing I will state the religious outlook here, as I see it. We are entering a transitional stage in population. A few people doubt it, but to me it seems certain. The home forces are about accepting the American dictum that large plantations worked by Japanese, Chinese or Koreans must give way to small farms owned by those who till the soil. As leases run out the plantations are to be cut up and opened for settlement. Recently arrangements were made for taking one over, and it was sold in farm tracts to a colony of Russian Molokans. An advance of 60 families of them have already arrived, and others are expected shortly. This is only a beginning of what I look forward to as a great transformation. In view of all this, I think we should have a man go over these islands as general supervisor in connection with his local work as missionary, and spy out the land. He should be a man of vision and prophetic insight, combined with a lot of good, hard, common sense, and with an excellent fund of executive ability. In short, he should be one of the best men we can command, and should watch developments and seize on strategic points at strategic times, very much after the fashion followed in opening up Oklahoma. These Molokans have been persecuted for religion's sake until life was no longer bearable in Russia. They are certainly fair material for our plea. How much might it have meant if we had been able to put ourselves in touch with them as soon as it was determined that they were coming? Then, if we could have had a man when they arrived to give himself to their welfare until they were settled he might have opened up in a meeting, or have had a man speaking their tongue do it for him (if we have any), with a good prospect not only of reaching these, but of capturing those yet to come.

Let the future be what it will, we are not spending money enough to keep up with the religious development of these islands. Hawaii gives abundant promise of becoming more and more a strategic field as regards the relations between the Occident and Orient. The Methodists, who came here two years after we had organized have divined what is coming. Bishop Hamilton, whom you perhaps remember of having spoken at our San Francisco convention, has just returned to the coast, after a visit of about three months. He toured the islands, in company with the local M. E. preacher, visiting plantation after plantation, and village after village. What he did outside I don't know. But here in Honolulu he bought one $18,000 property, to be used for school purposes. The home board as I understand it pays for the whole of that. Then he bought another very much below its worth for $8,000. This is a fifty room hotel which is to be converted into an orphanage. On that I learn the local Methodist Episcopal church is to pay $300. You can judge from that that the local church isn't any stronger than we. But with such backing they are going to be. The Congregational people too are very aggressively missionary over the islands. Lots of good work is being done.

Our work here in Honolulu in the Central church has just about strength enough financially to keep itself going. We furnish a number of Sunday-school teachers for the missions. We have three missions, one Portugese, one Japanese, and one mostly Hawaiian all under one man so that some of them have to be neglected. We touch but one other point on the islands. Miss Beard runs an orphanage on the island of Hawaii. It is really a very creditable institution into which she has put about $15,000 of her own money. She has also built a chapel in the community at her own expense and employed Bro. L, A. Pier to work in the orphanage and preach in the chapel. Brother Pier is a capable man from Southern California and writes the Bible School Notes for the Pacific Christian. We need stronger backing from our missionary boards. Our present missionary has given notice that he expects to give up this work in March, 1907. In his stead should be placed at least a $2,500 man with not less than one other man to work under his direction. We shall be a long time doing anything worthy of us at the present rate.

Baron Takaka, the great surgeon from Japan, spent a little time in Honolulu on his way to the United States. He held a conference with the local Japanese physicians one evening and did not adjourn until 2 a. m. The burden of his counsel throughout the evening was that Japan needs and must have a world-wide religion. He did not mention Christianity, but one of the physicians who comes to hear me occasionally has no doubt that he had in mind our own Christian religion. By the way, this physician has a son in Ann Arbor—a Mr. Mitimura. The father is interested in our position, but is identified with the Congregationalists. He contemplates a trip to the United States at the time of his son's graduation. He has also spoken to me about having me meet the same company which the baron met, in order to talk over things religious. I have signified my willingness to do so, but do not know whether anything will come of it.

Again, I say, take your next outing in Honolulu. Fraternally yours.—G. D. Edwards.

The meetings will continue one more week. I am to supply the Tabernacle Church in Sydney for four months, while George T. Walden, their minister, is away in England and America. ### CHRIST'S LIFE, HIS RELATIONS TO HIS DISCIPLES, AND WHAT HE EXPECTS OF US.—Matt. 10:16-33.

|---|---|
| M. Christ Expects Wisdom. | Luke 16:9-12. |
| T. Christ Expects Us to Obey. | Matt. 5:17-20. |
| W. Christ Expects Purity. | 1 John 3:1-6. |
| T. Christ Expects Boldness. | Mark 13:9-13. |
| F. Christ Expects Gentleness. | 2 Cor. 10:1-6. |
| S. Christ Expects Fidelity. | Matt. 25:21-30. |
| S. Topic. | |

Christ expects every one of us to be a testimonial wherever we are to his power to overcome a sinful life, to fill one with happiness, to inspire to usefulness, and help up the heavenly way.

In his first sermon he said, "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God," and so did he impress the necessity of purity upon his followers, that in his old age John wrote, "Whosoever sinneth hath not seen him neither knoweth him."

Jesus was gentle, the bruised reed he would not break nor quench the smoking flax, and they are distinguished by great gentleness whose spirits are surcharged by his. Let us be sure that just to the extent that hatred, fierceness, vengeance, uncharitableness, prejudice and their conferees take possession of us to that extent Christ takes his departure.

It must be remembered that while Jesus leads his disciples as a captain his soldiers, that while he ministers to those wounded in his wake as a physician to his patients, while he even makes overtures to them as a propagandist to a hesitating constituency, he has never abdicated his position as their judge—"whosoever shall deny me before men him will I also deny before my Father who is in heaven."

Though Christ's' hands were soft as velvet, within them were cords as of steel; though his nature was gentle it was such as could be pleased only with heroism. In his heart may be pity for the craven but no admiration. Better far to be beaten because of loyalty to the truth, than to win or retain popularity through evasion. The choice spirits of every age with whom Jesus delights to commune are bold, heroic, dauntless, conquering, spirits.

Christianity has suffered more through the ignorance of its friends than from the hostility of its foes. Jesus requires of us familiarity with the Scriptures and knowledge of the fundamentals of the faith. Had his followers "learned of me," church history would be darkened with none of those pages of internecine strife that have been practical denials of the love of God and denominationalism that so impedes the progress of the kingdom.

Many act as if they believe Jesus unable to fulfill his promise—"and lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world"—because they see him not nor feel the touch of his hands. Yet material science has taught us to communicate with unseen friends without even a wire connection with them. It should be easy for us to believe that by the application of the principles of spiritual science Jesus may hold sweet communion with his own even though unseen by fleshly eye, and millions testify that he does.

THOUGHTS, WORDS AND ACTS. —Prov. 23:19.

There is rich suggestiveness in the proverb, "Speech is silvery, silence is golden, but a kind act is the flash of a gem."

Inspired suggestions: Our thoughts must be high toned in purity and love, Phil. 4:8, 9, 1 Cor. 13:4, 5; our words acceptable, Ps. 55:21, Prov. 15:26, Acts 26:25; and our acts in keeping with the Golden Rule, Matt. 7:12, Matt. 18:23-35. Lu. 10:30-37.

Psychology is in perfect harmony with the Scriptures teaching that as a man thinketh in his heart so is he. Observation reveals it as true that if we sow a thought we reap an act, sow an act and we reap a habit, sow a habit and reap a haracter, sow a character and reap a destiny. It is startling, but true, that our eternity is hinging on the meditations of our hearts. Well may we pray, "Let the words of my mouth and the thoughts of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer."

It is well that wholesome thoughts occupy our mind, and commendable that our words be freighted with good, but chivalrous doing is to them as ripened fruit is to blossom and bud. Indeed noble thoughts and inspiring words not followed by acts in keeping therewith will rise up in judgment against us, for they testify to our knowing the will of our Master and our duty and doing them not. Good thoughts and words unaccompanied by noble doing are architects, it is true, but the house they rear is builded on the sand.

In our earlier years we may not be held to strictest account for all the vagrant fancies that tabernacle for awhile within the chambers of our thought, but we will be for even their temporary lodgement as the years progress. If we have properly disciplined our minds in right discrimination, almost involuntarily they will reject the very approach of evil thoughts and sift out and welcome in all good suggestiveness. When to the angels we may make known our inmost thoughts without our faces being mantled with blushes of shame, our inheritance is half won.

In the story of the Prodigal may be seen the natural sequence of thoughts, words, and actions. He reveled in riotous imaginations, he spake evil to his father, he went away into the land of sin. In his exile he thought of home and was penitent, he confessed his sins to his father and sought pardon, he was received into his father's home and the old life. So may it be with us; when penitence has softened our hearts toward God, let us confess our faults to him, and his Son before men, and then do all the things required for reconciliation with him with whom we have to do.

Our thoughts are to our careers even more than the acorns to oaks. All the acorn can do to affect the tree is done within the first few years. The acorn determines the species and location of the oak and these made known, the woodman can predict its future. Now oaks no more surely spring from acorns than good lives from pure thoughts and evil lives from unrighteous thoughts, but evil lives may be redeemed by a betterment of our thoughts and splendid lives may be compromised by degeneracy of thought. Let us attune our thoughts to those prevailing in heaven and our careers shall surely include the heavens in their sweep.

PETER'S GREAT CONFESSION.
—Matt. 16:13-28.

Memory verses, 24,25.

Golden Text.—Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.—Matt. 16:16.

After the first retirement into the north, to the region of Tyre and Sidon, Jesus and his disciples returned for a short time to the Sea of Galilee, and then again went into the north. This second northern journey included the incidents of Peter's confession, the transfiguration and two separate predictions of the death and resurrection of Christ.

It was at Caesarea Philippi that Jesus asked the question which brought out Peter's famous answer. "Whom say men that I am?" Men said many things. The disciples repeated only the more complimentary. Many thought he was a prophet, either one of the old ones returned or a new one. Others, since he had disappointed their hopes of a political Messiahship and a deliverance from Rome, thought he was a foolish charlatan or a useless disturber of the peace of Israel, or a good but impractical dreamer. There were then, as there have always been, all sorts of opinions about Christ. And it was true then, as now, that a man's judgment of Christ is the measure of himself.

Peter's confession is sometimes said to have been a Jewish confession. It was that, but it was vastly more. The first part of it, "Thou art the Christ," was essentially a Jewish statement. It was an identification of Jesus with the expected one, the Messiah, whom the prophets had foretold and for whom the people of that time were looking. This was the burden of much of the early apostolic preaching, so far as it was addressed to Jewish hearers. Note the sermons that are reported in the early chapters of Acts.

But in his conception of the mission and character of the Christ, Peter transcended even the highest of purely Jewish ideas. It would have been easy for Jesus to prove to people that he was the Messiah. It was not easy to revolutionize and spiritualize their idea of the Messiah. The teaching of the twelve had in part accomplished this for them. This higher and more spiritual conception Peter expressed in part by adding the phrase, "The Son of the living God." This was not a Jewish idea, in the sense in which Jesus used the term of himself. It indicated an intimate relation with the divine purpose and character, a loftier personality, a more spiritual mission than even the old prophets had conceived.

The primacy of Peter, as claimed by the Roman Catholic Church, is based chiefly on the reply of Jesus to Peter's confession. It is true that "this rock" refers to Peter, and not to his confession; otherwise the play on the words (petros and petra) would have no force. But it is not Peter as an individual, receiving honor above others, but Peter as confessing his Lord, and so becoming, for the moment, the representative of all who should thereafter confess a like faith. The church is built of those who hold and declare faith in Christ. Peter, as the first to make that declaration, became thus the first stone in the edifice.

Immediately after this clear and definite statement of the Messiahship Jesus began to speak of his coming death and resurrection, by way of teaching the twelve more of the nature of that Messiahship. They knew little enough of it, for they could not reconcile with it the idea of suffering and death. Peter's rebuke called forth not only a severe condition but a statement of the general principle of service and suffering.

The great paradox of the spiritual life is this: "Whosoever would save his life shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it." The road to success lies through sacrifice. This is in many respects true in worldly things and still more so in spiritual things.

The Mullins-Spencer Papers.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I have just finished reading the admirable papers read before the late Congress of Disciples by Dr. Mullins and our Brother Spencer. I am much pleased with the spirit of both. I can not but contrast the spirit of the discussion with that of the only debate I ever listened to, between a Baptist minister and one of ours. If such men could have represented the two bodies in the numerous contests that have taken place between them in the past they would be much closer together than they are even now in these blessed days of fraternal meetings and federated movements. Dr. Mullins' paper bears every mark of an honest effort to arrive at the truth as it is taught in the Scriptures, and not of a partisan effort to win a victory over an opponent, simply for victory's sake. If he fell into error of interpretation it was due to theological training and not to lack of earnest, honest desire to present the truth as it is revealed in the New Testament scriptures. If he had been clear in his vision of the line that makes the final ending of the old covenant and the formal beginning of the new, he would not have made some mistakes that he did. Under the same circumstances Brother Spencer would probably have made the same mistakes, and most of us a good many more, and possibly more glaring ones. Though I have never seen him, I love the man (Dr. Mullins) for his fair and fraternal spirit as manifested in his magnificent paper, which I am sure will be productive of untold good as it touches the two great bodies involved in the investigation.

In all modesty, I should like to suggest to Dr. Mullins a comparison of Acts 2:38 and 3:19 with a view to finding out whether their content is not precisely the same, though clothed in somewhat different verbiage. To me it is inconceivable that the same man, speaking by the same Spirit and to precisely the same class of people, in answer to the question, "What must we do to be saved?" either asked or implied, would give one answer to-day and a different one to-morrow. But according to Dr. Mullins, this is what the inspired Peter did. Let us compare the two passages and see if, member for member, they are not identical—the second a most fortunate commentary on the first.

1. "Repent ye . . . and be baptized . . . unto the remission of your sins . . .
2. "Repent ye . . . and turn again . . . that your sins may be blotted out . . .
1. and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Acts 2:38.
2. so that there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Acts 3:19.

From the second passage we learn that Peter, instead of using a term that described the act of baptism, as in the first used a form of words that set forth its office. "Be baptized" describes the form; "turn again" indicates the function or office of the act of obedience commanded. It is no more certain that "Repent ye" in the second passage means the same thing as "Repent ye" in the first than that all the other members of the two sentences, that stand over against each other mean the same thing. If "turn ye" in the second means the same thing as "be baptized" in the first, then it follows that "that your sins may be blotted out" and "unto the remission of your sins" mean the same thing. If we "turn again" "that our sins may be blotted out" we are "baptized in order to the remission" of our sins. And if baptism is indeed a turning to the Lord, as this second passage declares it to be, is it not a condition to salvation from sin? I have no hesitation in saying that that which baptism symbolizes is an essential condition to the forgiveness of sins; but I do not believe that God binds himself to symbols. Baptism, like the Sabbath, was made for man, and not man for baptism. If the man who was circumcised in heart was the true Jew, and Paul says he was, then it follows that the man who is baptized in heart is the true Christian rather than the man whose baptism did not mean a turning again to God.

Baptism and the Remission of Sins.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

It was a matter for regret that Dr. Mullins' address on the above subject at the Indianapolis Congress could not receive more adequate treatment at the hands of his reviewer. The time allowed Brother Spencer for preparing his review was not sufficient even for a clear understanding of the position taken by the essayist, and it has seemed to me that the review dealt with incidentals and accidentals rather than essentials. No one can deny that there are two cycles of passages in the New Testament—one in which baptism has a place as a procuring cause of remission of sins, and one in which baptism is ignored and remission is predicated of the purely moral and spiritual changes known as faith and repentance. This, it seemed to me, was all that Dr. Mullins meant in his "closed circles of passages," and that the reviewer gave very exaggerated emphasis to this feature of the paper, as though there were some subtle heresy lurking under that word "closed."

But, passing that matter by, it seems to me that Dr. Mullins has given us an eirenicon. His position is impregnable, that the salvation or remission referred to in any given passage is of necessity of a kind with the procuring cause; that where the procuring cause is formal or ceremonial (as where baptism is joined with remission), the salvation or remission is formal or ceremonial, and where the procuring cause is spiritual or moral the salvation or remission is actual and real. This is a position toward which both Baptists and Disciples have been feeling their way for years, and as both have been guided by the New Testament they have both come to this common interpretation independently. The plea to put aside the philosophical discussions and make no pronouncement as to the relation between baptism and remission of sins, is, in these days, impossible. There is a theory already in the field, and which can be adequately described only as "damnable heresy," and if we are to guard against the fatal and deadly doctrine of baptismal regeneration we must have a sane and wholesome teaching, and one which harmonizes the apparently contradictory teaching of the New Testament, to set over against it.

Personally, I am grateful to Dr. Mullins for his fine paper, and for his loyalty to truth, which led him to that "frank and hearty expression of what force and meaning was in him," without reference either to what his hearers or his denomination expected him to say.

ful signs of our times. The vast power of the temperance movement has yet to be understood. Hitherto we have been sapping and mining, and because the results have seemed to be slow in manifestation, many of the most ardent workers have been driven into a pessimistic attitude. But I am one of those who are convinced that never has any great movement in the world's history been so successful as the temperance reformation, with the single exception of Christianity itself, in the early period of its existence. Slowly the drink demon is being exorcised. Of that fact the evidences are strong in all directions, and my observations on board this floating palace have confirmed my convictions and deepened my hopes.

DENNIS.

At Maxwell, Cal., I conducted the funeral of Calvin Dennis, who was born in Jackson county, Tenn., August 6, 1831. He moved to Springfield, Mo., where he was married to Adaline Shaffin, March 26, 1864. Baptized in 1865, in 1866 he emigrated to California. He died March 15, leaving an afflicted and aged companion and one son. The large concourse of people at the funeral bore testimony to his moral worth and citizenship. The following day, Calvin Dennis, Jr., a grandson, the 4-year-old child of the only son of our aged brother, was laid to rest close by his grandfather.

Williams, Cal. B. C. STEPHENS.

MONSER.

Died, at Kansas City, Mo., April 13, 1906, the beloved wife of our dear brother, J. W. Monser, at the age of 64 years and 10 months. Sister Monser was born in Cumberland, Md., June 21, 1841. Early in her childhood she moved with her parents to Somerset, Pa., where she joined the Christian Church when 12 years old. Here she enjoyed the example and training of the historic three Marys, whose years of fidelity in meeting at the court house for the observance of the Lord's Supper, laid deep the foundations of our cause in that community; and to Sister Monser the weekly feast of love was every precious. She was educated in part under President Charles L. Loos, and as a little child was often held on the knees of that eminent Disciple and jurist, Judge Jeremiah Black, an elder in the Somerset congregation. Later in life she, with her parents, moved to Urbana, Ill., where she was married to Brother Monser, on October 8, 1861. To this union were born seven sons, five of whom survive her, and mourn the loss of a faithful and affectionate mother. Sister Monser was a true helpmeet of her husband in all the years of his ministry, and her beautiful life and earnest and cheerful work for the Master endeared her to all who knew her. She suffered greatly during the last two years of her life, and her last illness of some ten weeks involved so much of suffering as to make the rest of her homegoing grateful to her soul. She rests with him whom she so loved and served, and her memory is blessed. The sympathy of a host of friends will be with the sorrowing husband and sons. The funeral services were conducted by Brethren Haley and Combs and the writer, of whose congregation Brother and Sister Monser have been faithful and beloved members since their removal to our city. W. F. RICHARDSON.

ORAHOOD.

I. N. Orahood, who had been for many years a faithful preacher of the Gospel, died at his home near Covington, Ind., April 7. He leaves a wife and six children. Two sons and one son-in-law are Christian ministers. He was devoted to the Master and his cause. During his illness he talked much about the extension of the kingdom, and his last prayer contained an earnest petition for the missionaries and world-wide evangelization. He was always a devout student of the Bible, and his spiritual insight and mental grasp of the Scriptures were remarkable. He was truly a man of God. His daily life was a fitting commentary on the Gospel he preached. A few days before his death he said to his oldest son, "Is there not a Scripture like this: 'The Master is come and calleth for thee?'" "Yes," was the reply. "Well," he said, "the Master is come and calleth for me." After quoting 2 Peter 1:1-4, he said: "I have had occasion to try nearly every promise, and I have found them all true. Now I shall soon enjoy some of the most precious promises he has given us." A beautiful funeral sermon was delivered by E. M. Norton, of Fithian, Ill. The body was laid in the old churchyard at West Liberty to rest and await the coming of the Lord.

ROBERTSON.

Jeppie Oretha Robertson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Robertson, of Corning, Ark., after eight years' service in the Master's kingdom, fell asleep in Christ at the age of 22 years. She was a sweet Christian girl and loved by all who knew her.

JOHN A. ALLEN.

TRIPPLETT.

Mary Tripplett died April 15, aged 67 years. She had been a member of the Christian Church the greater part of her life. Her death was caused by burns. She was buried at Old Union Cemetery, near Jasonville, Ind., Greene county.

A Dedication Poem.

BY ELEANOR THOMPSON.

(On the occasion of the dedication of the Central Christian Church, Jacksonville, Ill., April 29, 1906.)

The task is done, and joyfully we come
To view the finished product of our toil.
Proudly we look upon these sacred walls,
A witness of devotion and of faith.
Yet, little glory after all is ours,
Whence came the skill that planned, the arm that wrought,
Who formed these stones through myriad years,
And grew the mighty trees with which to build?
True, we have planned, and toiled and sacrificed,
But back of all's the mind and thought of God.
And so we boast, not of our trifling part,
But gladly render unto Him his own.

That we may value it aright, 'twere well,
Not in its moneyed worth to count the cost,
But in the sacrifice through which 'tis ours.
In weariness we sowed that we might come
To dedicate this sheaf unto our Lord.
No stone has found its place' till it has felt
The workman's cruel hammer, blow on blow,
And echoed back in anguish at each stroke;
No board but quivered under saw and plane
Ere it could fill its mission in this house;
No church had been but for the sacrifice
Of the world's hope on Calvary's Hill,
Who needs must yield his life to ransom us
Ere the great church which bears His name was born.
And that its influence may endure through time
Him have we wisely made chief corner-stone.
We gaze entranced upon it all to-day
And marvel at its beauty and its grace.
Fit time it is to ponder o'er the thought
Of what with God this people now may do;
What was the purpose of these months of toil,
And what the glorious mission of this church.

First, since 'tis His, forever must it fight
Existing evils in whatever garb;
Nor sit at peace 'midst vices manifold.
Let no man stand within this sacred place
Who fears to lift his voice in thunderous tones
'Gainst sin, the monster curse of all mankind;
Thus did the Master preach, and so must we.

Then, too, with opportunities so great,
We feel a broader vision must be ours,
Content not with the seed we scatter here,
E'en though it bring returns an hundredfold;
But, with a zeal intenser than before,
To reap the whitened fields across the sea.
So may there be, among the youth we train,
Those who will heed the Master's call to go
And tell the story, now too long withheld,
To teeming millions who our help implore.

And yet, what power has this insensate stone
To open Eden's gate to fallen man?
'Tis but a monument to man's desire
That all may know the saving love of Christ.
We are the temples, built by plan divine,
From whom goes forth the message of His love.
Sermons more potent are our lives to lead
The wayward back to paths of righteousness
Than all the eloquence of lofty spires.
So, that this great church may accomplish all
For which it was intended from the first,
We dedicate ourselves with it to God.

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART II.

CHAPTER VII.

It was the day before Christmas, the day of Raymund's birthday party. He had seen very little of Nelsie Loraine for a week. Studies were suspended, and there was visiting and sleighing and skating and town-going on her part, which excluded her from the orphan's world. In the afternoon, as the sleigh carrying Mr. Omer and Nelsie Loraine returned from a visit to a neighbor's, Raymund, who was purposely waiting at the gate, opened it and called to the girl: "Don't forget my party to-night!"

"What is it?" said Nelsie Loraine, turning her sparkling eyes upon him. The crisp air had beautified her cheeks. In her rich furs she was a vision of winter loveliness. She had evidently forgotten all about the party, for she added, "Oh, yes! All right!"

"But, don't bring any present!" called Raymund, "for I don't receive presents at my party."

Nelsie Loraine laughed, and Mr. Omer smiled.

"That's a pretty nice sort of chap," said Mr. Omer as the sleigh swept up his ample drive.

"I wish I had remembered about his party, Nelsie; "I would have bought him something in town yesterday. Well, it's no party, you know, only he calls it that, and I don't like to make him feel bad by not pretending to believe it is a party. What can he have at the Hands' House?"

"If it's only popcorn and gingerbread," said Mr. Omer, "pretend to like it. He's a good chap; I never saw such a young fellow take hold like he does. I wouldn't be surprised if he doesn't make a mark one of these days. By the way, who's going down there with you? I don't imagine your mother would care for a lark like that."

"No; Mrs. De Fer agreed to go. Mamma didn't think it would be fun, you know."

"I don't expect you will either," said Mr. Omer, "but don't let on."

It was half-past seven when Nelsie Loraine and Mrs. De Fer tripped across the snow to the iron fence, and followed the well beaten path of the adjoining yard to the front porch of the Hands' House. "Look how it's lighted up!" whispered the girl to her governess. "May be we will have a good time after all. But Tom and Fred,—they are such strangers—it will seem so queer sitting down with them! Of course I'm used to Raymund."

In answer to their knock, Raymund opened the door. They entered the middle room. It was Tom's bedroom, but the bed and usual appointments of a bedroom had been carried to the barn. The walls were hung with cedar boughs, about which strings of popcorn were wound. Fastened to the cedar were figures of all kinds, cut out of different colored paper—men, goats, pigs, houses, etc., which showed not so much an artistic skill as a desire for decoration. The rafters had been covered with old planks, but a square opening was left in the center. Ropes hung down through the opening, the loose ends swinging to and fro in the gust of wind the arrivals had admitted. Tom and Fred, dressed in their best, the former holding Baby by the hand, stood in a corner trying to take up as little room as possible, and Jack Bellfield, looking fine in his newest apparel, was in the middle of the floor, taking up a great deal of room.

"Oh! you here?" cried Nelsie Loraine, beaming upon Jack. "Why, how nice!" They shook hands, and Mrs. De Fer made some charming compliments on the decorations. "What are the ropes for?" asked Nelsie Loraine, as Mrs. De Fer backed into them and screamed out as they twisted about her like snakes. "That is the Great Surprise," said Raymund, who was a little nervous over the party's success. "Now, please be seated."

"Are we the only ones to sit down?" inquired Nelsie Loraine, for there were only two chairs in the room.

"Yes," said Raymund; "our party is to open with a play. You are the spectators."

Oh! oh!" cried the French lady, clapping her little hands. "How delightful!"

"Until the play begins," said Jack Bellfield, "you can look at the works of art about our walls." And as people of refinement usually eat candy while they are witnessing the drama, he presented a box of fine candy, his contribution toward the evening's delights.

Nelsie Loraine smiled at him, and no wonder, he was so handsome, so self-possessed, so graceful in his movements. She had been to several parties where Jack had been the spirit of the affair, and she felt that of all in the room he was her social equal. "All right, Tom," called Jack. "All right, Fred; come on, Raymund!" Jack had already taken the command, but, in a different way, he was just as agreeable to the farmhands as he was to the millionaire's daughter. All left the room except the guests, and as the ladies ate candy and stared at the pink, red, blue and green paper figures hanging on the cedar, Mrs. De Fer murmured: "That Master Jack Bellfield is quite charming, is he not?"

Nelsie Loraine nodded, and said, as she bent over the chocolates: "He is a favorite, I think, wherever he goes." A curtain now moved by mysterious means across one end of the room. On the curtain were pinned huge letters cut out of newspapers. They were of different sizes, but in spite of their inequality they formed a real word—"PROMETHEUS" (PROmeTHeuS).

Mrs. De Fer echoed, "Prometheus! What an ambitious undertaking!"

At that moment a fearful noise resounded from the other side of the curtain. The French lady leaped nervously to her feet. Nelsie Loraine exclaimed, "What on earth?"

Jack's head appeared at the edges of the curtain. He smiled blandly. "Don't be frightened, ladies," he said, "the thunder has begun too soon; but Baby wouldn't listen to reason. Baby is working Jove's thunderbolts. I told him——" The rest was drowned in a hideous clangor that set every tooth of little Mrs. De Fer on edge. Jack disappeared.

"Anyway," remarked Nelsie Loraine, "it is unusual." The curtain rolled away. In the center of the stage, as that end of the room must now be called by courtesy, was a large rough rock, to which some grasses had, with considerable difficulty, been stuck. Wound about the rock was part of the iron chain that had been brought from the stock pump. One end of the chain was wrapped about Tom's middle and about his arms. He was, it appeared, a hopeless prisoner, although it was not beyond imagination that he could have walked off with the rock to which he was fastened. Tom stood with his back to the ladies that he might not be discomposed by meeting the gaze of the audience. There was an expectant hush. Presently a voice from above said hoarsely, "Why don't you struggle?" Tom began to tug at the iron chain, leaping in a frenzied attempt to be free. At the same time he began the soliloquy Rhoda had written for his part: "Alas! these cruel chains!" That was all he had ever remembered of the speech. It was all he remembered now, although he had repeatedly declared he'd "be all right when the night came." He repeated them loudly: "Alas! these cruel chains!" Then he looked up reproachfully. The prompter was apparently hovering above his head in the rafters. The prompter whispered the words, but they were drowned in a storm of noise that suddenly broke out at the right of the stage. Nelsie Loraine clutched Mrs. De Fer to keep that lady in her seat. At the right of the stage was something that looked like a mossy bank, which ran up to the rock, and the horrible tumult issued from behind the mossy bank. It was so violent that the mossy bank was pushed a little to one side. Then Baby could be seen seated upon the floor, wildly beating upon an inverted dishpan and rattling a huge can filled with pebbles. Baby passed methodically from the dishpan to the can of pebbles, like a trained actor. Nelsie Loraine began to shake with repressed laughter. Tom said hoarsely to the invisible prompter, "I can't hear nothing you say!" The prompter tried it again, but Baby redoubled his frantic efforts, and much thunder was produced. Tom, at his wits ends, could only remember the main story of Prometheus, the part at least which had appealed to him; he shouted, or rather bellowed, in his embarrassment: "Oh, my liver! Oh, my liver!" At this Nelsie Loraine began to laugh hysterically, and Mrs. De Fer laughed till the tears came to her eyes. They clasped each other in a nervous embrace. Raymund's voice could be distinctly heard: "Struggle some more!" Tom resolved to make up with action what he had lost from memory, and struggled to such good purpose that the rock was dragged several feet across the stage.

Jack Bellfield now came on as Jupiter, very handsome in his golden crown and snowy mantle. He said:

"How, now, Prometheus? chained to this beetling crag,
Here thou art doomed for aye thy chains to drag!
You stole my fire, to man gave it away;
For this the Vulture tears thee every day.
Lo! I am Jupiter, o'er sea and main.
Struggle, aye struggle! 'tis in vain."

Tom struggled. Mrs. De Fer, pleased at hearing the rock called a "beetling crag," hugged Nelsie Loraine in an agony of delight. Jack stalked out, with an encouraging nod to Baby to do his worst.

Raymund entered the scene. He turned to the audience and said: "I ought to be a nymph, but I thought I would come in just as a friend. I couldn't look like a nymph, or dance, or sing, so I will just make my speech."

Mrs. De Fer was immediately mistress of the situation. "Oh, let me sing for Prometheus!" she cried, and the gray-haired little French lady skipped forwardward and stood before Tom, who hung his head and shrunk close to his rock. She sang a little French song, which in English means "Why Art Thou Lonely?" It was very pretty and quaint, and Nelsie Loraine and Jack, from his invisible heaven, applauded loudly. "Now shall I dance for him?" asked Mrs. De Fer, brightly.

"No!" came a thin, piping voice from the outside; "they ain't no dancing in this piece!" It was the voice of Fred. Mrs. De Fer laughed and skipped back to her seat. Raymund then spoke his lines at some length, encouraging Tom to exult in his chains and to bear the worst with a glad heart. When he had gone out something began to creep upon the stage, a huge, black form, with quivering wings and enormous extended and gaping bill. It was difficult to believe that in the heart of that monstrous and hideous shape was the mild Fred. Baby had never seen Fred dressed in character as the Vulture, though he had witnesses the manufacture of the gigantic plumage. The sight terrified him beyond belief. He filled the air with frantic screams as he saw the unearthly horror advance upon his beloved father. Tom thought of nothing now but of his little one's distress, and he struggled in real earnest to get away from his rock that he might comfort Baby. Step by step he dragged the rock toward the right, while the Vulture, seeing his prey about to escape, hastened its movements, at the same time uttering hoarse "caws!" The race between the Vulture and the beetling crag terminated the play. The curtain should have descended just as the Vulture was plunging in its bill after the liver of Prometheus; but since Baby had moved the solid rock, it was thought best to draw the curtain before the Vulture could get to its victim. There was enthusiastic applause from the audience, after which Jack's voice announced eagerly, "Now for the Great Surprise!"

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Since Antoinette Thompson, of Pittstown, N. Y., wrote, saying my picture in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST did not seem jolly enough, I have had another picture taken which is presented herewith. It is the best picture of me that has been taken for a long time. That man standing on the front steps with such an unconscious, accidental air—that is not I. He is another man, though related. In fact, he is my father, Dr. J. W. Ellis. I am in the background, where my features fade away gracefully into the exquisite tints of the general composition. I am seated, you will observe, at the large cottage window in the front hall, downstairs. I have drawn aside the lace curtains and am now peering forth. That is a smile that you see on my face. The little white spots are twinkles. They are in my eyes. All in all, it is a satisfactory likeness, yet not too pronounced to be objectionable. Anybody who stands for church federation can heartily commend this picture, and those conscientiously opposed to church federation can have nothing in the world to object to in my likeness as presented above. Incidentally, it may prove interesting to say that the building that surrounds my face at the window, is the house we built for Felix to live in. He is very happy here, except at the time pictures are taken. Then, he prefers to prowl in the back yard and scale the trees to get away. That is why he is not presented standing on his hindlegs on one of the stone pillars, with a mouse in his mouth. And here is a note from A Friend, Stockton, Mo.: "I am interested in the Advance Society work, and send $1 for an orphan Charlie, and $1 for our dear missionary, Drusie. May this work long continue." And here is one from Mrs. S. W. Shryock, from a mighty good town, Moberly, Mo.: "I have been thinking for some time that I must send you my mite for our Drusie and dear little Charlie. I read the Av. S. letters and story almost the first thing every week, and enjoy them so much. I see where you speak of contributions coming in slowly, so it is a good time to send now. Divide this dollar between Drusie and Charlie. I wish I could make it 10 to 15, but I can not. I pray that God's richest blessings may ever rest on them, and on his noble work." (Who knows but such a heartfelt prayer may make that dollar of more value than $15 without a prayer? I believe that kind of thing. I'm just that way.

Somebody may smile and say, as for him, give him the $15! He may say that money is what is needed to feed and clothe our orphan and support our missionary, that prayers cannot feed and house them. That is the mistake so many make. They fail to appreciate the fact that our prayers are going to be answered. Consider the nature of our prayers; we are asking God to help us take care of a little boy with one leg who has no parents and no home. We are asking him to help us keep supported a young girl in far-away China—why? that she may tell the heathen that the Son of God was slain to give them Christian life. Do you think God will not hear prayers such as these? I went to the post office three days ago, and had it not been for the prayers offered for the Advance Society work, I do not believe I should ever have received this letter from Mrs. David Jay, of Blakesburg, Ia.: "I inclose a money order for the Charlie Educational Fund. I raised money by sending his photo and letter, and also a letter from the Matron of the Christian Orphan Home, St. Louis; I mailed them to friends of mine, with appeal for help. I am confined to my bed and have been for nearly a year, but am glad I could do something for Charlie. The names of the donors are, J. B. Mowery, Ottumwa, Ia., $10; David Jay and Family, Blakesburg, Ia., $10; Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Abernattry, $2; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. La Follette, $2; Mrs. Wm. Day, $1. Total, $25." That takes our orphan's Educational Fund at a big bound, up to $75.75. Of course you understand that the new crutches we just paid for, was not out of his Educational Fund, but a small expense fund we had collected for him, before the educational idea was thought out. It begins to look as if Charile might get a business education, after all! Of course the big expense is going to be his board, and he ought not to be in the Orphan Home after this summer, for he has finished the school course there, and the Home does not keep children his age. What we will do, I don't know. I will write to the Orphan Home this very day and find out if they have any plan. In the meantime are you all keeping the Advance Society rules and keeping down the weeds in your minds? This is growing weather!

Our missionary Drusie has something for us this week: "Your letter dated two months ago, with check for $5, arrived at 10 this morning. It is now almost noon and I am taking a few minutes to answer. I must write more frequently to homeland friends, even if I must give up a meal, or stay up at night—perhaps I may be able to get this written before dinner bell rings, so don't feel badly about it. The homeland papers are ful of rumors of trouble over here. Let me assure you that I am safe and well. Our province seems quiet, and so far, the people have been friendly. The ruler of this province, Yuan Shih K'ai, protected refugees during the Boxer trouble. The Av. S. drafts and checks have always reached me each month, except those two months, when you had no offering to send. It seems strange for you to express interest in what a missionary eats and wears, and such things. Yet I was that way before I saw these heathen. But now—oh! these souls seem the only realities of life. They crowd out all else. Souls! souls! souls! going to a Christless grave by the thousands and no one to tell them of Jesus! Do you realize that hundreds, yes, thousands of these Chinese have not so much as heard the name of Jesus? Oh Lord, send forth laborers! I was at our mission farm last week. All the trees were green and everything seemed singing a carol to springtime. The sixty in our boys' school came marching two by two and formed in lines on the veranda of Cliff House and sang for us, their little faces just beaming, 'I Am So Glad,' 'Jesus Loves Me, This I Know,' 'Precious Name,' 'Hallelujah, Thine the Glory,' and 'Hallelujah Amen, Amen, Amen,' I wish you could have heard them! Did I ever write you about my 'home' here? Our houses are built in rows, 8 to 10 rooms in a row, side by side, with a little veranda or elevated walk in front. Each room has a back and front window and a front door. My 'home' consists of one room, well-lighted—a cozy, comfortable place to rest after a long day's work. While the homeland people might consider it a very plain, common sort of room, I sometimes feel condemned for being even thus comfortable when I see the wretched, bare, dirty ones of these my poor, lost Chinese sisters. Oh, they have so little to make home! A screen divides my room into two parts. In the 'back room' is my stove, table, chair, washstand and safe for dishes, etc. By the window is my flower stand where grow some geraniums, carnations, a cactus from Honolulu, a Chinese lily and some pansies. My heart has been quite touched by some pressed flowers from Old Kentucky sent in friends' letters. I have mounted them on cards But to continue: In my 'front room' is my sofa, combination desk-bookcase-dresser, made by a Chinese carpenter according to my plan, a small table and a chair. On the wall are my favorite mottoes, several Perry pictures and photographs of friends. If those friends only knew what a blessing it is to see the likeness of their dear faces! But I am late to dinner. With kindest regards to each of the Av. S. friends, and asking their earnest prayers," (God bless Drusie Malott!) "I remain faithfully yours." We have used up our space—but don't forget that our orphan boy ought to have a vacation away from hot, crowded, breathless St. Louis. Has any one a suggestion of help?I am sending Drusie another $5 today, thanks to your care for her. In the meantime, young people are joining the Av. S. to keep up in poetry, history, etc. I have some interesting letters from the new-comers to give you in two weeks. Strawberries are now two boxes for a nickel. Ha!

The Earth to be Weighed.

American scientists are planning to weigh the earth. Pendulums are to be swung at the apex of the great pyramid of Egypt, and in the chambers at its center and base. The comparison of their times of swing shows how heavy the entire earth is, compared with the weight of the pyramid. Fifty years ago a test was made to find out the weight of the globe, pendulums being swung at the top and bottom of a coal pit. As it was known how much the coal taken out weighed, the weight of the earth became a matter of arithmetic. The present experiment will be much more accurately conducted.

The Strawberry Fairies.

BY R. F. KNAPP.

Fay was very fond of strawberries, and would often go into the fields where they grew wild, and, selecting a spot where they grew thickest, would lie down on the soft grass and eat her fill. It was a bright morning in June, and Fay was quite hungry, so she ran out to the field which was always thick with strawberries, and lay down in the tall grass.

Just as she reached out her hand for an immensely large and juicy looking berry, she heard a rustle, and at the same time saw that the strawberry was moving. As it came closer she discovered that it had arms and legs and a very queer looking little face. Indeed, it looked so much like Fay's little eggshell brownies that were on her dressing table at home that she almost laughed aloud. As she looked around her, she saw that the whole field was full of strawberry fairies. but her attention was soon drawn back to the one near her, for he spoke to her.

"You are the girl that lives in that big house, aren't you?" he said. Fay nodded, and he continued: "Yes, I thought so; you come out here every day to eat us up, and if you keep on there won't be one of us left at the end of the week. Now, honestly, don't you think you've been a little greedy?"

Fay looked ashamed, and after several minutes nodded her head again.

"Yes, you have," said the Berry, emphatically. "And now if you don't stop"—and he looked at her sharply—"you will have to be punished."

Fay was quite frightened, but thought that such a little fellow could not hurt her very much, after all, so she finally asked, "And how will I be punished?"

"If you eat too many of us we will make you sick."

"How can you do that?"

"Oh, we have a way of making people sick when they are greedy and eat too many of us."

"You can't make me sick," said Fay, defiantly, and straightway she began to catch the little fellows and pop them into her mouth. It seemed as though they tasted better than ever, and she kept on eating them until finally she began to have a very bad pain in her stomach. It grew so much worse that she begged the little fairy with whom she had been talking to stop the pain.

"That I can not do," he said, "You should have asked those that you were eating, for they are the ones that make the pain, and they will not stop until they please."

"Oh, oh, oh! Do, please, send for a doctor, or do something, quick," moaned Fay.

"All right. I'll call in our doctor"; and away ran the little fellow as fast as his short legs would carry him. He soon returned with another little strawberry man, who was evidently a doctor. He carried a tiny case of medicines, and almost before Fay realized what he was doing he had placed several tiny white pills on a violet leaf beside her and told her to take them all. She began to eat them, and found that they tasted just like sugar. They had no sooner reached her stomach than the pain stopped, and she began to thank the doctor in the most polite words she could think of, for she had no money with her.

"I never take any pay," he said "except a lock of my patient's hair"; and straightway he produced a pair of very small shears and snipped off the end of a curl.

"Thank you, thank you," he said, in a shrill little voice; and then, all at once, Fay heard her name called out from the back porch, and she jumped up and rubbed her eyes and ran very quickly home.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

Accepting the Inevitable.

"Improve the bad, and, if you can't, let it drop." This is the secret of happiness. The greatest men of earth are those who have acted on this principle—wasted no energy in lamentation and moaning over the unavoidable and inevitable, but, accepting what could not be helped, devoted their time and strength to the work that lay within their power.

Brother Dowling's Bible School Lesson Helps have long enjoyed public favor, but never so fully as now. They cost no more than inferior kinds. Send for samples.

This Company is excluding thousands of dollars' worth of advertising unblushingly carried by its contemporaries. This should be noted by those considering which religious paper to introduce or continue in their homes.

An appropriately framed picture of the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST should grace every church library, and will be an inspiration to Bible research and Christian zeal in every study where hung. This will be sent to all remitting $3 for a renewal and a new subscription.

Recently Congressmen Champ Clark, of Missouri, and W. H. Graham, of Pennsylvania, sent their renewals to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and last week Judge Webber, representing the Elyria (Ohio) district, enrolled his name on our list. Our confidence in the probity and capability of our national assembly is constantly increasing.

A practical application of the love thousands have for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST would soon give it the largest circulation of any church paper in America. In these days a mere expression of preference to a group of 20 does not effect as much as personally soliciting and securing five subscriptions. Many are giving this practical proof of love and confidence, and the results are gratifying.

Scores of new subscriptions were received last week. Among the larger lists we note 29 from Danville, Ill. (J. H. Smart, minister); 10 from Palestine, Ill. (G. S. McGaughey, minister); 20 from Terre Haute, Ind. (W. T. Sellers, minister); 21 were given the general superintendent at the Ohio state convention; 4 from Albion, Ill. (C. C. Garrigues, minister); 9 from Kansas City, Mo. (Frank L. Bowen, minister); 3 from Albion. Wash. (C. F. Sanderson, minister); 3 from New Windsor, Colo. (E. J. Harlow, minister). Grateful for these increased opportunities for service, we press on.

For Mothers.

Children need models more than criticism.

To bring up a child in the way he should go, travel that way yourself.

The sooner you get a child to be a law unto himself, the sooner you will make a man of him.

We can never check what is evil in the young unless we cherish what is good in them.

Stories first heard at a mother's knee are never wholly forgotten, a little spring that never dries up in our journey through scorching years.

Line upon line, precept upon precept, we must have in a home. But we must also have serenity, peace and the absence of petty fault-finding, if a home is to be a nursery fit for heaven's growing plants.

There are no men nor women, however poor they may be, but have it in their power by the grace of God to leave behind them the grandest thing on earth —character; and their children might rise up after them and thank God that their mother was a pious woman, or their father a pious man.—D. McLeod.

How Would You Like It?

How would you like to be your own horse? asks the "Michigan Christian Advocate. Would you work yourself six or seven hours without water when the temperature is in the 90's? Would you let the head of a rivet stand twisted in the harness till it tore the skin off? Would you put a bridle on yourself that had a loose blinder which flapped you in the eye every time you made a step? Would you tie yourself up with a lazy or slow horse which made you pull more than half the load? Would you give yourself water out of a slimy box or a mudhole in the creek where the pigs and poultry bathe? Would you feed yourself dry corn seven days in a week, and hay which smelled of rats, in a manger in which the hens roost? Would you stand yourself at feeding time ankle deep in your own excrement, to fight a million flies bred in your own filth? What would you do if you were your own horse?

Lincoln's Address at Gettysburg.

"Four-score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to aid or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here; but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be dedicated here to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

What Is the Time?

Just now you looked at your watch. Some one saw you and asked you the time. You could not tell and had to look again in order to state the minute. When you first looked you probably noted the hour, but not the exact minute. You glanced at your watch the first time in a general way, and in a negative state of mind, merely to observe that the hour you had in mind for some action had not passed, or that you had so much more time to spare, but you did not observe the precise time because you did not need to do so for your purpose. Your mental state was like your power of sight with which you can take things into vision in a general way or can fix your line of vision attentively and intensely upon some one spot and obtain precise knowledge of it. It would be a good habit to cultivate always to note the exact time when one glances at his watch, and be able to state it when asked. This power of attention can be developed by even a little practice until it becomes a habit that makes one well informed. Houdin, the celebrated magician, cultivated the power of comprehensive and close attention so that in going by a store window a mere glance gave him knowledge of every object in sight, and he could give the list fully and perfectly. Attention is the mother of memory and the grandmother of knowledge.—The Watchman.

INTERCOURSE WITH GOD

ABRAHAM'S persistency may teach us a lesson. If one might so say, he hangs on God's skirt like a burr. Each petition granted only encourages him to another. Six times he pleads, and God waits till he has done before he goes away; he can not leave his friend till that friend has said all his say. What a contrast the fiery fervor and unwearying pertinacity of Abraham's prayers make to the stiff formalism of the intercessions one is familiar with! The former are like the successive pulses of a volcano driving a hot lava stream before it; the latter, like the slow flow of a glacier, cold and sluggish. Is any part of our public or private worship more hopelessly formal than our prayers for others? This picture from the Old World may well shame our languid petitions, and stir us up to a holy boldness and persistence in prayer. Our Savior himself teaches that "men ought always to pray, and not to faint," and himself recommends to us a holy importunity, which he teaches us to believe is, in mysterious fashion, a power with God. He gives room for such patient continuance in prayer by sometimes delaying the apparent answer, not because he needs to be won over to bless us, but because it is good for us to draw near, and to keep near the Lord.—[From "The Book of Genesis," by Alexander McLaren.]

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Towards Pittsburg.

No little coterie of disciples can unaided make our statistics what they ought o be by 1909. No matter how great their bility, if the matter is left entirely to Brothers Garrison and Moore, Lord, Briney, Young, Faris, Berry and Nichols, or if committed solely to Helen E. Moses and Brothers Warren, Mohorter, Rains, Muckley, Wright, Ranshaw, Orcutt and Henry, no matter how earnestly they prosecute their missions, the result will be an overwhelming disappointment. Brother Lowe, of Kansas, has the truer scent of victory. It can only be attained by the help of all these brethren above named in conjunction with all of our state corresponding secretaries in combination with every man and woman they can possibly enlist. This inspiring every disciple with a mind to work will multiply our strength and the good we shall have accomplished not merely by arithmetical but by geometrical ratio. Read the letter of this efficient Kansas secretary.

Kansas in Line for Nineteen Nine.

BY W. S. LOWE.

Since the days when Coranado marched from the City of Mexico at the head of 300 Spanish cavaliers, and a thousand Indians for the fabled land of Quivera, in which was supposed to be found that city of fabulous wealth, Cibola, where he confidently expected to live in houses of silver, drink from vessels of gold and take possession of the country in the name of the King of Spain, Kansas, the land of sunshine and shadow, of story and song, has been the cynosure of all eyes. Carved out of what was known as "the Great American Desert," and containing within its borders the location of the fabled city of gold, she has attracted the hunter, the adventurer, the speculator, the husbandman and the capitalist. And the "city of gold" has been found, though not made ready to hand. From out the bosom of these rolling plains and from beneath the surface of these flinty hills a stream of wealth has flowed, which, if transformed into the shining metal, would build a city of gold that would dazzle the eyes of a Coronado, and delight the fancy of a Cortez.

The Kansas of to-day is an empire of thrift and industry. Her 116 banks contain on deposit over $130,100,000. Her agricultural products for last year, together with the amount of livestock on January 1, amounted to over $408,000,000.

The Disciples of Christ in the Sunflower State are striving to keep pace with her growing interests. The year 1908 will be the fortieth anniversary of the organized mission work of the Territory and State. To properly celebrate this event, and also to more fully and completely prepare for the coming Centennial at Pittsburg in 1909, the last state convention adopted resolutions embodying the main features of the plan of the national convention, and we are now keeping these fixed constantly before the brotherhood in the Kansas "Messenger," and by frequent announcement. The general plan is as follows:

JUBILEE PREPARATIONS.

Topeka, Kan., 1908.

By June 30, 1908, we should have accomplished the following:

1. Be contributing at least $10,000 per year for Kansas Missions.
2. Have a creditable sum in our Permanent Fund.
3. The efficiency and facility of our Bible schools, Christian Endeavor, C. W. B. M. and Junior Societies greatly increased.
4. The Bible Chair Hall completed, equipped and paid for.
5. All our homeless congregations housed.
6. All church debts paid.
7. All pastorless churches supplied with ministers.
8. An immense gathering of Kansas disciples in Topeka, rejoicing and praising the Lord, and planning for still greater achievements for the Centennial convention at Pittsburg in 1909.

Our State Board is keeping the pressure on without intermission. The state evangelists and other state workers are having splendid success. Already we have raised more money for state missions in nine months than we ever did in twelve before. New congregations are being formed and the weak ones are being cared for as fast as our means will permit. In addition to this we are planning a large evangelistic campaign for the month of August. A number of preachers have volunteered for this work.

We are yours for the glory of God and the salvation of men.

Kansas is in line for nineteen nine.

Centennial Foundation Workers.

Your paper gives me so much pleasure. and I always feel better after reading it.—Mrs. Elizabeth Lubden, Pemberton, N. J.

There is nothing too good for me to do for The Christian-Evangelist these days. —E. E. Crawford, minister, Albuquerque, N. M.

The Christian-Evangelist grows in strength continually. It is a great and representative paper and breathes a broad and catholic and loving spirit.—J. P. Lichtenberger, minister.

Enclosed please find money for The Christian-Evangelist according to order sheet. It is my opinion that The Christian-Evangelist is the best religious paper published.—L. S. Ridenour, minister.

I was sorry to see you leave the Benevolent Association, but glad you are connected with The Christian-Evangelist—a paper in which we, as a people, ought to take great pride.—C. R. Sine, minister.

I want to be known among those who love Brother Garrison. I know him personally, but my affection is not based on personal grounds alone. The Christian-Evangelist shares with him this feeling. May heaven bless them both.—Dan Trundle, minister, Bisbee, Ariz.

Enclosed find $1.50 to apply on my subscription. Thanks for sending the paper beyond the time for which I had paid. We could not keep house without the dear old Christian-Evangelist, and your resolute stand on federation makes its doubly dear to us.—Mrs. F. W. Wallace.

Enclosed find money and the name of one to whom I am sending The Christian-Evangelist. She is a poor sister whose husband drinks. I am willing to do all I can for The Christian-Evangelist for the good it will do its readers and the love I have for the paper.—Lelia N. Crandall.

I send you two new subscriptions for The Christian-Evangelist. The church at Woodson will make a contribution soon for the establishment of that church at Manchester, N. H. My wife and I think The Christian-Evangelist is the best paper in the brotherhood.—D. S. McDonald, Woodson, Texas.

If you are not too tired of words of approval on the federation matter, please accept my thanks for your attitude and for the Christian forbearance and courtesy of The Christian-Evangelist. The sky is brighter and when hate and greed have had their say, the teachings of Jesus and his prayer for unity will have their part in the victory of a united church and a saved world.—J. N. Crutcher, minister.

I am willing to do all I can to get new subscribers for The Christian-Evangelist here. Let me add a word of hearty commendation of the truly noble tone and carriage of The Christian-Evangelist through all the trouble about federation. I never was prouder of The Christian-Evangelist in all my life before, and that is saying something. I thought it would be a sin not to write and tell a certain Editor I loved him for the enemies he has made, and for the far more than ordinary measure of the spirit of tolerance, forbearance and generosity he has displayed, which is to many of us commonplace readers like a whiff of the heavenly breezes. Be assured that a paper which combines large-minded liberality which the true Spirit of Christ engenders, and at the same time ring true in these days of doubt and difficulty to the Word of God, and the plea for which we stand, will, ave must, sooner or later gain respect and friendship for the world and the brotherhood stands in urgent need of just that kind of a paper and there is discernment enough in our brotherhood to see that before long.—John Williams, minister.

Current Events

Presbyterian Union.

The consummation of the union between the Presbyterian and Cumberland Presbyterian churches is a great event in current religious history. It is easy enough to divide. It is not so easy to unite. Arrogance of opinion, intolerance of dissent, almost any of the more unpleasant phenomena of egoism which are usually dignified by the name of conscience—these all make for division. But reunion demands the ripest of the Christian virtues and the richest of the Christian graces. At the Presbyterian General Assembly at Des Moines, the motion for reunion was passed with great enthusiasm, with only two dissenting votes. The Cumberland Presbyterian Assembly at Decatur, Ill., took similar action by a very large majority, but against the votes of 106 delegates. The two assemblies exchanged ratifications by telegraph and the union was declared to be in effect. The Cumberland assembly declared all its offices vacant and adjourned sine die. The 106 delegates who opposed the union and would not permit the dear old denomination to become a "disappearing brotherhood" even in the interest of Christian union and the advancement of the church universal, organized a rump convention, elected officers to the places which had been declared vacant and appointed a legal committee to take the necessary steps to get possession of the books, records, and if possible the property now held in the name of the Presbyterian Church. Possibly we shall have another case like that of the "Wee Frees" of Scotland, the residue of persistent separatists who refused to consent to the recent Presbyterian union in Scotland, and by legal process obtained possession of more church property than they possibly use. But at any rate the Presbyterians on both sides of the Atlantic are setting the rest of the world a good example in the matter of Christian union. While the rest of us are mostly talking about it and wishing for it, they are uniting.

The Rebate Prosecutions.

The Government has been prosecuting a case in the Federal Court at Kansas City for alleged conspiracy to grant freight rebates. The defendants were Thomas, a freight broker; Taggart, his clerk, and Crosby, general traffic manager of the Burlington railroad. The case has issued in the acquittal of the first mentioned and the conviction of the other two. The interesting feature of the case was the disclosure of the subterfuges which are resorted to in covering up the practice of giving rebates, and the willingness of both railroads and large shippers to avail themselves of fictions which are perfectly transparent except for purposes of legal evidence. It seems that shippers were in the habit of receiving money from unknown sources and for unknown reasons, but it never occurred to them to make inquiries. A high officer in a great wholesale dry-goods firm testified that an unknown man came into his office one day and left with him a package containing between $400 and $500. He had never seen the man before or since, could not identify him now, did not know who sent him, did not know why the money was sent. His firm had received about $10,000 in this mysterious way within the last five or six years. Sometimes the money came by mail or express, sometimes by unknown messengers. Sometimes bunches of cash came "from Thomas's office," and then it was taken for granted that the amount represented collections from the railroad on claims for shortage, damage, or errors in classification. Mr. Thomas, who was employed by this firm and several others to look after their freight business with the railroads, seems to have had a singularly informal method of making his reports, if this is a fair sample. The man in the street assumes with entire confidence that, when a keen business man permits money to float into his office in this mystetrious way and allows his agents to make their reports in such vague fashion, the method must cover some illicit transaction. Perhaps this is not legal evidence, but it seems to us as good as some of the circumstantial evidence that has been used in convicting men of theft or even of murder.

Interference at Panama.

There is to be a general election in the republic of Panama. Fearing riots which will endanger American interests in the canal zone, the President has ordered a cruiser to the scene of the probable disturbance and marines will be landed. The municipal council of the city of Panama has made a formal request for American intervention to insure a peaceful and fair election, alleging that the administration intends to use violence to control all doubtful districts. The municipal council of the city of Colon has issued a counter manifesto protesting against American interference, and especially against the act of the city of Panama, in usurping the prerogative of inviting in a foreign power. Senator Morgan, of Alabama, declared in the Senate that no member of that body would dare to introduce a resolution authorizing the President to do what he has done without authorization. But we are getting so accustomed to hearing the President accused of usurping power that the charge has ceased to make much impression. If the intervention in Panama is simply in the interest of a fair election, it is, of course, an unwarrantable interference with the inalienable right of any commonwealth to conduct its elections unfairly. Some of our own states habitually have unfair elections, but the federal government lets them alone. Fifteen years ago the proposal to establish federal control of elections was so bitterly opposed that it was finally dropped. If our government does not undertake to manage our own elections in the interest of fairness, it certainly ought not to undertake that function for any foreign country. But if election riots in Denver, for example, should endanger the federal building, the government would be justified in calling out troops, not to insure a fair election, but to protect its own property. And it may do the same in Panama.

Meat Inspection.

The beef inspection bill which was introduced in the Senate by Mr. Beveridge passed that body as a rider to the agricultural appropriation bill, and is now pending before the House, is one of the most important pieces of legislation of the present Congress. It is scarcely, if at all, second in importance to the railroad rate bill. If we had to choose, most of us would rather be robbed than poisoned. The bill is the most thorough-going meat inspection measure that has ever been proposed. It is an administration measure, and is said to be in large part the outcome of the President's reading Upton Sinclair's packing-house novel, "The Jungle." The accusations there brought against the Chicago packers have already been given in outline on this page. After reading the book the President appointed a special and confidential agent to investigate. This was Mr. Neill, commissioner of labor. The report confirms many of the charges that have been made. A delegation of Illinois senators and representatives, including Senator Cullom and Speaker Cannon, called on the President recently to protest against the bill in the interest of their packing-house constituents. He showed them parts of the report and converted them from opposition to advocacy of the bill.

Senator Burton.

Senator Burton, of Kansas, has again been convicted, on his second trial, of unlawfully receiving fees to represent the Rialto Grain Company in a controversy with the post office department, while at the same time he was serving as United States senator. Burton claims that he had no criminal intent, and did not even know of the existence of the law against which his conduct was an offense. But one of the most fundamental principles of law (after the axiom that "no man can know the law") is that "ignorance of the law excuses no man." Besides, there are some improprieties so gross and palpable that they would be almost criminal even if there were no law against them. A United States senator, by virtue of his office, enjoys a certain influence and prestige in all the departments of government. For one to make merchandise of that official influence and receive pay for exercising it in behalf of a private concern (even if it had not happened to be a fraudulent concern), is such an obvious indelicacy that no man who could commit it is worthy of public office. Besides, it does happen to be also an unlawful and criminal act. Burton has resigned, however, and Gov. Hoch has appointed Foster Dwight Coburn to succeed him.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

IV. The Protestant Era—Period of Reunion.

9. Forces Making for Union.

What influences have been at work to bring about this remarkable change in sentiment in the religious world on the subject of Christian union? Effects are not produced without causes, and an intelligent knowledge of these causes helps us to understand the nature of the effects and to forecast with considerable certainty other results of a similar character.

1. First of all, we can not doubt that the religious movement inaugurated by the Campbells and Barton W. Stone in the first decade of the last century, which had for its specific aim the promotion of Christian union, has been one of the most important factors in producing the change to which we have referred. It would, indeed, be very strange if this were not the case. Here were men of learning, of piety, of preeminent ability, and of commanding influence, devoting their lives to this holy cause. They have had a line of noble successors, who, for nearly a century, in pulpit and periodical, through books and pamphlets, have advocated, without wavering, the necessity of Christian union in order to the conversion of the world. They have emphasized the evils of division among the people of God, and have pointed out what seemed to them a practicable basis of union by a return to the original foundation on which the Church was built and by loyal adherence to the simple teaching of Christ and his apostles in relation to church membership and Christian life. Whatever may be thought about the influence which this plea has exerted, there can be no question in any candid, thoughtful mind, that the changes which have come about in religious sentiment have been in the direction of this plea, not only as regards the evils of division and the necessity of union, but also in respect to the method of union, which is not to be on any authorized statement of doctrine, no matter how irenic, but on Jesus Christ himself, with large liberality and charity for all differences in theological opinions and doctrinal inferences. The exaltation of Christ as the center of unity and a corresponding decrease of authority in doctrinal creeds, has kept pace steadily with the growth of Christian union sentiment, and is one of the most marked characteristics of the religious thinking of our time. It is a matter of small concern to us, as reformers, whether proper credit be given to the movement we represent for its influence in behalf of Christian union if only the principles for which we have contended find their way to acceptance and Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers be fulfilled.

2. The revival of Bible study in connection with the subject of historical criticism, and the better knowledge of the Scriptures which has resulted from this agitation, we can not doubt, must be set down as one of the contributing causes to the growing sentiment in favor of Christian union. Any such study of the Bible, in the light of its proper divisions and of its dispensational lines, and with a clear recognition of the progressive character of revelation, advancing from the twilight of patriarchal times to the glorious sunlight of the Christian age, Jesus Christ is seen in his true perspective, and his divine personality looms up far above patriarchs, prophets and apostles, as the supreme and sole object of Christian faith, and the only center around which can be rallied the scattered forces of a divided Church.

3. Another mighty influence making for union has been that spiritual development within the Church which inevitably leads away from narrowness and bigotry toward larger and more catholic views. Our divisions, as Paul tells us, have their origin in our carnality, and just as the Church grows more spiritual will it become more united. Union among Christians can only follow a close and vital union with Jesus Christ; that is one reason why we can not force Christian union; it must grow. We can not get closer to Christ without getting closer to each other. The unity for which Christ prayed is the unity of the Spirit, and it is only as that Spirit dominates the lives of Christians that they can be one. Therefore all movements looking toward deepening the spiritual life of the Church are movements in behalf of Christian union.

4. Through a better knowledge of the condition of the world and the mission of the Church, Christian people are coming to a clearer apprehension of the great tasks which lie before the Church in the evangelization and Christianization of the world. Three-fifths of all the people which live upon the globe are yet in pagan darkness. To them the Gospel must be sent. And then there is the cleansing of our own Christian civilization of its abominations and the lifting up of a higher standard of morals in our social, political and industrial life. As the Church has gained a clearer vision of these great tasks before it, it has realized more and more the necessity of united effort and the sinfulness of wasting our strength, time and resources in building up denominational walls and quibbling over our theological differences, while so large a part of the world is yet without God and without hope, knowing nothing of Christ and his great salvation.

5. The world is becoming more and more united. Nations are forming alliances in the interests of peace and civilization. The whole world is coming to feel the sense of a common brotherhood. The poet's dream of the "Parliament of Man" approaches realization. This spirit of unity is affecting the Church. A united world demands a united Church.

6. The various interdenominational organizations, to which reference has already been made, are not only expressions of a union sentiment already existing, but they are mighty factors in deepening that sentiment and in removing obstacles out of the way of union. There is no greater foe to union than isolation and there is no more important method of promoting union than the free intermingling of religious people, and especially in their working together for common ends and aims. To know each other, and to give each other credit for honesty of purpose, sincerity of faith, and the reality of Christian character, is to go far in the direction of realizing the oneness for which the Master prayed.

These are some of the various factors which, under God, have wrought this change of sentiment in the Church as respects the unity of Christians, and which are still working for the more perfect realization of that divine ideal.

Is It a Stumbling-block to the Weak?

We are in receipt of a letter from a reader in Kansas who states his objection to the position of The Christian-Evangelist with such evident sincerity that we feel it deserves our consideration. Besides, it is a phase of the subject that has not been before presented, and for that reason we have asked the writer to permit us to use a portion of his letter, which was not intended for publication, to set forth his position. He says:

> "We have weak-kneed Christians who are not able to stand alone, who are easily influenced by their associates; we have ignorant or untaught members who do not know what we hold to and teach and who do not know the difference between ourselves and other religious people; we have members who are ambitious socially, and others who are commercially ambitious. To the extent that The Christian-Evangelist teaches that all of the more commonly known Protestant bodies are Christian churches, and that we should regard them as allies, and not as enemies, and to the extent these views are known out among the mass of our people, just to that extent is it making it easy for these different classes of members to break away from us and join the body of people that will help them to gratify their different ambitions, or to yield to the solicitations of a denominational friend who says, 'It does not make any difference what church one belongs to, as we are all Christians anyway!' "

Now, we can readily understand how one can look at this question from that point of view and be very honest in his objection to our position. We beg this good brother, and others who may sympathize with his feeling, however, to consider a few things that may be said on the other side. In the first place, it may be said that our cause is not losing very much in giving up members who are actuated by so low motives as social and commercial advantage in deciding their church relationship. In the second place, if our preachers and Sunday-school teachers were doing their duty there would not be growing up a class of members who do not know the difference between our religious position and that of others. But, after all, the chief thing to be said is that if the position we have taken be the truth it can work no disadvantage to any cause that seeks only the truth. It is a dangerous position to take that we must conceal any truth or fact in order to hold our membership. If our churches are made up to any great extent of people who are not with us, because they are attached to the principles which we hold and believe, heart and soul, but rather because they think there are no Christians elsewhere and no churches which Christ regards as his besides our own, they should be taught to love our cause for its truths, for its liberty, for its sublime aim. We do not believe this class is very large, however. We think the great body of our membership is with us from conviction, and that they would rejoice in the assurance that other religious bodies are approximating, steadily, the New Testament ideal and are worthy to be called Christian.

We all know of religious journals, which, in the past, have sought to build up and maintain their circulation by inculcating the idea in the minds of their readers that theirs is the only religious journal that is true to the faith. "Help us save the ark! Now is the time to subscribe." Any religious journal, or any religious movement, that must depend for its future growth on its claim of having a monopoly of truth or of loyalty, is building on a sandy foundation. Rather let us show these weak and wavering members that we have been called of God to do a great and needed work of reform in calling the Christian world back to simple New Testament Christianity, and healing our unhappy divisions, and that to turn away from this cause is to prove unfaithful to a sacred trust.

And now, having said this, let us say that we allow no man in our ranks to excel us in our appreciation of, and love for, the cause which we plead. We believe in its principles thoroughly, and have devoted a lifetime to their propagation and defense. We believe it is the plea for the times in which we live, and that it should be pushed with all the power and energy which we can command. In our judgment there is perfect harmony between the most steadfast loyalty to our own position and thorough devotion to it, and the free and frank recognition of the Christian life and work of our religious neighbors. We have never loved our cause so well as since the time we came to see that it gives us liberty to appreciate all good and all truth, everywhere, and that its success does not depend upon the overthrow of others who are seeking to accomplish God's work in the world, but rather upon their approximation, more and more, to that divine ideal which we also are seeking to realize. Let us not cherish for a moment the fear that our cause can be weakened by any truth. It is error that weakens, and the error that we alone are the channel through which God purposes to convert and bless the world is a source of great weakness and, to the extent that it prevails, it is a bar to our success in accomplishing our mission in the world.

Our Latest Book.

The latest book from the press of the Christian Publishing Company is Monser's "The Literature of the Disciples." It is a handsome little volume of 121 pp. If one wishes a bird's eye view of our literature, here it is—the best resume of what has been written among us that has ever been printed. It is the work of an artist, who, with a few deft touches of his brush, gives us a picture of a book or an author and passes on to deal with underlying principles and truths. The chapters are as follows:

I. Initiation of the Literature.
II. Formation of the Literature.
III. Classification of the Literature.
IV. Contrast Between Present and Past Literature.
V. Defects of the Literature.
VI. Readjustment of Literature.
VII. Outlook for Our Literature.

Take this brief extract from the chapter on "Formation of the Literature," as a sample of the author's style and spirit:

"The merit of our earliest literature was its passion. It throbbed like the heart of a living being. In this it contrasted with the musty books of that day. These were more like dried specimens, tabulated and exhibited in glass cases. Ours had motive and vitality. It possessed the springiness of buoyant youth. It was loosened from the shrunken roots of an effete theology and put abroad upon its individual power and right. What a mission it had! About it were myriads of numb souls, to be roused to the consciousness of a higher life. The work was rare and difficult. Many must be led, step by step, like babes. There would be shifting phases of hope and fear. The broadening influence of the Gospel, at times, elated, and then, as theology seemed to escape it, it alarmed. Next came the claim for union. Politically, this was welcome. But union in religious affairs was looked upon as a dangerous novelty, even if it were to be desired. Who had ever heard of such a thing? There might be compensations, but would they be equivalent to the losses? Where our writings first touched the mind the painfulness of the darkness asserted itself. But there was mystery and pain coming also with the excess of light. As the great principles of Gospel truth gained greater hold, much of this was assuaged. Truth brought with it its accompanying blessings. Chief of all was reality. The unseen was no longer filled with shadows. Instead, there was the sense of security; finding its home and center in a living and obedient faith."

Notes and Comments.

In a meeting in the South one of our evangelists, on entering the city to begin his work, found several of the local churches preparing to hold rival meetings. He visited their ministers' meeting and proposed a simultaneous campaign, each church holding a meeting in its own house at night, but meeting together at some hour of the day in a business men's prayer-meeting. The other churches in that section were too narrow to enter into the plan, though it was urged at a second ministerial meeting. They went on with their rival meetings, leaving our evangelist to hold the union meeting, and the people of the city rallied in large numbers to his preaching, and splendid results followed, in spite of the fact that our own local church was not at first in sympathy with the evangelist's plan. If there is any balking in union or simultaneous meetings, let it be done by those not pleading for unity. Co-operation with other local churches, on a basis of perfect equality, is not always practicable, but let the fault be theirs, not ours.

In his address before the Indianapolis Congress Dr. H. F. Colby (Baptist), as reported in our last week's issue, said: "A Christian's creed is really what he understands the Bible to teach." This, as we pointed out in the discussion of this paper, is not the sense in which Disciples use the word creed. We understand the Bible to teach many things that do not enter into a Christian's creed. The creed is the foundation, or fundamental truth, on which Christianity rests. Peter's confession of Christ, for instance, on which Jesus said he would build his church, is the creed of Christianity. A child and a philosopher, if Christians, hold the same creed, but their understanding of what the Bible teaches differ widely. That is, they differ in knowledge, but agree in faith. If this point could be cleared up it would help to remove one source of misunderstanding between Baptists and Disciples.

A brother wishes still to know, if federation means co-operation, what we can do more in that line than we are doing. It can hardly be claimed that we are doing all that can be done and ought to be done in the way of systematic and united action in putting down the saloon, closing up the gambling hells, relieving the needs of the poor, and carrying the simple Gospel message to the destitute regions of our great cities. Besides all that local work, there is the great quadrennial council meeting to discuss ways and means of more perfectly fulfilling Christ's prayer for unity, which federation provides for, and which in itself is destined to be a mighty agency for expressing the united voice of the Church on great moral and social reforms, and in promoting the onward march of the kingdom.

Editor's Easy Chair.

In the early twilight of May 30—the Nation's Decoration Day—we awoke to the deep reverberations of artillery. Were we back in the dark days of the Civil War? Were brothers still arraigned against brothers on the deadly battle-field? These confused ideas in the half-waking and half-sleeping moments, soon gave place to the glorious reality. No, the war is long past, and flowers are blooming sweetly where the turf was torn by the hoofs of the cavalry, and by the wheeling caissons of artillery. The cannonading to which we awoke was the artillery of heaven, and soon the rain was coming down upon the trees and the mown grass at Rose Hill in blessing and benediction. While the thunder was pealing and the windows rattling with its reverberations, a little two-year-old, domiciled temporarily under the Easy Chair's residential roof, covering her face, cried out, "Wain, make the old tunder go away!" It was not the rain she objected to but the accompanying thunder alarmed her. We all want the blessings of life without the disagreeable things accompanying them. We would have roses without thorns, summer without winter and harvests without toil. We would all have peace without war, but sometimes war is the shortest way to a lasting peace. Those reverberating cannon of '61 to '65, with the death and destruction which they belched forth, were terrible to those of us who lived in those trying days; but what a glorious peace and renewed brotherhood have sprung from the soil reddened by human blood! Yes, scatter the flowers over the graves of the sleeping heroes, whether they wore the blue or the gray. They laid down their lives at the call of their country, and the union which binds all sections together into one country under one flag, is stronger because cemented by their blood.

What sort of sacrifice is it going to take to bind together into one United Church the now separate and independent religious communions seeking to advance the kingdom of God? This kind of union is not going to come by force nor by the use of the weapons of carnal warfare; but it is not going to be realized without sacrifice. There are some things too sacred to be sacrificed, among which are truth and a good conscience. Happily, these are not to be sacrificed for they will be needed in a United Church. But there are some things which can be offered upon the altar of union. All bigotry and narrowness; all uncharitableness and evil surmising; all sectarian strife and hatred; all party pride which exalts sect above the kingdom of God; all provincialism which boasts of its exclusive claims; all bitterness, and misrepresentation of others—these can be given up for the sake of union. We can afford to surrender many personal preferences and individual advantages, if thereby we may present to the world a united front. But there will have to be made more costly sacrifices than these before the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for unity. In every religious body there must be men who love Christian union better than denominational popularity, and who are willing to make themselves "of no reputation" among those of their brethren who see in all union movements a menace to their partisan views and denominational pre-eminence. Will there not be those who are willing to make even this sacrifice to hasten the coming of a united Church? We believe so, and some future day, when the long-delayed union has come, loving hands will scatter flowers upon their unforgotten graves.

"Die when I may," said the great-hearted Lincoln, "I want it said of me by those who know me best, that I always plucked a thistle and planted a flower when I thought a flower would grow." Who of us would not like to have that said of us when we have finished our work and passed on? How much better world this would be to live in, if every one should adopt the plan of plucking a thistle and planting a flower wherever a flower would grow! There is a species of thistle that scatters its winged seeds on the winds and sows them everywhere to the destruction of whole fields and crops. Scandal is a thistle like that. Its seeds of evil surmisings—how rapidly they are spread abroad! Pluck it up by the roots and plant a flower of good will and appreciation, which will fill all the air with its sweet fragrance. There is the thistle of envy. When you find it growing in your heart, pluck it instantly, before it destroys your happiness and usefulness, and plant, instead thereof some flower of virtue that will sweeten your own life and that of others. There are hard, thorny thistles growing along the paths which little children's feet are treading. Pluck them up, and plant flowers instead, whose beauty and fragrance will gladden the hearts of the little ones. What a brood of evils and sorrows come from the saloon-thistle! Why should not the city, the state, the nation, pluck it up and plant instead some institution that will be a center of light and love and helpfulness? It is the mission of the church and of every individual Christian to be plucking up the thistles of sin that cover the land, and planting the flowers of virtue and goodness that will convert the earth into a new paradise.

The movement to establish a church of this Reformation in New Hampshire—the only state in the Union where we have no church—has recalled a pleasant memory in connection with the Editor's pastorate in Boston. In August, 1886, twenty years ago—we were spending a few weeks on the shore of "New Found Lake," a wild and wooded part of New Hampshire, some distance from any railroad. About fifty of us, mostly from Boston, were stopping at a hotel on the shore of this lake. One of the games organized was a shooting match, and the mark was a long, slim, heavy bottle, suspended by a string, so that it could only be broken by a center shot. When invited to join in the shooting we refused to do so until they would all acknowledge that they couldn't break the bottle. After a while, having failed, they brought us the gun and insisted on putting us to the test. By a happy accident we smashed the bottle the first shot! That was glory enough for us, and we did not care to repeat the test. When the Lord's day came the guests insisted the "shooting parson" should preach, which we did, and, so far as we know, this was the first sermon by one of "this Way" in that state. The sermon was well received, but we attributed that fact largely to our good luck in breaking the bottle! Now twenty years later we are leading an effort to plant a church in that state, and thanks to the generous offerings of a number of our business men, the money is likely to be raised. Brother Yeuell and his singers, under God, will do the rest.

From Out the Depths.

By Jessie Davis Kingsley.

'Twas only yester' morn, my heart was light as air,
And all the present seemed so joyous and so bright;
But e'er the sun had set, the blackness of despair
Had settled down and closed all things in night.

Down from that blissful state of joy and peace and light,
To be so rudely thrust to sorrow's smart,
Changed promises that once had cheered the darkest night
To quicksands for my saddened heart.

But e'er the spirit of that evil found a place,
My heart to God had wildly cried for strength;
And lo! the richest treasures of His grace
Came to my stricken soul at length.

Oh! Rock so great in all this wilderness of sin;
Oh! mighty Power that holds us safe and strong,
Could each sad heart but rest its burden there,
No need to grope in pain and darkness long.

I know that my Redeemer lives
And bears each burden with me as He bore the cross.
To every soul that cries to Him He gives
The strength to bear what e'er of pain or loss
Is sent in His wise providence, to prove
The creatures he has made to reign with Him
And cares for with divinest, tenderest love.

To Promote Christian Union

By W. Bayard Craig

One of the themes discussed at the Congress of the Disciples was "Practical Measures for the Disciples in the Promotion of Christian Union To-Day." Two papers were read; we print herewith one of them, by W. Bayard Craig, pastor of the Central Christian Church Denver, Colo.

In the progress of human events the divided hosts of Protestantism are seeking closer fellowship and some practical method for more effective co-operation in Christian work. The prayer of the Master for the unity and good fellowship of believers is troubling the conscience of sectarianism and getting itself into the hearts of intelligent Christian people in all religious bodies.

The religious body represented in this congress had its birth in the heart of a Christian man who shared the Christ yearning for the unity of Christians. It was born of the same divine spirit that inspired the seventeenth chapter of John. The program committee were not forgetful of this fact in arranging this program.

We have made loud and persistent professions of devotion to the cause of Christian union. We have done something to convince American Protestantism of the sinfulness of sectarian creeds and standards. We have done much to destroy the power of theological dogmas to perpetuate divisions. We have helped create dissatisfaction with existing conditions and a yearning for Christian fellowship. We have sown the seed of Christian union and the harvest is white around us. In the darkness of division and storms Jesus draws near to us in the union movement and many of our people are filled with fear. They are like the disciples in the boat, in the storm, in the night, on the Sea of Galilee. When Jesus appears walking on the water they do not recognize him and cry out in surprise and fright.

But the Peters have multiplied in the church. There are many to respond to the call of the Master to come to him. The panic of fear will pass with the recognition that Christ is in the movement toward a more fraternal relationship among his followers. The Spirit of Christ will calm the tumult, sanity and brotherly kindness will reassert their beneficial sway and we will move on to the fulfillment of a high destiny.

The movement represented here will be true to the spirit of the plea that gave it birth. There is a logical, relentless unfolding of the inner life of a religious movement. Its processes of development are controlled by laws as imperial in their operation as the law of gravitation. It moves on to its inevitable conclusions, to the consternation of the selfish and ignorant, as the crucifixion of our Lord moved on to the triumph of the resurrection. Folly and bigotry can hinder the progress of truth, it can not long obstruct the march. The thousand tongued clamor of the superficial multitude does not decide questions of the magnitude of Christian union or its precursor church federation. The salutary word of the wise and patient interpreter of the mind of Christ wins in the long run.

The Disciples have had remarkable success. The movement has taken on large proportions. In pride and selfishness we are tempted to become sectarian in spirit. In pride of strength and growing power it is easy for us to say to-day, as the solution of the Christian union question, let the denominations come to our position, we are doing well enough, we are on the apostolic platform, we have no concessions to make. But the love of Christ will not be satisfied with a cold hearted negative attitude toward fellow believers. The spirit of Christ demands the manifestation of fellowship and sympathy toward all who love him, demands that all practical Christian effort be put forth to heal divisions and win all Christian brothers into more fraternal cooperation. Such efforts do not demand a compromise of Christ's truth but a fulfillment of its spirit. The Christlike man or body of men will hold convictions of truth intact, but while doing so will manifest a fraternal courtesy and fellowship with all who give evidence of like fidelity. This was the spirit of Thomas Campbell, of Alexander Campbell, of Isaac Errett and of all the leaders most highly esteemed among us, and this must continue to be the spirit of any man who will in the days to come hold any high and permanent place in our history.

We are moving forward. The movement will take no backward step now. It moved forward toward liberty and enlargement when the theology of the atonement was the question of the hour; when instrumental music in the worship was up for decision; when missionary organization became imperative; when the endeavor movement was inaugurated. Can any thoughtful, spiritually minded disciple doubt the result of the present agitation in regard to federation, the next logical and inevitable step toward Christian union? All the principles involved in the "Federation" idea were involved in the "Endeavor" movement. We are committed to the fraternal recognition of the religious bodies around us. It is right that we should be. To refuse to co-operate in the spirit and purpose of the federation movement would be to stultify all our Christian union professions hitherto. We ought to be in the forefront of all movements looking toward Christian union. We can not stand aloof without dishonoring our claim to be in spiritual fellowship with the Christ.

What Can We Do in a Practical Way to Promote Christian Union?

1. Promote a revival among our own people in the interest of Christian union. We need it. The most spiritual among us need it. We ought to pray with Christ the prayer for Christian unity until its yearning burns like a fire in our bones, until the other truths of the Christian religion fall into their true relationship and perspective. The Christ love and the Christ spirit dominant in our hearts will solve this problem as nothing else can. We have been so busy with our own church activities that we have permitted the yearning for Christian union to grow cold in our hearts.

2. Show our people the dangers of formalism and Phariseeism.

Inaugurate a vigorous educational campaign. Educate our people in the appreciation of the spiritual values of the Christian religion. This demands special effort. Christians who have passed from formalism to spirituality lose the taste for clamorous propaganda. The work in the immediate vicinity of the spiritual man is usually prosperous. There is an atmosphere of peace and kindness. His friends understand him. He is reluctant to subject himself to the unsympathetic and often ignorant criticism of the formalist by parading his ideas in the public press. He does not expect to be understood by the confirmed Pharisee, who is so sure of his letter and form, who has reduced the boundless love of God to a mathematical formula, who is so fully satisfied with himself that to-day, as in the time of Jesus, controversy with him is both distasteful and discouraging. This is one reason why the formalists have matters so largely their own way in the newspaper columns, but at a time like this it becomes the duty of the spiritually minded everywhere to rally to the support of the faithful few who have never ceased to protest against the blindness and misinterpretation of Phariseeism.

Christ himself did not convert many Pharisees. He could not make them understand their need of conversion, but he delivered multitudes from their baleful influence. Educate the people. Teach the people. Show them what Phariseeism is that the brotherhood may at least escape the calamity of their leadership.
